RESOLUTION: That in the opinion of this House, nursing homes shall be included in the benefits of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

Notice of motion No. 10 by Mr. Davison:

RESOLUTION: That in the opinion of this House the government immediately extend hospital or insurance coverage to persons in chronic or convalescent hospitals or an approved nursing home, who do not require continued medical and skilled nursing care, but conditions indicate that in the opinion of a medical practitioner they cannot be returned to their own homes, or to a home for the aged.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) Resolution No. 7 standing in my name, which has just been read.

Mr. N. Davison: (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) Resolution No. 10 standing in my name, which has just been read. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose it will come as any surprise to you or to the hon. members to learn that I am once again seeking to have the scope of the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan extended to include nursing home care.

What can one think of a government which advances no argument or reason for not providing this benefit? Even though those government members who speak on this subject, speak in favour of extending our hospital insurance plan to include nursing homes, this government simply refuses to make the change. It gives no reasons for not doing so. It makes no attempt to justify its inaction—just silence. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is because there is no justification, nor is there any valid reason to deny our citizens this protection.

The need to include nursing homes in our hospital insurance plan was brought to my attention most forcibly when I had the privilege of serving on the select committee on aging, but once you become aware of a need in this segment of our society, it is surprising how this awareness reveals a similar need in other segments of our society. The need is there for anyone who has been hospitalized and who requires continued rest and care when the need for active treatment has ceased.

This is the critical period on the patient's road to complete recovery. This is the time of testing for their doctor. All his skill is of no avail if his patient is discharged from hospital and he is then denied the care and attention needed for speedy and complete recovery.

We are well aware of the pressures of overcrowding and long waiting lists for entry into hospitals which force doctors to limit the hospital stay to that period when the patient must have active treatment, if he is to survive at all. But, then the doctor faces a real problem. He must decide whether to send his patient home—and of course if there are people in the home, willing and capable of providing the patient with the needed care, there is no problem.

But in so many instances the doctor will be well aware that not only will the patient be returned to a home where there is no provision for needed attention, but many times the patient is faced with the necessity of coping with pressures and responsibilities that are difficult for a well person. The result is frequently a delayed recovery or, a relapse and so the patient must return to the hospital for active treatment.

I am sure these are the conditions to which the hon. member for Quinte (Mr. Potter), referred when he was quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail last August as saying:

Physicians lie in official reports to keep chronic patients in active-treatment hospitals because that is sometimes the only way to assure proper treatment in a province woefully lacking in chronic care hospitals—and our job is to care for the patients.

This is very true, Mr. Speaker. The doctor's position is almost untenable and I, for one, am glad I am not faced with his choice. He is forced to decide who can best survive without proper nursing care. His is the difficult decision to make whether one patient already in hospital can be released to inadequate convalescent care and survive, or at least come to less harm, than would another patient if his entry into hospital is delayed.

The doctor should be free to bend his every effort to treating his patients to the best of his ability without having to become party to rushing them through hospital without regard to their future well-being. Nor should this decision be placed on the shoulders of any other group because, Mr. Speaker, the doctor and the doctor only is aware of the individual's physical needs, his character, his likely reactions and his home conditions, all of which are factors to be considered.

As I said, I believe these are the problems to which the member for Quinte referred, when he said that doctors lie in the forms which the Ontario Hospital Services Commission require the attending physician to complete when his patient has been hospitalized for 30 days. I am sure of this because on April 1, 1968, on page 1455 of Hansard, he cited a case of an individual entering hospital for a rest and he was disturbed that the bed she would use for resting would not be available for a patient in need of active treatment.

As we all know, doctors take an oath to serve their patients above all else and those doctors who take their declaration seriously are, as I said, placed in a dreadful situation.

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), does not seem to be concerned with this aspect because in the same article in the Toronto Globe and Mail last August he is quoted as saying if doctors do lie then "The Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons would be asked to look into it", and further threatened to have the college look into the member for Quinte's ethics if he was lying.

I really believe that the hon. Minister is so concerned with getting patients moving through our hospitals with assembly line speed that he has overlooked the patients' needs. To the everlasting credit of many of our doctors, they are refusing to be bulldozed into this kind of factory-like action. It seems peculiar to me that the hon. Minister of Health does not seem to mind forcing the conscientious doctor into the position where, at times, he must lie for the good of his patient.

How different the attitude of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett). When it became apparent that motorists consistently exceeded the 60-mile-per-hour speed limit on our super highways, he raised the speed limit to 70 miles per hour, rather than force them to break the law. But, of course, motorists can vote and patients in active care hospitals cannot.

On the face of things, we would appear to have reached stalemate. Not enough active care hospital beds to meet the need and a shortage of chronic hospitals.

Yet we have nursing homes in almost every community. They exist even in communities too small to maintain a hospital and they are not being utilized to the fullest degree because the average Ontario citizen cannot afford to pay their daily rates, even though they are much less than the daily rates of active care hospitals.

The reason is glaringly simple and one would think the dollars and cents minds of this government would eagerly recognize this reason. It is because most can afford to prepay their active and chronic hospital stay by paying the Ontario Hospital Insurance premiums.

In the same August 26, 1968, article in the Globe and Mail, the hon. Minister of Health seemed disappointed that all his threats to the doctors have resulted not in decreasing the average hospital stay but instead the result is an increase of three days in the average hospital stay. I ask myself why is he so willfully blind to the relief our hospitals would obtain if nursing homes were covered by the Ontario Hospital Insurance plan. Also the amount paid out of insurance funds would be less and a saving would be effected here.

We have three levels of care with three different levels of cost.

Most expensive, of course, is the active treatment hospital, where the costs are $30,000 per bed. The daily public ward rate is up as high as $60.

Next we have the chronic hospital, costing about $20,000 a bed to build and where daily rates run up to $24.

Both these are eligible for provincial grants and in both the patient can prepay his stay through the Ontario Hospital Insurance plan.

Then we have the nursing homes which are not eligible for government grants and where building costs are met by their private owners. Their daily rates vary from $8 to $16. But here the patient must meet the total cost himself. He cannot prepay his stay through the Ontario Hospital Insurance plan because even though all nursing homes must meet government standards, they are still not covered under the plan.

The only people who can make use of the facilities provided by nursing homes are the wealthy, who can afford to pay the daily rates, and the indigent, whose stay is paid by public tax money through the municipal welfare programmes.

But even this is in process of change. Improved standards and rising costs have caused nursing homes to increase their daily fees in the Hamilton area. They are running now from $8.50 to $11.50 a day and in the Toronto area from $8.50 to $12.

Due to the inaction of this government in placing nursing homes under the coverage of the Ontario Hospital Insurance plan, we witness the dreadful spectacle of the start of a programme for the mass removal of some 500 old and sick patients by the welfare department of Metro Toronto to less expensive homes in outlying communities so they could save $2.75 per day on each patient.

Metro Toronto's welfare department apparently felt they were unable to pay 100 per cent of the increase and so took this heartless step.

Perhaps this was just a pressure move by the welfare department to force the provincial government to remove the ceiling on which they pay the 80 per cent subsidy because actually the move came to a temporary halt after only three or four patients were moved out of Metro and about 30 or 40 were moved within the city, mainly to homes for the aged. These events all occurred in the second week of May last year. The temporary halt in the mass removal of welfare patients came about because nursing home owners agreed to Metro's request that they withhold their demand for increase until results of a survey to be carried out by The Department of Health were produced.

I don't know if this survey has ever been completed but I do know that on Nov. 29, 1968, more than six months later, the Globe and Mail reports that Metro welfare and housing committee will request a meeting with Ontario's Ministers of Health and Social Services to try to get an increased provincial subsidy for nursing home operators who take welfare patients.

As I said earlier in my remarks, this government has not attempted to justify their refusal to put nursing homes under the provincial hospital insurance plan. Far from it.

The Ontario Department of Health published a nursing home operational manual in September 1967, outlining the duties and functions of nursing homes. I would like to quote from it.

Section 1—Licensed Nursing Homes

In Canada, several provinces have placed nursing homes in the category of private hospitals under an insurance scheme. In Ontario there is no prepaid insured service.

You see, they admit it is possible to include them in our insurance plan, even while they bluntly state we do not give the protection in Ontario. In other years I have drawn attention to the fact that Alberta has extended this protection to its citizens and I contend,

Mr. Speaker, what Alberta can do, Ontario can do.

I appeal to the hon. members here today to support this resolution.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be associated with this resolution again this year. At the same time, I must indicate to you, sir, that I feel a sense of futility, perhaps despair, in taking part in what has become a ritual, year after year. Ever since I came into this House six years ago—with the exception of last year, I believe—I have sponsored a resolution in the order paper dealing with the coverage of nursing homes under OHSC.

Certainly I know the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) has shared my concern about this matter. I believe we have been co-sponsors of this resolution over the years, until last year when the hon. member for Quinte lent his support to this particular proposal.

I must say the hon. member for Quinte gave me new heart and hope last year. I was just about to give up and accept total defeat in this respect; then the hon. member for Quinte appeared on the scene to give a very reasonable and sensible response from the government benches.

He did so again today, but unfortunately his own government has not paid much attention to him. I certainly hope he will keep trying. I gather from his remarks today that he certainly has not given up the crusade, and I am sure that he will keep pressing, if I judge his remarks today in the House correctly.

The intent of the two resolutions being debated today is clear, that being to underline the fact that an enlightened society has a responsibility to look after, in a proper way, its sick and older citizens. The mark of a mature and civilized society has to be the degree to which it looks after its disadvantaged in society. On that score this government does not rank very high. I am confronted by at least 10 to 15 cases every year of people who have been confined to their hospital beds for a period of time, and they are about to be released.

The person in question inevitably does not require active medical attention, but does require nursing care and some type of supervision. Of course, as the hon. member for Riverdale pointed out last Thursday (I believe it was in the Throne Speech), the former circumstance is covered under The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, the latter is not.

The doctor has to fill out a report on the patient to OHSC periodically, and when it is indicated in the report that the patient no longer requires active treatment, notification is given to the hospital that OHSC coverage for that patient will terminate on such and such a date.

There is a common thread running through all of these cases. The patient has nowhere to go, no one is able to care for him at home, and he cannot afford the nursing home charges for very long because of limited resources. The alternatives are clear. He goes either to the nursing home and stops there, until his assets have been reduced to $500 if he is single or $1,000 if he is married. Then he accepts the benevolence of the municipality and the province to pay for his keep. Or he is fortunate enough to be admitted to the home for the aged. In the meantime, his member of Parliament is almost certain to get a call from his family in their frantic attempt to resolve the situation.

The member then feels obliged to call the doctor. In my own case, I get the feeling that I am subjecting the doctor to downright coercion in my attempt to help the family and to help the patient. I suggest that this places the member in an untenable position; it usually ends up with the doctor saying something to the effect "Don't worry, I'll see that the patient is kept in the hospital until suitable accommodation is found elsewhere".

I suggest this is most unfair to the doctor, because one gets the feeling the only hope of success is for the doctor to go hunting for a condition that really is not present.

I think this is precisely the circumstance that the doctor is put in, and I think it is most unfair of this government to put the doctor in that position. I say it is most unfair of the government to put the member in that position, and I suggest that something be done about it.

In any case, I confess to you, sir, that on many occasions, I would have given anything to be able to tell the family, 'no problem, the patient will be placed in a nursing home, and will remain there and will be covered for life under OHSC'. But unfortunately, I cannot do that.

There are patients who do get coverage under the homes for special care programme, because of their previous confinement in an Ontario hospital. But for many others, it is a dead-end street. Many times I have found myself wishing that the patient whose discharge from the hospital is imminent will contact a slight infection in the big toe so as to require active treatment for a further period, and thus take the heat off for the moment. I suggest that this is a disgrace in a province where we sing about "A Place to Stand".

The arguments are obviously compelling for nursing home coverage under OHSC. May I recite, sir, with your permission, my most recent case which was drawn to my attention a matter of two weeks ago. It involves a lady in her 79th year, whom I will call Mrs. S.

Mrs. S. was confined to the hospital where she suffered a series of strokes, leaving her body paralyzed—most of her body, in any case—and reducing her mind to that of a little child. She does not know any of her family; she cannot talk, she cannot walk or stand. She has to have help in eating; she has to be lifted in and out of bed; she cannot use toilet facilities without the help of someone. Yet the day came when the doctor felt that she would not benefit from further treatments, and subsequently released her from the hospital, I believe that date was Oct. 14 of this year.

Mrs. S. has a bank account of approximately $1,700 but is incapable of looking after her own affairs because of her mental condition. Consequently, none of the money can be used for her keep in the nursing home, because she is incapable of writing a cheque. No one can get power of attorney to handle her affairs because one has to be of sound mind to grant power of attorney.

The nursing home operator has been successful in getting her to make some sort of mark on her old age security cheque which the bank so far has accepted. However, the difference between her keep in the nursing home and the old age security cheque has to be made up by her daughter who does not have the financial resources to do so, because she has five children going to school, one of whom is going to university.

Mrs. S. faces a lengthy wait to get into the county home for the aged. In the meantime her family is subjected to mental anguish beyond description in trying to cope with this matter.

Really, Mr. Speaker, there is no solution other than extending OHSC coverage to licensed nursing homes in the province. I cannot understand for the life of me the type of mentality which this government obviously possesses which would treat the sick and afflicted and elderly with such careless abandon.

Morally, the government's refusal cannot be justified. Surely, morality is the way we treat one another and the way in which we express our concern for our fellow man.

I submit that our people are not getting a fair break from this government in this regard. Yet it is hard to understand. In 1967, there were approximately 850,000 in the province of Ontario over the age of 60. That is over the age of 60 not 65 as was taken in the select committee report on aging; 850,000 people in the province of Ontario over age 60. So this age group comprises about 12 per cent of our total population in the province.

In addition, the all-party select committee on the aging unanimously recommended that OHSC coverage be extended to assist aged persons to be cared for other than in hospitals or in approved nursing and convalescent homes.

The government chooses to turn a deaf ear to all of this by saying that when Ottawa agrees to share the cost of doing this, then coverage will be given.

One thing that is obvious about this government—when they get into trouble they turn the blame on Ottawa. It is as predictable as day follows night. It is a fixation, an obsession with this government; one gets the impression that their sense of responsibility has all but disappeared.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): What about the federal government?

Mr. Gaunt: Well, the federal government participates in the plan in Alberta.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is the only thing the Minister could think of.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): No, they do not.

Mr. Gaunt: Well my understanding was that they do.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The member's understanding is wrong.

Mr. Gaunt: Well I am suggesting that—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): The injustice is right.

Mr. Gaunt: I am suggesting that the injustice is right and certainly, if this government were to take any sort of initiative—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): How can injustice be right, injustice has to be wrong.

Mr. Gaunt: If this government were to take any sort of initiative I suggest the federal government would share the cost of the programme.

It goes without saying the many older people fear old age; they dread the sunset of life because they are afraid of not having the resources to cover the cost of illness and convalescence. There are those who can afford the $10 or the $12 or the $14 a day to stay in the nursing home, others have nothing and consequently, are locked after by the province and the municipality.

There are many others between these two extremes who have to suffer the indignation, worry and embarrassment of spending their own money until it is gone and then getting welfare assistance. However, the government seems completely insensitive to the problem.

I need not remind the Treasury benches that it costs far less to keep a patient in a nursing home than in a hospital; $7 to $18 a day for a nursing home; anywhere from $32 to $66 per day in a hospital.

Nursing home care ought to be considered as a natural extension of hospital care. Patients should be allowed to be released into nursing homes earlier than would normally be the case, to convalesce in a relaxed and homey atmosphere, thus, releasing active hospital beds at an earlier date.

The fact that benefits under OHSC are restricted to the care and treatment of patients in hospitals has been a factor in the greatly increased cost of hospital care.

The facts of the matter are, Mr. Speaker, that this government does not know how to order its health facilities. I suggest it is almost time it learned. This area should be top priority. The intent of these resolutions should be enacted into legislation this session.

The reasons are obvious—relief of bed shortages in our hospitals, lower costs, and, most important, to relieve the worry and harassment as a result of the financial burden imposed on those people and their families who cannot be cared for at home.

To do nothing in this area is to have lost the will to govern. I commend these two resolutions to all hon. members of the House and particularly, to the members of the Treasury benches.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this resolution, I would like to inform the Legislature that this matter has a particular significance for me. It was my honour and privilege to serve as chairman of the legislative assembly select committee on aging which exerted some three years of intensive and concentrated research into the aging needs of our Ontario people.

The committee brought in its findings and final recommendations before the fifth session of the 27th Legislature last year. These recommendations were followed, within a short period of time, by a statement of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. And the commission's statements, Mr. Speaker, fell well in step with the committee's recommendations in that it supported the need for a prepayment insurance principle, or some other method of payment, for domiciliary care service.

At the moment, payment for these services, which are frequently required for a prolonged period of time, is primarily the responsibility of the individual, aided by such assistance from government as personal assets allow. Domiciliary care involves, for the most part, a segment of population in its declining years, when the loss of health and indeed, loss of assets, is tantamount to the loss of security and independence, both for the individual and dependents. To this date we have left this small, unfortunate minority to fend for itself. Certainly we have provided them with other insurance protection afforded the remainder of our population, but we have not provided for the care of our aging, chronically ill, over and beyond hospital care.

These people are chronically ill and require post-hospital extended care. They cannot return to their own homes at this point—and at the same time, they are not covered under the hospital insurance plan. They are, in fact, caught up in a vicious current which threatens to pull them under the surface at any moment.

They need the care, but don't have any at the present moment—and the few paltry possessions they have are likely to be taken away from them. All this because no provision has been made for this type of domiciliary care.

The final recommendations of the select committee, in dealing with this matter, called for immediate extension of Ontario hospital insurance coverage to assist our aged people to be cared for either in hospitals or in approved nursing and convalescent homes until they can be returned to their own homes or be transferred to a home for the aged.

The committee also urged that the federal authorities amend The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act in order to permit extended coverage for a greater variety of short- and long-term needs.

This province may be forced, Mr. Speaker, into a programme of Medicare by the present federal government, a programme that will require the people of this province to contribute some $115 million more per year than they will get back. Under Medicare and the federal equalization programme, Ontario taxpayers will be required to contribute some $275 million for Medicare, receiving in return a programme worth an estimated $160 million, a programme in which the federal government will cease to participate in five years hence.

With the finest medical insurance plan in existence, OMSIP, Ontario does not need Medicare. The need in this province lies in the area of domiciliary care in licensed nursing homes or similar facilities. The extra cost is estimated at $90 million, but would complete the full care programme for our citizens.

The extended insurance coverage is, of course, Mr. Speaker, the most logical approach to the problem. It could well be in the form of a prepayment insurance plan for the care of domicile persons—a "domcare" insurance plan, if you wish.

This method could be used as a substitute for the personal contribution toward the cost of domiciliary care. It would embody the same type of arrangement as presently pertaining in the Ontario hospital insurance plan, with respect to indigent and non-indigent persons. It would allow the participant to contribute to the plan in the course of his productive years, so that at the time of need he would have the personal gratification of having paid for it, free from the connotation of welfare support.

Those already in need of the care and not able to contribute to it by way of prepayment would, of necessity, be covered by government sources.

This concept, Mr. Speaker, is not as unrealistic as some would have you believe. It was strongly urged in a 1967 study by Dr. G. C. Caudwell who is director of hospital care standards of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. It has many desirable qualities. One of the most important is that it would fit in readily with the arrangements being planned for the Ontario hospital insurance and the OMSIP plans.

As our population figures grow, so do our figures in every other respect—including domiciliary cases. During 1967 there were 2,978 domiciliary cases in Ontario. Of this total, almost one-half, or 1,336 to be more exact, were without domiciliary days—cases that were not covered by insurance. These are the people I am speaking about—the people who need some sort of protection.

It is because of this, Mr. Speaker, that I urge this government to take up the cause of our chronically ill, aged persons and to provide for them. And in my opinion, the simple and most effective system can be none other than the domcare system that I suggest. It is a prepayment government plan which is certain to provide satisfactory protection for our aging people of Ontario.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, we have moved from the HOME programme to the "DOME" programme. In the process we have distorted a good deal of the reality in this field in the province of Ontario, which makes it very difficult to come to grips with the subject.

It seems obvious, Mr. Speaker, from the Throne Speech which began the afternoon, by the member for Quinte and from the intervention of the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe), that the government may well be on the verge of some kind of extension of Ontario hospital coverage to those requiring chronic, convalescent, or nursing care. I want to say from this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, let not the crusade of the members for Hamilton Centre and Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) go unnoticed as the government moves so slowly into the 20th century.

It is interesting to note that at precisely this juncture they are beginning to contemplate it; but not before tremendous injustices have been done and are allowed to prevail.

It was interesting to note that we come to this resolution yet again without a formal statement from government in the Throne Speech itself. It is also interesting to note that the government's response in the short term as well as the long term is just as indifferent, heartless and cynical as it has always been.

When my colleague, the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), cited in this House the facts of the Boulter case last Friday, no one saw the Minister of Health jump to his feet and indicate the nature of the injustice and his willingness to intervene. No one saw the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) express deep feelings of concern around the confusion and obvious insensitivity of several government departments.

No one on that side of the House for a moment indicated a willingness within 24 hours—and that is what they should have indicated—a willingness to say: "We will call the hospital off; we will attempt to stop the judicial process; we will assume as a government should assume, the cost not only for the Boulters but for all people in that kind of category."

There was the same myopic insensitive, largely unresponsive demeanor on the part of the government as they sat and listened to the Legislature spell out yet another case of concern, which simply evokes no reaction whatsoever. Even in debate this afternoon, whatever marginal discomfort the Minister of Health may have felt from the member for Quinte or from the member for Northumberland or, indeed, from the Opposition, one does not stir him. One does not see the Minister of Health rise, as he might, on a point of order and say, "Mr. Speaker, we recognize that it is an abuse of individuals which can no longer be tolerated and I, as Minister of Health, wish to announce the following; or I, as Minister of Health, will intervene with Treasury Board."

No, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health, representing his Treasury Board colleagues, has a rather different approach.

It was the member for Quinte who indicated that doctors are forced to violate the basic precepts which they supposedly maintain, given the problem of chronic, convalescent, and nursing home care. They lie. Lie categorically on statements which are made to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission!

With that vested interest the Minister of Health shows for his colleague, he indicated in his statement to the Globe and Mail that he did not think the doctors lie and went on to say: "But if they do, we'll have to ask the college of physicians and surgeons to look into it."

He then went on to say that the member for Quinte admitted lying: "Perhaps we will have to ask the college to look into his professional ethics". Thus does the Minister of Health accord substance to the remarks of one of his colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, there might well be justification for the college of physicians and surgeons looking into the political morality of the Minister of Health, that may be a just cause. In fact, it would be such a case of transparent immorality, Mr. Speaker, in the context of this social issue, that it would be very difficult to mount a defence.

I can understand why the Minister might want to invoke the college of physicians and surgeons, capitulating, as he does, to their every whim and to that of the Ontario Medical Association, whether it be around fee schedules or whether it be around medical discipline. We know the relationship of the Minister to the governing medical bodies. But this Legislature will not be governed by those medical bodies. Nor will this Legislature be governed by the kind of reaction which the Minister gave to the statement from the member for Quinte.

It is no light matter that doctors violate the Hippocratic oath, if I may refer to that august oath. It is no light matter at all; that they are forced to an extremity should concern this Legislature greatly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not only desirable that there be this kind of extension for Ontario hospital coverage to chronic convalescent and domiciliary care, but it is also possible for it to be extended. I am pleased to see the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) walk into the House at this moment because he knows—and were he not a partisan he would agree with me—he knows that if Medicare were brought into this country and Ontario participated in that plan, between $130 million and $140 million would revert to the province of Ontario for purposes of health care.

Mr. Speaker, using the words of the member for Durham, if all that we require is $90 million in order to provide complete coverage in this area, then that money would be forthcoming if this government participates in Medicare and that, of course, is what we should do.

There cannot be any particular economic argument against it, Mr. Speaker, it is a fairly obvious circumstance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is a simple solution if I ever heard one.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Try it out on Mr. Benson.

Mr. Lewis: It is largely settled, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased that the Minister intervenes. It is largely settled because, of course, if it is not settled then the economic disarray, the generalship for which disarray is provided by the Provincial Treasurer, will, of course, continue. No little part of the economic disarray, Mr. Speaker, to move to the next obvious point, is caused by the wreckage of the hospital system, which is a direct result of the Minister's refusal to extend care and coverage to these other areas.

In almost every sophisticated system in the world the average length of stay in hospital is falling because people are covered for chronic and convalescent and domiciliary care by hospital schemes in other places outside hospital. But in this province, in 1965, average length of stay was 10.4 days; in 1966 it was 10.4 days; in 1967 it was 10.5 days; in 1968 it has probably risen again, marginally.

The fact of the matter is that the pressure on the hospital beds in this province—the acute treatment beds—has become absolutely unmanageable because the Minister of Health, for whatever perverse, complex, unfathomable reason, refuses—in conjunction with his Treasury colleagues—to extend coverage for chronic, convalescent, and nursing home cases.

It is obviously a continuing disregard. And it is not simply—if I remember the phrase from the member for Durham—"a vicious current" applied to a small, unfortunate minority. I read the select committee report on aging, and I did not have the sense that the force of that document was restricted to a small, unfortunate minority. The members of the select committee on aging felt a tremendous impetus around the question of extending this care, Mr. Speaker, and they would not demean it by reducing the numbers involved.

The fact of the matter is that the cost, of course, will come down tremendously for active treatment, for chronic care, for all related forms of care if one did that. The government could, of course, do a great many other things; the government could support community and group practice and diminish the average number of days of care in active treatment hospitals. But it wishes also to avoid that critical issue.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, just to try to pull it together. Doctors in this province under the present circumstances are forced to fabrication and to a premeditated violation of medical ethics. Second—citizens are ravaged by discomfort, and hounded by the states and by some of the states institutions. Third, families are forced to a level of impoverishment because they cannot meet the costs involved—cost of convalescent and domiciliary care.

Fourth, the government pursues a policy of primeval economic perversity by refusing to move in the obvious social areas of this kind where costs could be brought down for the average citizen so that the Provincial Treasurer would not have to weep so copiously and with such extravagance on the floor of this House, or at Dominion-provincial conferences. Finally, Mr. Speaker, and I think this point need be made by way of footnote, politics are again debased in the legislation.

Because they are simple things, simple political propositions, not complex, but human and compelling, they should be encompassed by this government. And there is nothing more simple, Mr. Speaker, than accepting the intent of this resolution, financing it by money available from the medical care plan and alleviating the tremendous human discomfort attendant on the present situation.

When you disregard that simple proposition, then you once again reinforce in the minds of the public as a whole that your government is perverse; that your Legislature is irrelevant; and that political problems admit no solution.

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, will not accept that kind of analysis. If we have to turf the government out in order to prove it, that we will also do.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): This is a sad routine that we have been going through year in and year out in an attempt to see that coverage is made available under the Ontario Hospital Services Commission for those people who require convalescent and chronic care.

I say it is a sad routine for two reasons. The first and most outstanding is that there are hundreds and thousands of people in this province suffering mental and economic distress because this government is completely inactive in regard to the whole subject.

It is a sad routine because this government is completely inactive in regard to the whole subject. It is a sad routine because the government of the province of Ontario completely ignores the wishes of the people, and not only ignores the wishes of the people, but it most certainly ignores the wishes of the members of this Legislature, and particularly, of the members of the Progressive Conservative Party.

I cannot recall hearing a member of the Progressive Conservative Party stand up and say that they were opposed to helping those who required convalescent and chronic care. I also cannot recall a Minister of the Crown, at any time, making any kind of an effort to help these people that require desperate help.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who was fortunate to be on the committee on aging, under the chairmanship of the member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers), who spoke previously in this debate. I do not think I ever heard anyone, at any time, not only on that committee, but among the numerous witnesses and organizations that we talked to, who were opposed to expanding and helping the services having to do with chronic and convalescent care.

They were not only not opposed to it, the vast majority who were informed on the subject realized that in this province there is a desperate need for chronic and convalescent care, not only in the construction of hospitals, but certainly in the insurance coverage that would make and encourage the facilities that are required.

I know in this day and age the Treasurer is complaining at great length about the shortage of money and that is pretty obvious. But, Mr. Speaker, how are we going to avoid having hospital costs at $60 a day? And now this year, they are talking of costs in our general hospitals at being around $66 a day.

How are we going to avoid this unless we do the obvious, and that is expand our services in the convalescent and chronic care area, where the costs are some place in the neighbourhood of from $7 to $24 per day? There is an awful difference, insofar as the economy of the province is concerned.

I cannot understand the government completely ignoring this situation; keeping its head in the sand. Of course, the other reason is—and it is the more urgent and the more obvious—that many people today are worried, that they are not able to regain their health simply because they do not know where to go.

It is little or no satisfaction whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, to have a patient told: "Well, you no longer require medical care, go home." There are many of them flat on their backs who just have no place to go except a nursing home.

I know of one case where, an elderly lady recently was able to pay accommodation in a nursing home at $450 a month. Fortunately, she had the $450. But what of the many hundreds, the many thousands who simply do not have the wherewithal to get the necessary protection?

The Queen Elizabeth Hospital is in my riding and I know that there is a waiting list of 150 patients waiting to get in. The one great advantage of the Queen Elizabeth Hospital, which is a hospital for the chronically ill and those who require convalescent care, is that it is covered by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. If you are in that hospital under the proper auspicious, your premium payment will cover the bill, or most of the bill.

People who require nursing care are anxious to get into the hospital. I have on many occasions received calls, first from people who are in nursing homes and anxious to be transferred to that hospital and, on other occasions, from people who are in the hospital who are told to get out because they no longer require medical care.

The Queen Elizabeth Hospital is, in many ways, different from a general hospital. If they require chronic care and they do in many respects need the attention of a doctor, then as a result they are covered under the present system.

The Boulter case came up in the Legislature the other day, where a person is being sued for $4,000 plus. This is what is morally wrong with the present system, Mr. Speaker. If a person has no money whatsoever and either from ill luck or just living it up has no money, the government takes care of them. But if they are the average citizen, anxious to pay their way, have saved something, they are the ones that literally have to pay through the nose.

So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, the time has come for the government to give us some action in this matter. To be making endless speeches year in and year out for what is a very genuine and needy cause is utterly useless. It is particularly and utterly useless on the part of private government members to get up and say again and again: "We think it is a good idea". They, particularly the members on the government side, have a greater responsibility because they should have some influence with the Treasury Board.

All I can say is that the Treasury Board is not only ignoring the people of the province of Ontario, but is most certainly ignoring its own party members.

I say, Mr. Speaker, in closing, that the government has been utterly and completely heartless to the needs of the people of this province. It has been—even from a financial aspect—stupid and niggardly in the full economic approach to the necessary hospitalization. So it is time that we had a change and we got rid of what is nothing, but sheer Tory arrogance to the whole situation.

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, am very much in favour of the domiciliary care recommendations made before this Legislature by my colleague, the hon. member for Durham.

I should point out also that I too had the honour and privilege of serving on the legislative assembly select committee on aging.

While a prepayment plan such as my colleague suggests is a sound and logical one, I would like to make still another recommendation before this Legislature for consideration of the members.

And this is: That the government of Ontario broaden the scope of the present regulations governing the payment for domiciliary care.

This is readily applicable within the present administrative framework, according to Dr. G. G. Caudwell, director of hospital care standards for the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, and could be adjusted so as to meet the desired objective. It would have the distinct advantage of being shareable with the federal government and would involve only those persons in need of the service and not add any new dimension of administration.

This would involve amendments to the regulations under The Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act; The Charitable Institutions Act; The General Welfare Assistance Act; The Homes for Special Care Act—to enable federal sharing—and the last point is a most important one, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the amendment of the Act which would enable federal sharing.

The estimated cost of domiciliary care in Ontario is approximately $90 million. This is a respectable figure. Yet, it is palatable when you consider provincial-federal sharing of this cost.

And I might add, Mr. Speaker, that in the light of the present tax situation we would be wise to consider a programme which involves this type of cost sharing.

We are being asked by the federal government to embark on a Medicare scheme, which to date has been an abortive effort, and to provide for a programme which the federal government proposes to drop within five years.

The irony of the entire issue is that Ontario already has the finest medical programme in the country. What Ontario does need is greater financial assistance so that we can fully round-out the existing programmes and continue to provide for our own people as never before.

Certainly nursing homes within the province are fulfilling a valuable service—in Hamilton, for example, there are 711 available nursing home beds and current figures of occupancy are as follows: 278 patients under the municipal welfare programme; 182 transferred under the private home care programme from the psychiatric hospitals; 14 under the D.V.A. programme; 225 private patients—the majority of whom are senior citizens.

One of the major problems facing our senior citizens today is the high cost of private care—particularly those living alone with only the old age security subsistence. Their families are not able to, or prefer not to, take care of them, or they simply cannot afford to take care of them. Consequently they find refuge in one of our homes for the aged.

The capacity of our homes for the aged, for domiciliary care, is over-taxed. So, the alternative would be to turn to nursing homes. However, the cost of nursing homes is well beyond the means of many of the aging people.

In Hamilton too, the St. Peter's Infirmary board has advocated and is endeavouring to promote a geriatric centre. The purpose of this is to provide a very badly needed preventative programme.

But Hamilton is not the only place in need of this type of clinic. We need them over the entire province—for all of our aging people. These free clinics would provide periodic check-ups which would result in the correction of illnesses at an early stage at the very least—and possibly keep many of our people out of hospitals.

In this way we would free many of the urgently needed beds and facilities in our hospitals for more critically ill patients. This, of course, would reduce the expenses that are incurred in keeping domiciliary care patients in hospitals.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, before asking you to call the motion for adjournment may I simply say that tomorrow we will be dealing with matters on the order paper, bills; and if we proceed sufficiently far, we will continue with the Throne Speech Debate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today, we have many visitors in our galleries: in the east gallery, students from Downsview Secondary School and Eastdale High School in Oshawa; and in the west gallery from Central Public School in Grimsby. Later on this afternoon we will be joined, in both galleries, by students from the Preston High School in Preston.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the report of the committee appointed to enquire into and report upon the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, having in mind the desire of various members to participate in the Throne Debate, some arrangements will be required by way of having night sittings, which will be on Thursday night of this week and next week on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights. Friday of this week and the following Friday, the House will sit at 10 o'clock rather than 10.30, and to accomplish that, I move on Friday, December 13 and Friday, December 20, the House will meet at 10 a.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS ACT, 1968

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton Centre) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Employment Standards Act, 1968.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Speaker, this bill increases the basic rate for minimal wages from $1.30 to $2.25 an hour.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Minister have a bill?

The hon. member for High Park.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to standardize the licensing of our drivers so as to be in conformity with that of the rest of North America.

Mr. Speaker: On Friday last a question was raised as to whether or not a bill respecting impaired drivers is intra vires of the province. The Speaker and the Clerk referred this question to the office of the legislative counsel for an opinion, which has now been received. I quote from that opinion as follows:

The provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan have both had legislation including the principles in the bill ruled intra vires—the Alberta legislation by the Alberta Court of Appeal and the Saskatchewan legislation by the Supreme Court of Canada. Without going into an analysis of these cases, in my opinion, the above decisions form a firm enough basis to give the bill a reasonable chance of success in court. (Reference re section 92 (4) of The Vehicles Act Saskatchewan 1958 SCR 608, Regina v Tenta 67 DLR (2d) (1968) 536).

The practice of this office has been to advise on constitutional risks but not to put any barriers to legislation proceeding where constitutional doubts exist. To do so would amount to a judicial predetermination before a bill is even considered by the House, and the field is a very complex and shifting one. It should be open to the Legislature to test constitutional questions by passing legislation and it is the function of the judiciary only, to finally determine the questions. An ultra vires Act must be observed until it is set aside by a court (Rex v Lessard (1940) 1 DLR 128).

To summarize the foregoing, the reasonable position appears to be that the question of vires is one for the courts and not to be predetermined by the Legislature. This situation is, of course, very different from a case where the proposed bill infringes one of the specific rules of the Legislature. In such a case it is not a question of constitutional jurisdiction, but simply of compliance with the rules of the assembly.

I concur in the opinion of legislative counsel and therefore beg to advise the House that the bill submitted by the hon. member for High Park is in order.

The hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the House.

On December 3 of this year in answer to a question from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), I stated that the affairs of Atlantic Acceptance Corporation Limited were, and I refer to Hansard, page 309—

—under the control of the Montreal Trust Company which was appointed the receiver and manager according to the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act.

I have since been informed that my answer was not technically accurate.

To clarify the matter, Mr. Speaker, I wish to record that the Montreal Trust Company was in fact appointed receiver and manager by Mr. Justice Parker, of the Supreme Court of Ontario, on June 17, 1965, pursuant to the provisions of a trust indenture. But the company is not bankrupt in law. Accordingly, rather than to the Bankruptcy Court, the receiver and manager is recording and passing his accounts before the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour has a statement.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): May I ask the Minister a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If it is a question of clarification, yes; otherwise, no.

Mr. Sargent: Would the Minister advise; is there any hope of the proceeds to be distributed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member may only ask for clarification of the Minister's statement, not an entirely different question. The hon. Minister of Labour has a statement.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, today is International Human Rights Day, the 20th anniversary of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has asked that the Legislature officially observe this important anniversary.

I am sure that I speak for all of us when I express my deep regret that he is unable to be in the House this afternoon. We all know the untiring support by the Prime Minister of the principles of the universal declaration. Through his leadership he has ensured the continual strengthening of the Ontario Human Rights Code, one of the great social documents of our time. I am honoured to have the privilege of delivering the statement the Prime Minister had prepared to mark this occasion. At the conclusion of that statement I am sure that the hon. leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party will also wish to participate.

Mr. Speaker, as you are aware the Prime Minister has invited a number of distinguished guests to share this occasion with us. They are seated in your gallery. I shall introduce each of them and I suggest that we withhold our greeting until the introductions are completed.

The hon. J. C. McRuer, the former Chief Justice of the trial division of the Ontario Supreme Court and head of the Royal Commission on Civil Rights, and to whom we are so deeply indebted for the great zeal and devotion with which he has carried on his task; the hon. J. K. McKay, a former Lieutenant-Governor and former justice of the Ontario Supreme Court and now the president of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association; Dr. Louis Fine, who is the chairman of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, and who was for many years the chief conciliation officer in The Department of Labour. His outstanding contribution to the life of our province in the two closely related roles has won for him the admiration and respect of all citizens.

Dr. Daniel Hill, the director of the Ontario Human Rights Commission, who has made a unique contribution in the area of human rights, not only in Ontario but throughout Canada, and I may add, on an international scale as well.

Mr. Speaker, if I may I would now read the statement prepared by the Prime Minister in recognition of this anniversary:

Mr. Speaker, on this day 20 years ago the United Nations Assembly produced what has been appropriately described as a charter of humanity which declares that the fundamental freedoms must be protected by the rule of law.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes that the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family are the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.

December 10, 1948, will therefore no doubt take its place in history along with June 15, 1215, when the Magna Carta was signed, as one of the most remarkable milestones in mankind's search for justice.

And yet, in saying this, we would do well to ponder what the hon. James C. McRuer had to say in the course of his outstanding address to the National Conference on Human Rights in Ottawa last week. On that occasion, he said:

History is replete with declarations of civil rights that have little recognizable application to a large segment of the society to which they are supposed to apply.

Mr. McRuer pointed out that the declaration of rights and liberties by the British Parliament nearly 300 years ago was unquestionably, in some aspects, an important milestone in the progress of human liberty. However, in another aspect it was, in the words of Mr. McRuer, "merely a declaration of supremacy of one class over another in a religious war for power."

It declared that election of the members of the Parliament ought to be free. Nevertheless, for over two centuries the election of members to Parliament was free only to certain privileged members of that society. The bill of rights denounced and, at the same time, held out hope of redress from evils such as excessive bail, excessive fines and cruel punishment. Yet these and many other deeds such as the lash and the bullwhip continued to be applied to the back of the slave.

A century later the United States Declaration of Independence declared that:

All men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Once again, in the words of Mr. McRuer:

The framers of the declaration had little or no concept of their general application. The slave, white or black, had no inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, nor did those privileged to enjoy these rights recognize any obligation to concede like rights to others if it interfered with the enjoyment of the rights they claimed for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the conclusion to be drawn from all this is that human rights and human dignity in Canada as elsewhere in the world have not, and are not likely to be, realized by lofty rhetoric, even when enshrined in a constitution. They are achieved by those relentless forces of social change and by our timely response to them. It is a question of giving substance to words by taking positive, constructive action.

On March 14 next, it will be 25 years since this Legislature passed unanimously the first of our modern human rights statutes. This statute, The Racial Discrimination Act, outlawed discriminatory signs and notices referring to race and creed.

At the time the measure was introduced there were strong voices of protest from some who saw in the legislation a threat to freedom of speech. It will also be recalled that The Racial Discrimination Act was passed while we were still fighting in a war to preserve our freedom. It was fully realized by all those who sat in that 21st Legislature that discrimination and inequality within our own borders were just as serious threats to that freedom as the might of the enemy abroad.

In giving unanimous consent to the bill, our province embarked upon an entirely new course in defence of the rights of all its residents. It was an affirmative expression by the elected representatives of the people of Ontario that discrimination against any person threatens, not only the individual affected, but the very institutions and foundation of our democratic society.

It is appropriate on this occasion that I should again place in the record of this House several sentences from the eloquent speech delivered by the leader of the government, the hon. George Drew. In setting out the principle of the legislation and indeed of all subsequent legislation in this area, Mr. Drew said:

We have a very simple choice to make. When we say that Canada is a land of freedom and equality, we either mean what we say, or we do not. If we permit signs and notices to be put up on conspicuous places indicating that any particular group of people are denied the ordinary rights available to all other people, then those who should be most indignant are not the people against whom the signs and notices are directed, but those whose basic principles of freedom, justice and equality have been insulted.

Mr. Speaker, it would be correct to say that most of those who gave their assent to The Racial Discrimination Act in March, 1944, were well aware that they were merely taking the first step toward the removal of injustices. They fully realized that this type of legislation does not remain static. It is dynamic. It is constantly on the move in response to changing conditions and changing attitudes.

It was only natural that in subsequent years the legislation should be extended far beyond offensive signs and notices. It now reaches into the areas of employment, restricted covenants, public services, housing, equal pay for women doing equal work, age discrimination, language rights, legal aid and consumer protection.

It also becomes clear that the mere passing of laws was not sufficient. It was apparent that a special agency would be required to give them application in their respective spheres. Thus, the present Ontario Human Rights Commission was established in 1958 under the chairmanship of Dr. Louis Fine, who for many years had served as chief conciliation officer for Ontario.

In 1962 the various statutes to which I have referred were combined in one Act, The Ontario Human Rights Code. This code is based upon the principles of the universal declaration of human rights.

In that same year we were extremely fortunate to secure the services of a distinguished sociologist in the person of Dr. Daniel Hill who became the first full-time director of the commission.

When the commission was first established its budget was a mere $8,000. Today it is over $300,000. It has a staff of 32 workers. This is three times the number employed in this area by other provinces and more than ten times the number employed by the federal government.

The commission has developed a comprehensive programme of education which extends into every municipality in the province. It has developed a close working relationship with our universities, which have given invaluable assistance in the field of research. The deans of law schools and other academics have served as chairmen of the boards of inquiry of the commission. Its main publication, "Human Relations," has a circulation of 150,000. Its pamphlets dealing with many aspects of human rights have been widely distributed. The commission now has four regional offices.

It should also be pointed out that because of our successful experience, nine other provinces have modelled their human rights legislation on ours. Dr. Hill has been invited by all of them to assist in the development of their work. It is also noteworthy that Dr. Hill, on two occasions during the past year, has been invited by the government of Britain to assist in the fashioning of race relations legislation.

Since 1962 the Ontario Human Rights Commission has handled 8,000 human rights problems. It is eloquent testimony to its effective procedures that it has been able to achieve a just and amicable settlement by conciliation in the vast majority of cases.

As I have stressed on other occasions in this House, the Ontario Human Rights Code proceeds from its preamble which states:

It is public policy in Ontario that every person is free and equal in dignity and rights . . .

The commission, therefore, is not limited in its function to the mere processing and settlement of individual complaints. As Mr. Justice Bora Laskin has pointed out, the commission has the power and the responsibility to enquire into all areas where discrimination exists and to set in motion remedial action.

In this connection the commission was instrumental in establishing a citizens' advisory committee in the Windsor area to assist in the creation of enlarged employment opportunities for minority groups. It was also involved in the establishment of the mayor's committee in Kenora to assist in resolving the unemployment problems of local Indians.

At the present time the commission is co-operating with The Department of Education in a study of our school textbooks to ensure that they do justice to our native peoples as well as to those from other lands who have played a vital part in the development of our country.

Briefly stated, the Ontario Human Rights Code has a two-fold aim:

1. To make secure in law the inalienable rights of every person.

2. To create a climate of understanding and mutual respect among our people so that all will be afforded the unhampered opportunity to contribute their maximum to the enrichment of the whole community.

There is abundant evidence, Mr. Speaker, that under the leadership of the Ontario Human Rights Commission substantial progress has been made in winning the wholehearted support of a wide variety of community organizations, such as churches, schools, trade unions, boards of trade, apartment developers and employment agencies. As a result, much progress has been made in making the aims of the code better known and understood by our people.

It is only natural that we feel called upon from time to time to deplore and condemn violations of human rights elsewhere in the world. But we must never cease to concern ourselves with those walls of prejudice which still exist in our own province and country, and often in our minds; walls which deny to our fellow citizens the justice and equality that is their inalienable right.

I feel confident that I expressed the view of all members in this House when I said that:

We must never lose sight of the fact that the Ontario Human Rights Code is much more than a number of laws designed to deal with a prejudiced minority. It is rather a set of inviolable principles to be practised and lived from day to day by all of us; not just because the law requires it, but rather because enlightened social behaviour demands it.

In other words, the ultimate effectiveness of the human rights code depends not so much upon the law as upon the degree to which the people of Ontario play their part in applying and living its principles in their respective communities.

Mr. Speaker, let me make this very clear: While we can be proud of what we have achieved here in Ontario and of the assistance we have given to our sister provinces, our work is far from finished. There is no justification whatsoever for resting on our laurels. We must all be painfully aware of the fact that there are still pockets of prejudice and wide areas of discrimination, sometimes very subtle discrimination, in our community life which demand not only our concern but effective remedial action. As one of our university professors said only a few days ago, discrimination "is like a hair drawn against a cheek—it is something felt but not seen."

Therefore, it remains the obligation of individuals, of community organizations, of this Legislature, and of the government of Ontario, to strive for still higher levels of improvement in the field of human rights. Insofar as the government is concerned, we shall do our utmost in this regard.

I have given this résumé of what we are doing because we shall very shortly be discussing the whole question of human rights with our sister provinces and the federal government. Under our present Constitution the responsibilities of the two levels of government in this area are clearly defined. Therefore, we must welcome the fact that practically all provinces have taken substantial steps to deal with their human rights problems.

I am sure all hon. members will agree that the most grievously disadvantaged groups in Canada are our native Indians and Eskimos. Indeed, there is widespread recognition that their condition is one of the darkest blots on our daily life.

The hon. Mr. McRuer spoke of this in the course of the address to which I referred at the outset of these remarks. He said:

For 100 years we denied the native people of this country a right to express themselves in the government of the country. Solemn treaties were entered into with them and, if not broken by us with impunity, they were certainly circumvented by the payment of a few beads, hoes and the odd plow. Millions of acres of productive land were bought for such trifles. We did not massacre these native people as was done in some other countries, but we have undoubtedly starved thousands of them to death. If all men are born equal in this country, we well know that they do not stay equal long after they are born.

Mr. Speaker, this is something for which every Canadian must feel deep concern and deep shame. As Canadians we must all commit ourselves to ensure that justice is done.

It should be pointed out, of course, that under our Constitution the welfare of our Indians is the chief responsibility of the federal government. So far as I know, no provincial government has placed any obstacle, or indeed could place any obstacle, in the path of having these injustices removed. On the contrary, on our part the government of Ontario stands ready today to co-operate wholeheartedly with the federal government in launching a massive attack on this problem. There is no doubt in my mind that other provinces are equally prepared to play their part. No constitutional amendment is necessary for that purpose. There is no need for any surrender of sovereignty. All that is required is for the federal government to exercise its sovereignty. In doing so, I repeat, it can count upon the full co-operation of the government of Ontario.

At a time when there are so many injustices to be corrected, I hope that we are not going to become bogged down in sterile philosophical debate over such constitutional abstractions as the surrender of sovereignty. Instead, all of us must exercise to the full our sovereignty in our own jurisdiction on behalf of all the disadvantaged in our society.

Mr. Speaker, it is well known that some provinces have already declared their unwillingness to proceed with a constitutional bill of rights before dealing with such questions as fiscal policy, distribution of powers, regional disparity, tax sharing and the like. It should be stressed that all of these questions have a strong bearing on the quality of life in our country. But this certainly does not mean any lack of interest in, or concern for, human rights. As I pointed out earlier, the provinces are already dealing with these matters in the light of their own particular problems.

Nine of the provinces which have established legislation to deal with human rights are already co-operating closely with each other and are sharing each other's experiences. All of them were represented at the recent National Conference on Human Rights.

In my view, no useful purpose would be served by diverting attention and energy from these promising developments by insisting upon a course of action on which there may well be not only sharp differences of opinion but little likelihood of any substantial agreement.

Surely this would be a backward step rather than a step forward in the progress of human rights. Why then should we become preoccupied with the form and fail to use our freedom of action to deal with the substance of the problem?

We in Ontario have before us the far-reaching recommendations of the McRuer Commission on Civil Rights. We have already begun to implement them. In due course we shall be receiving the second report of this important study, which no doubt will have equally important recommendations for our consideration in the field of human rights. While I am in no position to anticipate the exact nature of these recommendations, I should be surprised indeed if they did not affect future legislation in this field.

We are strongly of the opinion that, pending action on these matters, it would be most unwise to rush into short cuts which may well complicate rather than facilitate the ultimate solution. It seems to me that limiting ourselves to the question of entrenching a bill of rights in the present Constitution is a purely mechanical approach to the real problem before us. For even if this were done, it would only create the illusion of progress while everything remains the same.

I am not for a moment suggesting that at the appropriate time we shall not be fully prepared to consider the question of having a bill of rights entrenched in a revised or new Canadian Constitution. At the constitutional conference last February, my colleague, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), who stands second to no one as a champion of human rights, expressed views as to the wisdom of the course then proposed by the federal government. But being a reasonable man, he was far from taking a rigid, unyielding or uncompromising position.

I will only say at this time that we deem it most undesirable to have the vital question of human rights become an exercise in public relations. Nor should it become a subject of partisan bickering.

For my part, I would much prefer to have the two levels of government intensify their activities in the field of human rights under the present constitutional arrangements. To do otherwise would run the risk of dividing the country in an area where there need be no fundamental difference as to aim and purpose. Concrete action to remove injustices and more effective human rights programmes are far more important than what has been described as "the formulation of statutory platitudes." The victims of discrimination and the disadvantaged in our society will be little impressed and little affected by such declarations. What they expect, indeed what they demand, are deeds not words. Unless these deeds are forthcoming we shall all be in deep trouble.

The road to effective and far reaching action in the correction of social injustices is now wide open. There are no constitutional barriers whatsoever. Let the provinces continue to tackle these problems in their own way. Let the federal government give leadership by acting without delay to do justice to the Indians and Eskimos, which is their exclusive responsibility.

By so doing we shall find ourselves on a common course which will enable us to reach common agreement on how to bring the disadvantaged in our society into the main stream of Canadian life. This is an issue which must be considered with calm and balance. It is an issue on which we must ensure our common unity and avoid actions which are divisive.

Surely recent development in our own country and elsewhere in the world demonstrate that the use of coercion and partisan pressure are no substitutes for the more lasting results of reason and common sense.

May I conclude by again quoting from the address by Mr. Justice McRuer:

The task that I see that lies ahead transcends declarations of human rights, be they statutory or constitutional. The task is one of great magnitude—the development of a sense of obligation. Good legislation can and does, however, assist in this development. I like the philosophy of the Ontario human rights legislation with its emphasis on conciliation. The process of conciliation gives opportunity for the process of reason to work, and reasoning together leads to understanding and respect.

On the other hand, force leads to violence, and violence leads to hate, and hate defeats understanding. Understanding we must have; hate we must destroy. Those of us who have indulged ourselves in the luxuries of our way of life at the expense of others must be prepared to re-examine our way of life and to give to others in our society their rightful place of human dignity as rightful shareholders of the advantages of the society in which we live.

Not only must we do that in our domestic affairs, but we must be prepared to share our inheritance and our privileges with those of other countries who are struggling to be recognized as human beings entitled to human rights.

Mr. Speaker, it is only by responding to this wise counsel from one of our most distinguished and compassionate citizens that we can give real meaning to the Ontario Human Rights Code and to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, upon which it is based and the 20th anniversary of which we are observing today.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on the marking of the twentieth anniversary of the International Declaration of Human Rights and also to join with the Minister of Labour in welcoming our four guests who are in your gallery, sir, and who have already been introduced.

It occurred to me, as these four gentlemen stood and were recognized by the members of the Legislature, that among them they probably had a larger grasp of the forces that have moulded modern Ontario and perhaps modern Canada than any other four men we could call as visitors in this chamber. Surely the prejudices that have come down to us from older times and older methods of education are recognized by these four men, and certainly we as citizens of Ontario are grateful for the leadership they have provided during their careers and the leadership which they will provide in the future in this important aspect of modern man's attempt to improve his humanity and his community.

I feel further that we have been most fortunate in the staff that has been appointed to administer the human rights legislation which is now almost 25 years old. I feel it is necessary that we comment upon the outstanding motivation and effectiveness of their administration and to express as perhaps only the Opposition can do, the respect we feel for the difficult job they have been assigned and the effective way that they have accomplished their assignment.

I was glad in the peroration of the Prime Minister's statement, that the Minister of Labour, in his reading, was able to give us a few paragraphs that indicated that the administration was by no means complacent and satisfied with the achievements that have been accomplished at this stage, and that the Minister of Labour, in speaking for the Premier, was able to point out a number of areas where we have fallen far short of the mark. I did feel at one stage, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps he was transgressing on the rules that govern this Legislature in statements before the orders of the day, which are supposed to be brief, but surely on this occasion we can excuse that.

But there was at least one reference in regard to the responsibility that we share with the federal jurisdiction in this matter that perhaps I would come to in my own remarks. He was dealing with the Indians and he reiterated on at least two occasions that this was a federal jurisdiction and that we were hoping that the federal government would take the steps to bring into line with our unanimous view of what should be done, those areas of life that have been closed to Indians who have not shared in, let us say, the burgeoning economy and opportunity in the province of Ontario.

I feel that it is within my rights under these circumstances to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that while we talk about these pious hopes, the Minister of Health and his counterpart at the federal level are bickering about who is going to pay for the cost of improved medical services. While both of these gentlemen feel that they have right on their side, the people that we concern ourselves with today, the Indian population, do not have the facilities that they should have.

I would say further that I agree with the Prime Minister's statement as made here in the last few minutes, that we must not be complacent as we look to the future and our responsibility to improve human rights as we experience them in this province. You know that there are private bills and resolutions on the order paper this year, as there have been in the past, that set out specific improvements that I am sure when they are enacted will be supported by all members of this House.

This is an area where certainly a partisan difference should not intrude. We do have a unanimous view that the work that has been achieved by the government with leadership, exemplified by our guests in the gallery today, has been supported on all sides and certainly we would support an extension of this work. Surely this is the only purpose for which perhaps there is a slight edge to my remarks today.

I feel that those who have said for 25 years that it is impossible to legislate against prejudice have been proved wrong in this province and in other jurisdictions. It is improper for anyone to say in this House that any effort to entrench this legislation in our Constitution is simply an exercise in public relations. That is unacceptable on an occasion such as this.

As I well remember, when this was put before the Premiers and Prime Ministers in February, 1968, at a federal-provincial conference, Ontario was not among those who were prepared to accept this as at least one of the goals—the entrenchment in our Constitution of civil rights legislation. We are going to be presented with another opportunity, surely, within the next few days, at the conference in Ottawa, and I hope that the attitudes expressed so well by the Minister of Labour reading the remarks of the Prime Minister will reflect, perhaps, in a more flexible attitude that Ontario will take on that occasion.

But may I say, Mr. Speaker, that in concluding my remarks on what I hope would be a note of harmony, there is complete support on all sides for meaningful efforts to improve the human rights situation in this province, and that we look forward to the introduction of amendments which will give the citizens access to an ombudsman. We look forward to amendments that will do something about those who are suffering from poverty situations in which their human rights perhaps take a secondary position to the immediate day-to-day problems that they suffer.

I say again that we in this House have been able to prove that you can legislate an end to prejudice and a better aspect to man's humanity to man.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with most of the comments that were made by the Minister of Labour on behalf of himself and the Prime Minister this afternoon, and for those on which I would have an edgy reaction equal to that of the leader of the Opposition, I would like to join with the leader of the Opposition. Perhaps this afternoon I might most usefully not only extend tribute to the four guests who have made a monumental contribution to this field, but devote my time to an emphasis on what I think is that area that we must move into if we are going to achieve the overall objective of a greater guarantee of human rights.

I think anybody who is interested in human rights as he looks across the world today cannot help but be profoundly disturbed. As one looks, for example, at a country like Great Britain, which has had, down through history, a pretty creditable record, relatively speaking, in this field, one cannot help but be disturbed today to see that a nation that has an influx of coloured people into its midst is now faced with a rising problem of how it is going to cope with the human relations problems created by that. And when one looks at the extent to which from all walks of society a blatant racist, such as Enoch Powell, is getting support even though he is condemned by all political parties, including his own, I repeat, one is disturbed.

When one looks, for example, at a country like the United States, which has just gone through a presidential election, and notes that one of the presidential candidates got ten million votes on what is a straight racist appeal, again one is disturbed—not perhaps by the fact that a good deal of support came from the southern United States where it might be expected in view of their traditions, but particularly because of the fact that that support was drawn from all across the United States and, indeed, from some groups in American society where a great deal of educational work had been done and one had felt a great deal of progress had been made in getting the acceptance of better human relationships. I refer, quite frankly, to the fact that one of those groups is the trade union movement; in the latter stages of that campaign it was distressing to see the degree of support that came from industrial workers for a candidate like George Wallace.

But let us not, Mr. Speaker, dwell on the problems of others, and engage in the therapeutic exercise of preoccupation with them while ignoring our own. Let me come back to Ontario. And, Mr. Speaker, I want to initiate my comments with a quote from what is the preamble of the Ontario Human Rights Code:

It is public policy in Ontario that every person is free and equal in dignity and rights without regard to race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

That is the public policy in the province of Ontario.

Where I would share the edgy reaction of the leader of the Opposition is in reference to the kind of comments that the Minister of Labour made with regard to the Indian problem in the province of Ontario. This is not simply a federal problem; this is a provincial problem. The Indians are citizens in the province of Ontario, and this government cannot say this is federal jurisdiction. In fact I suggest that an accurate interpretation of the BNA Act indicates that the province has concurrent responsibility. Let us not get caught up on constitutional barriers, saying that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take the initiative to cope with the massive discrimination against Indians. The responsibility rests with this government in terms of implementing the Ontario Human Rights Code.

Which brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the point that I want to make. It is a point, quite frankly, which I have borrowed from a speech of Mr. Justice Bora Laskin to the 19th annual conference of the commission of human rights, a year or so ago. He commented on the preamble to the Ontario Human Rights Code, as follows:

The conjunction in the Ontario proclamation of the words, "dignity" and "rights", points the way to an enlarged depreciation of a social, as opposed to the purely individual, implication of discrimination. I see social concern in the term "dignity." Disadvantaged groups that have an assurance of respect for their dignity will not likely have to wage a continuous battle to secure their individual members' rights.

Let me illustrate my point, by coming back to the problem of Indians as one example of the disadvantaged groups within our society. Our human rights commission has done a very good job in seeking out individual cases of illegal discrimination. We have made considerable progress in that field. But, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to cope with the massive discrimination against our Indian population if there isn't a public policy to deal with the collective discrimination against them as a group. This can't be coped with by the human rights commission alone, its work becomes part of a co-ordinated approach of all government departments that affect the human condition in which Indians are living today.

If I may go on for a minute to the problem of those who are discriminated against because of poverty; we have had a shocking example in the last few days of a Negro in Nova Scotia who spent five months in jail because he could not pay a poll tax. This was the price of being poor. Once it was revealed, he was freed immediately. But, this kind of continuous, quiet, unseen discrimination goes on with regard to those who are poor.

Mr. Justice Bora Laskin referred to another group in his remarks—the children of parents who happen to be working class, and who think that they really don't have the right to university education, because of the fact that they are locked into an educational system that discriminates against them, and denies them the full opportunity of university education.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is this: the human rights commission has a job to do, and it has been doing it well, but if we are going to cope with the collective discrimination against groups in our society—these pockets of discrimination as the Minister refers to them—it cannot only be done by the human rights commission alone, it must be a collective approach involving many government departments.

We have had, for example, areas where this problem has emerged in a somewhat blatant fashion. In Amherstburg, the mayor appointed a committee to try to encourage employers in that area to provide more job opportunities for Negroes. We have had a committee set up by the mayor of Kenora to try to create a human bridge between the people of Kenora and the Indians who live in the neighbouring areas. But, we cannot have a piecemeal approach to these pockets of discrimination. We must have an organized collective approach—otherwise we are not going to be able to remove the collective discrimination, and in not removing it we never will be able to cope with the massive individual discrimination that is involved.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I can conclude my remarks, again by quoting from Mr. Justice Bora Laskin:

Equality before the law has in the past been conceived in primarily political and formal legal terms—for example, equal voting rights, equal standing before the court, and so on. We are beginning to carry it into social and economic fields. Presently in these fields the notion of equality before the law assumes conditions which the law itself has not, and may not be able to guarantee. What it can do, however, is at least provide an atmosphere and an opportunity for disadvantaged people to create those conditions for themselves.

Justice has a social and economic face, as well as a legal and a political face. We must surely see to it that all the faces of justice reflect the concept of social service. There is room for its greater realization in the field of human rights.

All I would like to add to this discussion this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights, is that we should recognize the need for coping with the collective discrimination of groups within our society, recognizing that if we do not act there, we can never really solve the problem of individual discrimination.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the hon. member for Scarborough Centre a point of order or of privilege?

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would waive the floor to my colleague the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), who would like to continue the discussion that was on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately there can be no further discussion of the matter. It is not a debate, it was an arrangement. Of course, I shall be guided by the rules of the House, and the desire of the members. But my understanding of the arrangement today was that the Prime Minister would make a statement, and that the leaders of the two Opposition parties would be entitled also to make a statement on this very important anniversary of a great date in human history and that it was not to develop into a debate. There is plenty of opportunity for that in the Throne Speech debate, which is going on at the present time.

If I am incorrect in my interpretation of the understanding between the parties, and the House wishes to deal with the matter otherwise, I am quite prepared to do so. Otherwise I must rule that there can be no debate on the matter, but that points of order or privilege, of course, are always available to the members.

Mr. Nixon: A point of order at this stage.

I listened to your ruling very carefully. It seems to me that this would be an appropriate occasion for members from all sides to comment on the statement that has been put before us, under these particular circumstances. However, I have another point of order I would like to bring to your attention, as soon as we leave this topic.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I assure you, sir, I had no intention of entering the debate in a contentious way at all. Given the nature of the subject matter, I wanted to share a reflection with the members of this House, and I would like to be permitted to do so. If at any moment I stepped out of order, I would, of course, be called to order. But it seems to me that on the occasion of a discussion of the—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member embarks on his remarks. The hon. leader of the Opposition has expressed his opinion, and I gather that the New Democratic Party is in accord with the view of the member for York South. Would the government House leader perhaps express the government viewpoint with respect to this?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think it is a subject which engages the attention of all hon. members, and there are many opportunities for pursuing it in this House. I think the occasion was an anniversary of an event and it was to mark this occasion that the Prime Minister wished to address himself to the members, and some of the leaders of the Opposition parties.

I think that having been accomplished, we should now proceed to regular business.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not view what the House leader said as a closure motion. I simply wanted, if I may, add this observation, Mr. Speaker. I—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak to the point of order, because we have not come to the point of dealing with it yet.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was about a meeting of the International League for Human Rights in New York on Friday night which I attended. I wanted to share one reflection with the members of this House, precisely on topic.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately there are 115 other members who have equal rights to speak. If we enlarge this right from the leaders of the parties, we would put ourselves in that position, and my ruling will be that there will be no further debate on this matter at this time. That ruling, of course, is subject to the opinion of the House.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe that the remarks of the hon. Minister of Labour on behalf of the Prime Minister were given in a spirit of celebration and commemoration.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Peacock: I am speaking to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that any other member who wishes to rise in his place will give his remarks in the same manner.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out further that a debate in this House, according to the rules, can only take place if there is a bill or motion before the House for debate. On ministerial statements the ruling has been, based on the precedents of this House as well as the rules, that the statements of Ministers before the orders of the day are not debatable, and only to be questioned for purpose of clarification.

This is a different arrangement, as I understood, between the parties, that the two Opposition party leaders should have the opportunity of joining with the leader of the government in paying tribute not only to our four honoured guests today, but to all that has been accomplished not only in our province but elsewhere in the way of civil and human rights over the past 20 years, and therefore there is no question but that any further debate is strictly out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On many occasions in the past the Prime Minister has indicated if there are other members in the House who wish to speak, he has no objections. I am a little puzzled as to why the line is drawn so sharply now, other than perhaps the Speaker is worried that the initial contribution by the Minister of Labour was so lengthy, taking up something like a half an hour.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what about order? Mr. Speaker, may I make my point this way. Last week the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) said if we are going to avoid this kind of tension in this House we have to avoid treating members as though we were a bunch of school children and you were acting as a school master. I think this whole episode this afternoon is a perfect illustration of that problem, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I might point out that neither this Speaker, nor any of his predecessors—and I presume none of his successors—wishes to have the schoolmaster's position, but this Speaker, as well as his predecessors and successors, is bound by the rules of the House. The rules are those which are made by this House and so far as I am concerned cannot lightly be set aside, and cannot be set aside by Mr. Speaker.

The rules of the House do not provide for a debate unless there is a motion or a bill before the House and therefore my ruling still stands.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, on other occasions in this House—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Members may wish to prolong it. I am standing on a point of order and I would appreciate the opportunity. On other occasions of commemorating an event—for instance St. Andrew's or St. George's, or whatever the day may be—

An hon. member: St. Patrick's day.

Mr. Lewis: —or St. Patrick's day, the leaders of the various parties stand in their places and make their respective contributions. Then members in the House, who for one reason or another may feel inclined to speak, are perfectly at liberty by way of precedent in this House to intervene. It is a precise analogy, Mr. Speaker. We are here dealing with an event which, in effect, the House is commemorating, and I think other members should have a perfect opportunity to enter, particularly when it is understood that it is not meant by way of debate.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately the remarks of both leaders of the Opposition parties smacked—if I may use such an unparliamentary term—very much of debate rather than of a statement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, let Mr. Speaker finish. I have no doubt in my mind that those remarks were prompted by statements made by the Minister and therefore we were on the verge of a debate—in fact we almost had a debate—and it is not my intention to allow this particular matter to develop into a debate. I have no fault to find, and I allowed both leaders of the Opposition parties to carry on as they did because of the fact that they were speaking, I think probably justifiably, in answer to what was said on the other side of the House. Quite proper—but we must not allow that to develop into a full-fledged debate.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): A great celebration of human rights day.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, having in mind the very essence of the subject matter which engages our attention today, I think that this is one area where, of all opportunities to waive the rules, this would be a proper day on which to exercise this. I say that to you, having in—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, there probably are other members who would like to express their views, as you yourself put it, without engaging in a debate, and from the government side of the House this would not be objectionable to us.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker's ruling still stands—there will be no debate.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order then, Mr. Speaker, in view of the interpolation of the House leader I would request from this House for no more than two minutes, unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I would say that that is a very fair suggestion and one to which Mr. Speaker would accede if the House is agreeable.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my purpose for rising is very simple, I trust it does not savour terribly of anti-climax. I was at a meeting in New York on Friday night of the International League for Human Rights, commemorating the same 20th anniversary, and indeed the 85th birthday of Roger Baldwin who, with Charles Malik and Eleanor Roosevelt, wrote the original Universal Declaration of Human Rights for the United Nations Charter. There were four speakers that evening.

The first was Senator Edward Kennedy, who directed his remarks almost exclusively to the subject of the Nigerian-Biafran civil war, and pointed out that on this commemoration of human rights it might well do to remember that something in the range of two to three million lives would probably be lost by March, 1969, unless the world intervenes. He was followed by that extraordinary Yugoslav freedom fighter Milovan Djilas, who had somehow been brought from his country to speak at the conference, and who embodied more eloquently than one can say the repression that has just taken place in Czechoslovakia.

He in turn was followed by Rene Caisson, the head of the international court at the Hague, who raised the issues of South Africa, Rhodesia, Mozambique and Angola, as the most glaring international violations of human rights. Roger Baldwin himself summed up the evening by indicating that the necessary involvement in one's own jurisdiction with individual liberties and human rights carries significance only in perspective—only measured against the perspective of the gross and critical abuses for millions of people on the international scene. I felt that our own measure in this Legislature today might have some perspective in that regard as well.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member for Scarborough Centre any further point of order or privilege?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a small point of order, just to state that we have visiting with us today in your gallery men and women from an organization known as WASP—Women Against Soaring Prices.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the House would afford me the same privilege as it has accorded the member for Scarborough West. In line with what the hon. member has stated about some of us being so preoccupied with the human rights, with which we should properly be occupied here, on our own continent, and in our own nation, I agree that we should have a great deal of concern for the human rights, which have been disregarded, of many millions of people across the world.

I am particularly anxious to remind the hon. members and the people of this province of those nations who have been subjugated by the "so-called socialist republics in Europe"—those people in Czechoslovakia whom I was honoured to visit just a few short weeks ago, at which time I saw the repression which was engaged in by the Russians and heard the Russian jack boots march up and down the streets of Prague. I am also concerned for the people in those countries such as Hungary, Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia, the Ukraine and many other countries who, today, I am afraid feel that many of us here have forgotten them.

I would think, sir, on this occasion, we should give them a word of encouragement that we, in the free countries of the world, on this great day, have not forgotten them.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who would like to ask the unanimous approval of the House to speak on this matter before we move on?

We then will go to the questions before the orders of the day. Today we will deal with them in order of seniority on the government benches, so that the hon. member for Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier) will please place his question to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit a point of order before you get into the question period.

As you know, sir, I have a question for the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) who, unfortunately, is not in his place. He telephoned to tell me the reason why he was not here and I very much appreciated that phone call. But I would say to you, sir, that my point of order has to do with the Treasurer's abridged annual report, which completed the accounts for the province ending March 31, 1968.

There is a full description of this report in this morning's Globe and Mail and in the two afternoon newspapers. It was referred to by radio news broadcasts yesterday. But, as the leader of the Opposition and as a private member of this House, I have not yet seen it.

In my view this is a serious matter—for the Treasurer to undertake to release this report and describe it to the press, radio and television without giving the members of the Legislature an opportunity even to look at it.

I do not know what the explanation is, because the Treasurer has assured me it was not his intention so to do. But this has happened in the past and this specific report happens, in my view, to be a report of considerable importance, because it indicates that our bookkeeping for the last 18 months has been considerably inefficient.

It appears that the Treasurer has now found $55 million which he did not know that he had. This brings me to my second point of order, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with two paragraphs written about this report in this morning's Globe and Mail by Mr. Donald Newman, which with your permission, I would like to read. I quote:

The report released by the government yesterday lumped the sinking fund expenditures and the operating deficit together, creating the appearance of a government miscalculation of only $12 million.

I say, in parenthesis, rather than the $55 million that the report does indicate. I go on to quote:

The two systems of reporting the fiscal position of the province are apparently political. In 1967 the Conservatives were facing an election and, seeking to keep the projected deficit within manageable proportions, they bisected the operational deficit from the sinking fund requirements.

Now, however, attempting to pry more of the revenue collected in income tax from the federal government, Ontario is putting its worst fiscal face forward in an effort to appear hard pressed.

My point of order is this. If this is a good piece of interpretive reporting on a report that is not available to the members of this House, so be it. But if in fact, it is correct, then the Treasurer of Ontario is guilty of grossly misleading not only this House, but the people of this province, and should be severely censured by motion of this House.

I believe that if this misrepresentation is intentional that his usefulness to the government and to the people of this province—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, get off. Come on—

Mr. Nixon: —the people of this province particularly at this time, when we are approaching the government of Canada for important negotiations, leaves his usefulness seriously in doubt and he should tender his resignation under those circumstances.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): He was out only $770 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! Order!

May I say that, with respect to the first point of order I am sure that not only the hon. Treasurer but certainly Mr. Speaker agrees with the leader of the Opposition. I shall take it up with the Treasurer and the leader of the House in order to assure that the members of this House are given the information to which they are entitled, on first release.

With respect to the second point of order, of course, that must remain until the hon. Treasurer is here so that he may have an opportunity to defend himself and explain his interpretation of his statement and his rebuttal of the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Sargent: You need two sets of books.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I was rising on a matter of privilege.

Yesterday, sir, while I was absent from the House, engaged in another sector of the public domain, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman)—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): What, another case?

Mr. Sopha: That is another sector of the public domain.

The hon. member for High Park attributed some remarks to me which I have had the opportunity to read in the rough copy of Hansard. Now at best, his purveying of those remarks were at second hand, because apparently they come from a person by the name of Starowicz.

I say to you, sir, and all members of the House, through you, that I have no recollection of ever having spoken to a Mr. Starowicz. I have no recollection of having met any person by that name.

However, I only rise because included in those remarks are expletives of a nature that I am neither accustomed to use, nor am I wont to use, as will be corroborated by all those members who know me.

I say this in order to correct the record. I might add that the comments in the remarks that refer to the International Nickel Company of Canada, I must say, in all honesty, reflect observations that I have made on the floor of this House.

It is to be noted in the quotation by the member for High Park that I am purported to have used a phrase to the effect that I did not wish to be quoted.

That is significant, sir, because finally, I say to you, in raising this matter of privilege, that the member for High Park of course, in the whole piece so far as I was concerned, was acting completely in character. As is usual, his whole reference to me in that context was part of the ordinary operation guttersnipe, of which he is a master.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the remarks you have just heard. In order to make sure that the quotation, which I used, was accurate—

Mr. Sopha: This is not debatable.

Mr. Bullbrook: What point of order is this?

Mr. Shulman: The quotation which I used was accurate—sir, I am rising on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

The hon. member for High Park will realize that there can be no debate either on a matter of privilege. If he has a point of privilege, so far as he is concerned, or a point of order, he has the floor.

Mr. Shulman: Sir, I am rising on a point of privilege. The point of privilege is that the member for Sudbury has suggested that I misled this House in a quotation.

In order to set the House quite straight I wish to inform you, sir, and through you, every member of this House, that to ensure that that quotation was accurate I had a special copy of that portion of my speech printed off a week before, which I personally supplied to the member for Sudbury as he sat in that chair. He made no objection then to that quotation, sir.

Mr. Sopha: I treated it as a joke.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has a statement.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret that I announce to this Legislature today the death of the hon. William M. Nickle, QC. Mr. Nickle passed away late last evening and funeral services will be held at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Kingston at 2 p.m. on Wednesday.

Mr. Nickle was born and educated in Kingston and at Osgoode Hall in Toronto. He served overseas in the first great war as a private in the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry and later as an officer with the 21st Canadian Infantry battalion. He was wounded three times and was awarded the MBE, the Military Cross and the Medal of Honour from France.

From 1951 to 1963 Mr. Nickle represented the riding of Kingston and the Islands with distinction and devotion. Always the champion of the rights of the people, his death will be deeply felt by the people of Kingston and his many friends in all parts of this province.

He served in the Cabinet under the hon. Leslie Frost as Provincial Secretary and later as Minister of Planning and Development. He was a devoted public servant, fine friend and a wise counsellor who was of immense help to me on many occasions.

I know that the members of this House would wish to join me at this time in paying this tribute to him and extending to his wife and family our sincere sympathy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words about the bad news the member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps) has just put before us.

The hon. Mr. Nickle was no longer a member of this House when I was first elected, but I have met him on many occasions. I am sure, sir, you realize that his reputation has come down through those who had followed him, not only the member for Kingston and the Islands, but many friends who are still in this Legislature. We certainly join with the other members in conveying our shock and our condolences to Mrs. Nickle and the family.

Mr. MacDonald: I would just like to add a word without repeating unnecessarily the comments of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon).

I was in the House with the Hon. William Nickle. We had many an interesting tangle, but he was a warm human being who forgot his differences off the floor of the House. When you met him out in the hall afterwards you could also forget them.

I would like to join with the other members of the House in expressing our sense of bereavement to his family and all his friends.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South now perhaps would place his question.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Public Works.

Has suitable accommodation been found in Timmins to house all Department of Mines offices in one building?

If so, what is the location of this accommodation?

If not, when will such accommodation become available?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is "no".

The answer to the second question is that no suitable location could be found.

The answer to the third part of the question: The Department of Public Works is presently planning to advertise to have a building constructed to be leased for these purposes. If approval is obtained and satisfactory arrangements can be completed, a building could be provided by late 1969.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question of the Minister of Health.

A report in the New York Times states that a heart transplant operation costs up to $50,000 and the specialist further estimates that 10,000 people might be candidates for new hearts in one year. He further estimates that kidney transplants cost about $17,750.

Will the government of Ontario consider legislation to set up a special fund of approximately $500,000 to pay these special costs in Ontario this year?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, special legislation as suggested by the hon. member would not be necessary to pay what is referred to as "special costs" in connection with these cases. All costs of hospitalization under the standard ward level of care arising out of medical necessity are already covered by legislation.

Mr. Sargent: In this amount?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Amount does not come into it, Mr. Speaker, as long as it is in keeping with the recognized rates.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): A question of the hon. Minister of Health:

Will the nurses who have been employed as part-time staff in Ontario psychiatric hospitals up to September 15, 1968, receive their vacation pay as prescribed by Department of Labour regulations?

If so, when? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): I have a question of the hon. Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker:

Have certain problems of design in connection with the GMC ambulances recently acquired by the Metropolitan Toronto ambulance service been brought to the attention of the Minister?

Is it the intention of the department to subsidize the acquisition of more of these ambulances for service in the province?

If so, will the design problems be rectified?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the ambulances referred to recently purchased by Metropolitan Toronto ambulance services have not complied fully with the specifications which were required in the tender and therefore they have been returned in succession for rectification.

We have been informed of no problem in the design of the vehicle, but only in the lack of measuring up to specifications.

The emergency health services of OHSC have developed these specifications for conversion of a number of types of vehicles to ambulance purposes. Specifications for any new ambulance procured in the province will be subject to the approval of the commission.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has two questions of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question to the Minister of Transport, of which he has already had notice.

On March 21, 1968 and May 16, 1968, I asked the Minister of Transport the following questions:

(1) Will the Minister advise the House if an ordinary citizen can obtain a complete list of car owners in the province of Ontario?

(2) Is a complete file of the Ontario motor vehicles branch available to R. L. Polk Company?

(3) If the answer is "yes"; what does R. L. Polk pay for this service?

The Minister replied:

(1) A duplicate list is not available and to provide one would be "time consuming."

(2) The only surplus copy—that is the carbon copy to registration and renewal—is made available.

(3) Approximately $35,000 this year, in addition supplies our department—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member's copy as filed with me is $35 million.

Mr. Sargent: Well, $35,000 was the answer he gave. That is what it should be—that is what you should be getting, but you are only getting $35,000 for it. That is the point.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Continue with the question, please.

Mr. Sargent: Therefore, I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker:

(1) In view of the fact that R. L. Polk does not tender on this very valuable information list which is, in truth, an exclusive monopoly worth about $500,000 a year, and in view of the fact that scores of advertising agencies and firms would like to bid on this, will the Minister advise if he will open this lucrative deal up for open bid by interested parties?

(2) Since the Minister advised on May 6, 1968, that this list would be available to the public "when the department is fully automated"; will he tell the House when it will be available to the public at the same rates as it is available to R. L. Polk Company?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the mechanization of the vehicle registration file is proceeding and, assuming that no unforeseen problems arise, it should be completed in 1970.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this is—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will await the reply to the question. He was allowed to ask it.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: If at that time it is decided to make this information available, it will be provided to all interested parties on the same terms.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: I will try.

Mr. Sargent: Realizing it is costing the taxpayers $500,000 a year, does the Minister agree that this is the way to treat taxpayers' money—to disregard this money?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, since the premise on which the question is placed is entirely false, I am unable to answer it.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not false.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is calling me a liar.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I regret to say that my interpretation of the hon. Minister's reply to the hon. member is not the same as the member's. The hon. Minister has stated that the premises used by the member are false, not that the hon. member is falsifying anything.

Therefore, I would suggest that the hon. member and the Minister might get together and sort this out.

In the meantime he has another question before the orders of the day.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how a Minister can say a statement is false when he does not know the value of the property until he tenders for it.

So the statement still stands, $500,000, and—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

The hon. member has no point of order in that particular area.

Mr. Sargent: I think I have.

A question to the Minister again—the same Minister.

An hon. member: Eddie's happy hour.

Mr. Sargent: They are a shaggy bunch over there.

An hon. member: We are looking at a shaggy bunch too.

Mr. Sargent: Glad to have the member back.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: Question to the Minister:

What steps have been taken to implement the recommendation of the report of organized crime that drivers' licences be required to bear a photograph of the owner, stamped or so effaced to prevent tampering, as found on page 122 of the report?

Two, will the Minister support a bill by the Opposition—crazy question—to amend The Highway Traffic Act to put this into force?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, as we fail to identify this mentioned report of organized crime—with reference to drivers' licences on page 122—I am unable to answer the question.

In my copy of the Roach report of December 11, 1961, the material on page 122 is not germane.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps—

Mr. Sargent: Will the Minister have a supplementary on this one?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could furnish, to the Minister, between now and tomorrow—

Mr. Sargent: No, I will just ask him a supplementary question. Forgetting about where I found the material—will he go along with the idea of putting a picture of each person on his own licence? What is the Minister's opinion of that?

An hon. member: Too shaggy.

Mr. Sargent: Eyeball to eyeball—

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of complete details on it I am not prepared to commit myself.

An hon. member: Dead from the eyeballs both ways.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth has a question.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: How does he hold his job down?

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. What progress has been made by the national Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and The Ontario Department of Energy and Resources Management, which was formed for the purpose of revising the conditions of the agreement of January, 1961, signed by the federal and provincial governments, to offer maximum flood control protection for the water shed at the Upper Thames River and all those downstream municipalities which are adjacent to the Thames River between London and Lake St. Clair?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, in January, 1967, an inter-governmental committee was established consisting of three representatives from the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and three representatives from The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

This committee was assigned the task of reviewing the current agreements on shared costs water management programmes in Ontario to establish criteria guidelines and standards for the purpose of:

- (a) re negotiation of existing agreements and,
- (b) the negotiation of future agreements.

The committee has had ten meetings to date and has commissioned engineering studies to determine a standard method of assessing potential flood damages and to develop methods of determining secondary flood control benefits.

These studies have now been received and are being incorporated into a manual which will provide complete information to conservation authorities and consultants on water management programme development and procedures to be used in cost benefit analysis.

The committee hopes to have the manual completed early in 1969. This work is an essential step which must be taken before actual re-negotiation can begin. It is expected that the latter work will commence immediately upon completion of the manual.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, why are local offices of Ontario Housing Corporation informing OHC tenants that none qualifies for the residential property tax rebate, although no regulations under section 8(1) of the Act have been approved or gazetted?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, to the same Minister. Will the Minister inform the House of the extent of the subsidy involved in full recovery projects in Hamilton which prevent tenants in such projects from receiving their tax rebate?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I pointed out the other day in answer to a similar question, limited dividend housing rents are not market or even near market. Most of these families—

An hon. member: The member means a full recovery?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Most of these families have had income increases over the years. Had other houses been available or had they been converted to the geared-to-income scale, they would today be paying a much higher rent and perhaps if at or near market they would get the rebate.

Therefore, we do not believe we would be justified in view of the low rent scale they have enjoyed to date, using the taxpayer's dollar to extend to them in addition to the low rent they have had for many years, the rent rebate.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, these are the same people who will most likely be able to take advantage of the OHC and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation offer to sell to them their present premises when the new mortgage arrangements get into effect.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, why was the pamphlet entitled the "Tax Reduction Notice" and the related newspaper advertising written without any explanation of section 8(1) of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1968, as it applies to tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the pamphlet entitled the "Tax Reductoin Notice" and the newspaper advertising was designed to inform landlords and tenants and homeowners of privately owned residential property in Ontario, of their rights and obligations under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act.

A group of people who would be eligible under section 8(1) are probably something much less than one per cent of the population. Therefore, no specific reference was made to them in the pamphlet.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to my question of the Minister. Will he not agree that in light of the distribution of these pamphlets to tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation as though the reduction applied to them, and in view of his statements during the debate on The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act in the last session, would he not re-consider amending section 8(1) to make it clear specifically as to the manner in which this tax rebate will apply to public housing tenants?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, that is being done by the regulation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Will the Minister explain why Pickering township was included in the urban centred region of Oshawa as outlined in the Minister's speech on regional government, when all social, economic, planning and transportation factors have shown a strong orientation toward Metro Toronto for the past 10 years?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to reply to this question, perhaps at some length.

I think first of all, it should be said that in the creation of any regional government or any new municipality there must be a point of beginning. Boundaries are always difficult and I suppose they are somewhat arbitrary. There are a number of other factors and allow me to enumerate some of them.

There is a population of approximately 42,000 in the three municipalities of Pickering township, Ajax and Pickering village. I think we are talking about the whole area and to exclude these three municipalities from our Oshawa centred region would mean that the city of Oshawa, with a population of 80,000, would completely dominate the new region. On the other hand, with a population of approximately 42,000 only in those three municipalities, representation as a borough on the Metropolitan Toronto Council would be very difficult, if not impossible.

The concept of urban centred regions is one generally recognized as a suitable criteria to guide the restructuring of municipal government in most parts of Ontario. However, in the case of Toronto, the influence of this centre Toronto predominates over such a vast area of Ontario that the concept in this case is inappropriate. Other values such as the identification of the individual with a political unit, easy access to the administration and so on, operate to limit the political unit to a size less than the area of urban influence. From this point of view, Metro's boundaries will always appear arbitrary in the future.

Another way of putting this, of course, would be to say that the area of influence of Metropolitan Toronto is half, I suppose, of southern Ontario.

Pickering provides a sufficient area between the Metropolitan boundary and the Oshawa core urban area for extensive residential development. The added influence of Oshawa over this area results from its position as an urban centre and will help somewhat to offset the orientation towards Toronto. Thus by the creation of political, educational and social facilities in Oshawa that serve the Pickering area, some help will be granted in reducing pressures on facilities and in particular on transportation corridors of Metropolitan Toronto.

Each of the goals plans in the MTARTS report, volume 2, views as a desirable objective the lessening of development pressures on Toronto and the Lakeshore corridor to its west. Several new communities—they call them sub-regional centres—are proposed for areas east of Metro. The object of these centres is to create employment opportunities related to areas of residential development, thereby reducing pressure on transportation corridors, again in the Toronto urban core. As mentioned above the simulation of the interest of Pickering residents in the Oshawa urban area resulting from centring this area for administrative purposes on Oshawa, again would add impetus to the attainment of these goals.

The present programme of the government of Ontario that is designed to reform and restructure local government, considers as particularly valuable the interest, concern, and participation of local residents. In all studies that have been instituted to date, much effort has gone into discovering what the area residents consider to be the most appropriate form of local government for their needs. Similar opportunities will be assured the residents of Pickering in a review of an Oshawa-centred region. From a practical viewpoint, a structure for local or regional government in the Oshawa-Pickering area will emerge and develop over a long period of time. This, again, will foster participation and interest.

In Metropolitan Toronto, the township of Pickering would be effectively submerged due to the predominance of the developed municipalities. In Metropolitan Toronto, a few areas remain that are as yet undeveloped. As a result, organizations that are established to plan future requirements, or install required services, show a particular specialization for dealing with problems of high density and concentrated development.

For example, the Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board will become increasingly concerned with problems of urban renewal; with maintaining adequate open space in heavily populated areas; and associated programmes.

It is conceivable that in this atmosphere the difficult problems of a rapidly developing municipality would receive more competent treatment and more thorough treatment from an agency located in the Oshawa-centred region that could deal more exclusively with similar areas.

The inclusion of Pickering in Metropolitan Toronto would increase considerably the length of Metro boundaries facing on areas as yet undeveloped. This would perpetuate existing problems of planning and co-ordinating the provision of services in these rural areas.

Those are some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, which led us to the conclusions which we have arrived at. I suppose there are a couple of other reasons. The reeve of the township of Pickering has expressed rather strong views. I may say that the municipalities of Pickering village and Ajax have expressed equally strong views the other way. I do not think it probably escaped the notice of the members of the House that the city of Toronto expressed rather strong views on this particular subject. All these things led us to the conclusion that Pickering should be included in this new region which will be created to the east. I met with the group from the Oshawa area—Ontario county and part of Huron county—last Friday, and the reeve of Pickering was there and I indicated I would be glad to sit down and discuss this matter further with him, which I will.

Mr. Good: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question? There are two, I will embody them together.

First of all, is the Minister aware that the attitude of Oshawa council is that Pickering is, in fact, now a part of Metro, and that they have expressed publicly they would not want to touch it with a ten-foot pole?

Secondly, would the Minister assure the House that, in keeping with his programme as outlined on page 23 of his speech, consultation with people of the area, whose desire it is to be a part of Metro, would be carried out before finalization?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I indicated in the latter part of my remarks that I was prepared to meet with the reeve of Pickering. I am prepared to meet with anyone. In answer to the first part of the question, no, I was not aware that Oshawa council had expressed such a positive view.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the House that I inadvertently have demoted the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) and I would ask the hon. member for Peterborough to address his question to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour. Could the Minister elaborate on the chief conciliation officer's public comment that "it is a difficult situation" in relation to the Peterborough Examiner strike? Is it the company's refusal to accept a union security clause and a restriction on the transfer of personnel which is the main cause of the "difficulty"?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for Peterborough, all strikes are difficult situations; it is a matter of degree. But the chief conciliation officer has just recently met with representatives of the parties and he will continue to meet and will do all he can to assist the parties to reach an agreement.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker? I understand that the union and the company met yesterday. Is there any definite date for future meetings or are meetings continuing today and tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Bales: The meetings are not at the moment continuing, but they will be continuing within the next few days, dependent upon certain additional information that is required.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a question for the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer I received from the Minister of Health I would like to hold this question until some later date perhaps.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may withdraw the question and resubmit it if he wishes. We must clear the deck daily; so this question will be marked "withdrawn".

Mr. Makarchuk: I will withdraw the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite free to place it at a later date.

The hon. member for Yorkview has a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Young: The question is, Mr. Speaker: Does the new city near Uxbridge, as announced by revenue properties this morning, fit in with the MTARTS' recommendations, or with the Minister's plans for the area north of Metro?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I received a brochure announcing plans for a new city in the township of Uxbridge. It is a very imaginative proposal. I have not had an opportunity as yet to have the proposal checked against the goals plans as set out in the MTARTS programme.

The evaluation of the goals plans is presently being carried out by The Department of Treasury and Economics, supported by an inter-departmental task force. I would expect that it would be several months before a plan is adopted by the government, so that no definite answer to the proposal is possible at this time.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in the way of a supplementary question, is the Minister aware that the news last evening indicated that the present owners of this property had discussed this whole matter with the government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I did not hear the news programme last night, no.

Mr. Young: It has been discussed, then?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I think it is fair to say that it has been discussed. They brought in the brochure yesterday. They indicated to us two or three months ago they were going to do so. We have not indicated to them that it fits into the goals plans as far as MTARTS is concerned because we do not know which goals plan may be chosen.

Mr. Young: Then this means that Rubin is making the decision for the government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I would not say that, because before that city, or any other city, goes ahead, there is going to have to be approval.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough will ask his final question?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Has the Minister yet investigated the charge made in the report of the Eric Hardy consulting firm that the town of Trenton has been granting bonuses and assessment advantages in order to attract industry?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for this—the report has not yet been received. I do not know whether it was a combination of not correctly requesting it, or the request not being correctly interpreted. At any rate I understand that today it is in the mails; we should have it shortly. When I have received it and considered it, I will be in a position then to answer the question, but at this point we have not received it as yet.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, in light of your statement made with reference to the question or statement made by the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) on December 5, 1968, Mr. Speaker, I should say that I asked a question of the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) touching on the rate of illegitimate births in Ontario. That question was properly then directed to the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch). The Provincial Secretary, Mr. Speaker, has today handed me the answer to the question. I thought I would draw that to your attention, in order that the lists might be purged.

Mr. Speaker: I am very grateful to the hon. member for drawing it to my attention, because otherwise this matter would still remain on my records, and I think since the question was asked in the House, the proper procedure was for the answer to have been given by another member of the Ministry, so that it would appear in the records of the House. I will endeavour to draw that to the attention of the members of the Treasury benches, so that in future everyone will have the advantage of the learning and information which is contained in answers to the questions which the members ask. I acknowledge the courtesy of the hon. member.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, in light of your statement, you will then pardon me if I just read the answer into the record for the reasons stated by you. The statement that was sent to me is as follows:

Mr. George Ben, MPP, Humber, asked the following question before the orders of the day, December 5, 1968, to the hon. Provincial Secretary.

What is the rate of illegitimate births in Ontario for 1966, 1967 and to date 1968?

The rate per thousand live births for 1966 was 64.2. This is based on the population of 131,942, of which there were 8,476 illegitimate births. The rate for 1967 was 70.1 ptl births, and this was based on total births for 1967 of 127,509 of which 8,935 were illegitimate. No figures are available for 1968 since the returns will not be closed until approximately February 15, 1969, and the rates per annum will then be computed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, before the orders of the day. When this session began, placed on our desks were copies of the report of the committee appointed to enquire into the report about the pollution of air, soil and water. It seems the report constitutes a serious indictment of government policies. When will the Minister of Health bring forth legislation contingent on the report, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that the copies of the report were placed on the members' desks after the report was presented or introduced by the Minister, and we all watched the pages delivering them. Secondly, of course, the hon. member has asked a question, and has not raised any point of order.

The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to rise on a matter of privilege on behalf of the New Democratic Party and myself as a member of the standing committee on labour. I had expected a report from the committee on the disorganization of the meeting this morning to come before the House, which would have given me the opportunity to raise my point of protest.

My point is this, Mr. Speaker: The meeting was to organize the standing committee on labour—was scheduled to start at 10.30. Several members arrived at that time. Subsequently we elected the member for Kingston and the Islands as chairman of the committee, and also the member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman) as the vice-chairman, in absentia. Shortly after that motion was carried, the member for Kingston and the Islands, entered the meeting room, was informed by the Clerk what business had taken place, and that he was elected the chairman of the committee. Without taking his seat as chairman, he again left the meeting.

My protest is this, Mr. Speaker: It is either an organizational affront to the committee members, or an indiscreet discourtesy. We had attempted after he left the meeting to give instructions from the committee to arrange activities of that particular standing committee for the future, as we know it is a committee that has no regular schedule but is only called on the wish of the chairman. I deplore this action, when we realize that standing committees are an important function in the work of the Legislature. I hope that the chairman will at least offer an apology and help us to get the committee operating in a way that will contribute to the work of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the hon. member that while I am sure that all members of the House are interested to hear of these difficulties, once the committees are struck and the members appear at their meeting, these matters are matters for the committee to deal with, unless the committee refuses to and then the proper report is brought to the House. Therefore I would suggest to the hon. member who has brought the matter up, that he and the other members of the committee arrange for the matter to be dealt with by the committee, and thereafter if there is any action required by vote of the House or through Mr. Speaker, I am sure that it will be taken up upon a proper report to the House.

THE ONTARIO HURRICANE RELIEF FUND ACT, 1955

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill 16, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

DAMAGE BY FUMES ARBITRATION ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines) moves second reading of Bill 23, An Act to amend The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale has the floor.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just two brief comments on the second reading of this bill.

The first comment is that, when The Air Pollution Control Act was introduced and passed through this House in 1967, I at that time asked the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) whether it was intended that the exclusion from the arbitration procedure and the negotiation procedure under The Air Pollution Control Act of arbitrations under The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act would be continued indefinitely, or whether it was intended to co-ordinate them within the one statute. The Minister at that time replied that in the initial instance it was decided to continue The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act, but that that would be integrated under the single Air Pollution Control Act as soon as possible.

At the time of the estimates last year, on the vote under this for the estimates of the department relating to the arbitrator under this Act, I again asked the same question and I also asked at that time how many arbitrations had taken place. I was informed that there had not been any arbitrations for some three years. I also asked whether or not the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) had taken any steps to co-ordinate with the Minister of Health in order to eliminate this statute or make a decision as to policy under The Air Pollution Control Act, so that there would be one statute providing for the co-ordination of all air pollution control in the province. The Minister at that time, in his friendly and rather facetious way, said that when the session was over, if it was ever completed, he would sit down with the Minister and decide what was going to be done.

Now we find, of course, that he is bringing in an Act to amend The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act, which would indicate that no thought is being given to its co-ordination and integration under The Air Pollution Control Act. Secondly, although there have been no arbitrations for some three years, we are now increasing the sum which will be claimed under this statute to defray the expenses of the arbitrator from some $30,000 to $50,000.

I have not had an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to study the Hall report on pollution at Port Maitland other than to read the recommendations, but certainly one of the principal matters which is referred to in here is the lack of co-ordination between the various government departments in matters relating to industrial pollution. I would like to know whether the Minister of Mines is continuing to go along on his own road, and has decided to maintain The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act within the purview of his department, entirely relating to sulphur dioxide or sulphur fume damage, or whether he is consulting with the Minister of Health or the other branches of government to determine what can be done to begin to get the kind of co-ordinated air pollution control that is required in this province.

These are matters which normally one would not raise had they not been raised on other occasions, and had not, on each of the other occasions, no definitive statement been made by the Minister. I think on the second reading of this bill it is incumbent on the Minister to make a definitive statement as to what his intention is about this particular statute and whether he intends to carry on some aspect of pollution control in the province. And if he does intend to do so, whether or not he believes that this statute—which is now many years old and which appears from a simple reading of it to be totally inadequate—is to be under his department or whether he is going to bring in a revised statute.

For example, Mr. Speaker, there is no reference in this statute to any damage which may be caused to any human being as a result of sulphur fumes. Nor is there any reference in this statute to damage which may be caused to livestock because of sulphur fumes. It is very limited in its application, and it is exceedingly confusing if one endeavours to compare the similar provisions of The Air Pollution Control Act, relating to other damages by other fumes, to this statute, one wouldn't know what action could be taken in the event of sulphur fumes causing damage to livestock, and of course there appears to be no recourse for any damages which may be caused to human beings as a result of sulphur fumes.

These are my views, Mr. Speaker. This is our serious criticism of not just this bill, but the principle of a bill which is introduced apparently just to make certain marginal changes in the bill without in any way dealing with the fundamental problem of air pollution control in the province.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Along the lines mentioned by the hon. member for Riverdale, I am concerned in this respect also. We have a general application of The Air Pollution Control Act and in this specific legislation vested within the Minister of Mines relating to the emanation of sulphur fumes. Now I in my maiden speech in this House discussed with you, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues here, the question of possible fumigation in our area from the operation of the Hydro electric plant south of Courtriant. I am wondering more in the nature of an enquiry, if we are going to be faced with specific legislation, contemplated in this Act, relating to the emission of sulphur dioxide, is this within the legislative responsibility of the Minister of Mines?

It seems to me that we might be faced with an interpretative aspect from some board or tribunal saying, in effect, that situations arising out of fumigation in whole or in part by Hydro might not fall within the purview of this Act, it might not also fall within the purview of The Air Pollution Control Act. I want to question the Minister in this respect, whether he is of the opinion that the wording "were damages occasioned directly or indirectly to crops, trees or other vegetation by sulphur fumes arising from smelting, grossly refining, or otherwise treating ores or minerals" would apply to the situation, sir, that might result from partial or total fumigation as a result of the production of hydro electric power through steam generation.

Mr Speaker: The hon member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. During the estimates last year in this department we mentioned this Act and its limited coverage. First of all, because it never did properly cover the situation, but second because the government has a clause—a rider—that is attached to most of the Crown land deeds, as they are sold to the individual, that prevents or takes away his right to arbitration for sulphur damage.

Now if the government is going to say that this Act covers sulphur dioxide damage, and then with the other hand refuses the right to a group of people by legislation of this very government, then I can see no reason for this to be even on the statute. And I would ask this Minister if he would care to comment on what I have said in view of what he said during the estimates, that he would look into the situation, and do something about it.

Mr Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I just have a short point, Mr. Speaker, as to who does the evaluation for the assessment of sulphur damage in the Sudbury district. I might be wrong, but I understand it is International Nickel Company's own man. If this is the case, then I think in this bill there should be a clarification of who is doing the assessment and it should be a government agency rather than the International Nickel Company itself. And I ask the Minister, if this is the case, to see that this will be corrected.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I wish to raise the point, Mr. Speaker, that I believe this bill is wrong in principle, that it has become so hoary with tradition in its present form that it is to assume the posture of King Canute in speaking against the tide to attempt to deter this Minister of this government from this method of dealing with the very vexatious problems. And in considering this statute of course, we must remember the background. It was another government, back in 1941 or 1942 that through an Order-in-Council, the basis of which I never took the trouble to ascertain—that is to say, its statutory foundation—but in any event by an Order-in-Council, that government of that day exempted all lands which of the time of its passing were vested in the Crown from damage from sulphur fumes. That is to say, that presently, when the Crown makes a conveyance in fee of its lands in the areas which I represent—I don't know about other areas, but certainly in the Sudbury area—then those lands are exempt from claims for sulphur fumes damage. That's no small matter, because that applies to a large geographic area, and every year the Crown makes grants of a substantial amount of lands in fee. But the principle here of course is in the derogation of common law right, that is to say at common law the owner of land would have the right to the process of the ordinary courts to come against those persons or corporations which emit noxious fumes. And the state, as I say, a long time ago decided as a matter of principle—in fact this government in this 25 years of power decided there is a matter of principle—that hereafter individual owners of land would be exempt from process in the ordinary courts. Now, a good many of the lands in the Sudbury area are subject to easement of both the International Nickel Co. and the Falconbridge Nickel Mines, which represents the transaction of bargain and sale where the individuals have sold an easement on their lands for the passage over them, and the injurious affection by the emission of sulphur fumes. And most often it can be revealed that that right thus sold by the individual is traded for a consideration of very modest proportions indeed.

I think I can simply say that the jurisdiction of this statute and in the carrying out of the principle enunciated in it, the sulphur fumes assessor could by no stretch of the imagination be called a busy man. I would think that if he were to deal with six claims a year then that would be an unusual year. I don't think he deals with anywhere near that number, for the reason that I have set out—on the exemption of the land granted from the Crown those large areas that have been purchased by the company, and leaves a very modest amount of land indeed, over which the sulphur fumes arbitrator has jurisdiction.

From that point of view, from the point of view of its deprivation, it is wrong in principle, but that is part and parcel of a demonstrated attitude on the part of this government. That principle has been acknowledged in other statutes and in some subtle ways that the common law right shall be divested of the individual. Another statute is the famous one that applies to operations of what was called the KVP Company. I mention it in passing and only for reasons of analogy, where this Legislature of 1952 or 1953 after—under the aegis of several large majorities at that time exempted the KVP Company from all processes in the court in relation to injurious affection of riparian owners on the Spanish River.

More subtle ways are the unforgettable declamation of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, who appears to lay it down as a matter of axiom that in any industry where 25 people are employed—that appears to be the magic number—then any amount of deprecation by way of pollution is acceptable.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): There are only 14 over there now.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, only 14 employed—

Mr. Sargent: Fifty-four members of the government absent. Pretty sad affair.

Mr. Sopha: I trust the Hansard reporter got that. My friend, the member for Grey-Bruce, said there are 54 Conservative members absent.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): The member for Sudbury always empties the Chamber.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I trust the Hansard reporter got that.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, that is true, that is one of the burdens, the crosses I have to bear, but I do it with all the fortitude that I can muster, and all that sort of thing. That was a very significant contribution made by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), which is revelatory of the principle of this statute. He appears to say on behalf of the government that he is the responsible Minister, that the essential consideration is that the economy shall continue to run at full blast and on no account must we let the inhibition of attempting to correct pollution interfere with the running of the economy.

I am reminded of the announcer on CFRB who said in the small hours of one morning—he appears to be very taken up with this matter of pollution, especially of the atmosphere, and he said:

They say it will make the country bankrupt if they are forced to correct the hazard to people's lungs. Well, maybe we have come to the point where I am willing to accept a few bankruptcies.

Of course, to say that, poses a Hobson's choice with which the responsible Ministers are faced.

It is absolutely clear to me by the introduction of this bill, that the government intends to continue the policy, that privileges shall be given to the corporate enterprise and the industrial entrepreneurs. Now the Minister is saying to this amendment that the same policy pursued here upon respect of sulphur fumes is going to be applied to other forms of pollutant.

Well, I am really sorry, I say in conclusion, that that is the enunciated policy of the government. I am very glad the Minister of Health is here to hear me remark, to remind him that for some time I have been in correspondence with him about this very grievous problem and have been waiting, along with my friend, the member for Sudbury East, for some definitive announcement of what is to be done to abate once and for all this nuisance and this grave hazard to health that exists in the Sudbury area.

And I say to you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Mines, to other members of the House, that so far as I am concerned, that the only acceptable solution will not be the tinkering of amendments such as this, but the only acceptable solution will be total abatement of the nuisance.

Well, I have really come the belief, as I witness what this affluent society is doing in its pursuit of the gew-gaws that attend affluence and how I conjure up how future generations may look back upon us and condemn us for our folly; I really believe that the only solution of this matter of pollution is that we will have to decree as an order of the state that all solids, whether they exist in suspension, in liquid, or whether they are emitted as solids in gases, will have to be reduced to a solid state and carried away and put on some appropriate part of the surface of the earth.

There is no problem in northern Ontario, there is no problem, there are vast spaces that are amenable to the deposit of solids. All you have to do is look at the slag dumps of International Nickel that represent one form of waste that has accumulated over a half a century to appreciate how relatively small a part of the planet is necessary for the dumping of solid wastes.

I am told that in Germany, in West Germany, it is the law of the land that no industry pollutes watersheds and no industry is permitted to emit noxious gases. They must be reduced to the solid state and piled up.

Having said that, I also reveal that I stated publicly at one time and no one from International Nickel Company, which company seems to get a lot of publicity around here lately, but then again it is one of the industrial giants of the world, no one from that company ever disputed me when I said that I did not think it was unreasonable—let me interpolate here. The Minister of Health is dealing with them—and maybe they are saying to them, let us just hypothesize for a moment, we will not be too wild, Mr. Speaker, maybe they are saying to the Minister of Health: “Well, look, if you force us to do that, it is going to cost us four or five million dollars.” Now, suppose we select that figure as a ball park figure, suppose that is the dialogue between them and the Minister of Health: “It will cost us $5 million.”

Well, I have said publicly and they never disputed it, that we owe it to posterity to correct this evil now. That perhaps the International Nickel Company might be required to use one year's profits; one year's profit would not be too great a price to pay, far preferable than the fooling around that is encompassed within the four corners of this statute, because that is a very apt way to describe it, this is to fool around with the problem rather than meet it head on.

But from the point of view of our debt, as we witness the deprecation that goes on, the ghastly destruction that is happening in the Sudbury area where this year the damage from sulphur fumes threatened, not only threatened but caused great havoc in that beautiful recreation area that we know to the south and west as the Penage Lake area, well known to the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle). The Minister of Lands and Forests is thoroughly aware of the great destruction that is taking place in front of his eyes and those of his officials. His officials are sore upset about it, as he indeed must be himself.

And, as we watch that and when, on the other hand, we contemplate the damage that must be done to the respiratory systems of the inhabitants of the area—and the biologists, the bio-chemists, the pathologists, they have not been able to definitively tell us that. I better correct that split infinitive—“to tell us definitely” about the nature of that damage.

Well, as we witness those things, then as the member for Sudbury, standing here, am

I responsible when I declaim that the $130 million that that company harvests every year, is that too great a price for us to pay, in terms of cold cash, in preserving the heritage intact for future generations?

Having asked the question, I answer laconically by saying I think not, that it is not too great a price. There are some things on this planet more important than the business experience of a large American corporation that we permit to come in here and harvest our natural resources. Certainly they must come here with a sense of responsibility to the people who must live in that area.

So I, for one—if it were meaningful at all, I would vote against this step. I would vote against it. And it may be that we will divide the House yet on it, because this does not, in any meaningful way, help to correct the situation. That is in the hands of the Minister of Health.

He told my friend from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) last week, as he told me in a letter a few weeks previously, but I sent my letter to the news media. They did not bother to print it—my letter—the Minister's reply. I am glad to see my friend from Sudbury East got across to the people. But he is still dickering with the International Nickel Company. They must have worn him out, because he has gone to sleep at this moment. They must be tough bargainers.

You might tell him, when he has a little snooze, Mr. Speaker, that one of the reasons you declined to rehire Charlie Mitchell was that he used to sleep in the corner over there. Charlie Mitchell used to sleep. I said to the Speaker that Alex Mackenzie used to sleep most of the time. The member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) sleeps a good deal.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): At least I am in the Legislature every day.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, that is great—even if he is asleep.

I have made the point I think. It boils down to this, that the Minister of Health says the International Nickel Company needs more time to submit more proposals to him.

I do not know whether it will be of assistance or not for him to have my views, but I do know this. The way I state it today about the ultimate resolution of the problem beyond the fooling around in this statute, is a matter of very anxious concern to most of the people in Sudbury who take the trouble to stop and think about it. They are anxious fears to ever increasing numbers of the residents of the Sudbury basin.

So let the Minister of Mines, with the majority that stands behind him, go his merry way with this piecemeal panacea that he presents in this statute. The ultimate resolution rests with the Minister of Health and, behind him, the Minister of Lands and Forests, who has not been too active. He has not been much of a goad. The Minister will listen obligingly to what you have to say about his trees burning up and he will shake his head and wring his hands with anguish with you as he contemplates them. But one does not get the impression that the Minister of Lands and Forests is doing much to goad his colleague in the Cabinet.

Sure, he will give you an airplane ride to have a look at them and send his officials along and Mr. Winegard—I think that is his name. Everybody will stand out on the shore of Penage Lake and say: “Is it not terrible? Is it not awful”; as you contemplate the beautiful white pines and the spruce.

The Minister will write you a letter acknowledging the depredation, but what the people would like to see is the Minister of Lands and Forests carrying out his responsibilities in relation to that great resource that rests with him. He should be in there on Thursday mornings, or whenever they meet, pounding the table and saying: “Look, let us get on with the solution of this once and for all. Let us tell those companies that they have a fixed time limit to produce means of abatement, and if they do not, within that time”—this only repeats what I have said on earlier occasions here—“if they do not, then we send our experts in.”

“We hire experts and the experts tell us how it is done and then, if necessary, we will pass the requisite legislation to require that it be done that way to abate the nuisance and the companies will pick up the tab.”

This leads me to another thought that I want to share with the House, before I sit down, respecting pollution and again, indicative of the piecemeal approach that I complain about in this bill, the matter of principle. There was another area of pollution by noxious fumes and effluents that were identified eight years ago, in 1960, over on this side, by me and by others. I drew it to the attention of the government and the Minister of Energy and Resources Management—if that is what he was called at that time. Lo and behold a few months ago, in relation to that pollution, they held a meeting—the water resources commission—and acknowledged that the pollution was caused by the International Nickel Company.

In the bulletin they sent out summoning the people to the ecumenical conference—they were holding an ecumenical conference down at the water resources offices—they said responsibility for abatement will be a secondary matter.

In other words, having identified the International Nickel Company as the originator, the causative agent, of the pollution, the Water Resources Commission had the gall to say to the people who like to think that they think rationally—that organization had the colossal gall to say: “In any event, we do not want to get down into blaming the International Nickel Company separately. We must not tangle with them.”

Whereas I was ready to take the position—and I did, in a lengthy letter to the appropriate Minister about that Casper Milquetoast organization known as the Water Resources Commission—the dinosaur that operates in that field. I was ready to take the position that what you ought to do is to go to the meeting and look the INCO people in the eye and say: “Finally we have determined that you are the cause of the pollution. You are going to correct it and you are going to pay for the correction.”

You know what is going to happen with that will o’ the wisp water resources commission? I will predict for you what is going to happen in respect of that pollution which has cost human lives—that noxious fume pollution on the Copper Cliff road.

You know what is going to happen. They will correct it and the cost of correcting it will be picked up out of the public purse. The public—old John Q. Public—will pick up the cost eventually, because the Water Resources Commission and the government have not got the courage to face INCO and say, “It is time you put up.”

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The member was extolling the virtues of their wonderful safety programme.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, well, I am talking about this one. It was eight years ago I drew this to the attention of the government, to this one on the Copper Cliff road.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The member vacillates on both sides.

Mr. Sopha: Look, why does the member do that? When we are engaged in a serious debate why does he take that attitude—

Mr. MacDonald: Because he engages on both sides of the issue.

Mr. Sopha: —when we are engaged in common purpose?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member was on their side.

Mr. Sopha: Why does the hon. member niggle?

Mr. MacDonald: We like to remind him of his change in position.

Mr. Sopha: Why is he such a niggler of a person? Why do we not join in common purpose to bring about public good?

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right? Why was the hon. member not with us when we first raised the issue years ago—

Mr. Sopha: What does it matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, please!

Will the hon. member please address his remarks through the chair?

Mr. Sopha: What the hon. member does not appreciate is that one is either for the people, or against them.

Mr. MacDonald: We appreciated it long ago when the member was on INCO's side.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: We appreciated it when you were on the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: You see you have been afflicted by the skulduggery of the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Would the hon. member for Sudbury please confine his remarks to the House through the chair?

Mr. Sopha: Boy, oh boy, I cannot understand it. I cannot understand such a dereliction from public duty as that of the member for York South.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: It must baffle you too. But this is a good illustration—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Leave the House for one hour and you all get into trouble.

Mr. Sargent: Glad the Minister is back.

Mr. Sopha: This is a good illustration, by way of analogy to the halting misguided approach that this statute makes, to show the refusal of the government by the testimony of passing Acts like this, to tackle the problem head on.

It can only be tackled one way, once and for all. We have to tell that giant and its junior colleague, the Falconbridge Nickel Mines—a ratio of about four to one—we have to tell them that one of the costs of doing business with the ore bodies which, after all, belong to the people of Ontario, is that as a cost of doing business, they must spend a requisite amount of money to abate pollution. That is the principled approach.

What the government does not realize is, that INCO and Falconbridge being essentially good business men, they would understand that approach. They would understand the government taking the hard line with them, because they are sensible enough to realize the tremendous amount of damage that they do. If the government started to lean on them a bit in putting it that way on behalf of the people of Ontario, and specifically the people of the Sudbury basin, then they would be truly surprised that the International Nickel Company and Falconbridge would be amenable to strong suggestions backed by the threat of legislative power of this government.

Finally, because I am so disillusioned and represent such large numbers of people of the Sudbury basin who are disillusioned about this type of approach, it may well be that before this debate ends that we on this side will have to consider our position in voting against this bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I join this debate to support my colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) in relation to a statute that frankly I know very little about. It is not a matter that concerns me in the city of Toronto from day to day. But it is a statute that, as I now read it, really flies in the face of so many things that we have been talking about in this House.

Today, it seems, was the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the declaration of human rights, and we paid tribute, amongst others, to James Chalmers McRuer. Now I am surprised that this Minister, Mr. Speaker, brings in an amendment to as archaic and unrealistic an Act as The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act of 1960. It flies in the face of so many civil rights recommendations.

Let us look at what this Act has to say. It starts off—this is the original Act—

The Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may appoint an arbitrator for the purposes of this Act and may limit his jurisdiction either territorially or as to subject matter, and may extend such limited jurisdiction, or diminish it from time to time.

So we have the government appointing an official who will do exactly what he is told at all times—his jurisdiction can be extended, it can be limited, and he shall do exactly as he is told and there is no guide to what he is to do except as to what is in the mind of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, and in this case I suppose it is the Minister of Mines.

The Minister of Mines used to be a bit of a rebel in this House, and even now he expresses views about the sad state of Conservative organizations throughout the party—I guess this is his present way of rebelling. Now he has been put in charge of a department and I suppose he is trying to rebel a bit there, but one would think that when his officials brought to him a real updating, a modernization, of The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act that he would have looked at the original statute and begun to have it rewritten, if it is worth rewriting, in terms that are meaningful insofar as the principles that McRuer tried to lay down in his three volume report. But no, we do not see any of that at all. We still have the arbitrator being able to do exactly what he is told, his power is only as broad as his given authority, or as limited as his given authority. There is no restriction in the statute to govern it.

The second point that causes me substantial concern, Mr. Speaker, is section 4 of the old Act which is the most arbitrary privative clause that I have ever seen in any statute trying to avoid review of actions by the courts. There have been a lot of comments on that and McRuer had a great deal to say about preventing review by the courts of actions of civil servants and appointed bodies. Now here is what this one says:

—subject to section 5 the award of the Arbitrator is final and binding upon the parties and shall not be questioned, reviewed, restrained, or removed by prohibition, injunction, certiorari, or other process, or proceeding, in any court, and on being filed in the office of the Clerk of the County Court or the District Court, such award for the purpose of issuing execution thereon has the same force and effect as the judgment of the court.

Now I have never seen a privative clause as stringent as that one, Mr. Speaker, in any statute. Had it not been for the temerity of the Minister to bring forward this feeble amendment, probably this kind of clause would not have come to light again. But here it is. The actions of this arbitrator are subject to a minor review by the Ontario Municipal Board—and if you believe the words of the statute that is all it can be—and the Municipal Board is tied in with the record as produced by the arbitrator who sets his own rules of evidence—subject to that minor review, the government says whatever this arbitrator to whom we give complete direction says, that is final, that is the end.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in addition to having the government act—the Minister of Health doing what my friend and colleague from Sudbury was suggesting that he should have done a long time ago—in addition to that—until that is done, why should ordinary civil rights not be restored to those people who suffer damages from noxious fumes? Why should not the courts be allowed to determine whether people who are injured by noxious fumes have a proper claim for damages, and for the amount of those claims?

Mr. Sopha: That is a good question.

Mr. Singer: What is happening here, Mr. Speaker, is the protection of vested interests, the continued protection of vested interests by the government in a statute that, as far as any statute can be written, attempts to take any review of this matter completely away from the courts. Let me read that section 4 again. I think this is a terrible section, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member that we are dealing with Bill 23 which is an amendment to the original Act. I think it is not proper to debate the original Act at this time. We are simply dealing with the section 2 which is an amendment to the original Act. We are debating this amendment.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with you that if it was not for the purposes of elucidation I would not even want to refer to the original Act. However, we have to see what the Minister wants to do and what sort of practices he wants to continue. He says in this Act—and look at the explanatory note in this Bill 23—he says the language is being brought into line with present-day conditions to clarify the intent. Well we certainly have to look at the amending Act and the old Act to see what the intent was. Now the intent must be what is in the old Act as well as what is in the new, and what is in the old Act, Mr. Speaker, is the most restrictive statute that we have on our statute books today that denies access of anybody to the courts who wants to complain about damage by fumes.

And I say, Mr. Speaker, that unfortunately I think we are going to have to vote against this Act because this is the only way we have of protesting the denial of proper civil rights to the people who suffer damage by fumes. Even the ordinary remedy that the ordinary citizen has of going to court and saying "I have been caused damage by people who emit fumes"—even that right apparently is being taken away, or so surrounded by restrictions and by controls, that it is almost meaningless. You cannot get into the courts to have a review.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Minister when he comes to take part in this debate, how he can so have changed in his approach to the things that he has told us in past years he believes in—the principles that he has espoused over these many years—why he is so changed because suddenly he has a portfolio to look after, and why, instead of bringing this pat amendment before us—and that is all it is—why he has not had the courage to bring in an Act to repeal The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act and to restore the civil rights to those people who might suffer this kind of damage?

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to enter the debate before the hon. Minister replies? The hon. member for Niagara Falls?

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering how the Minister would collect from industry that borders along the Niagara River. If you were to drive from Niagara Falls to Fort Erie you would find that many industries on the American side that are smelting the ores that come from Canada are in this position. If you have an east wind you have a lot of smoke and a lot of pollution from the American side into our country. I wonder how the Minister is going to control that particular group of industries who do a tremendous job of polluting our air with their large industries?

As you drive up that river, you see stack after stack of pollution coming out of those industries at Bethlehem Steel and many others and I am wondering how the Minister could go about collecting from them to assist for paying for the administration and for the cost of the damage done in Canada by American industry.

This is being done not only in the Niagara Falls area to Fort Erie and from Buffalo down to Niagara Falls, New York, but many other areas of the province, I am sure, in the international areas. I would like this question answered. I cannot find anything in this bill that says they can make them pay or in any way collect the damages being done to Canadian properties by American industries.

Mr. Speaker: Are there other members wishing to participate in the debate? If not, the hon. Minister:

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, Mr. Speaker, I might agree with a lot that has been said by the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), the member for Sudbury, and the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer)—

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Sudbury was not interested enough to stay and hear the Minister out.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Let Hansard note that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I think I can indicate the government's concurrence with some of the views in relation to the principle involved in this bill.

I gave an indication at the time the estimates of The Department of Mines were being considered last year, that the whole of the question relating to the future of this particular bill and under whose jurisdiction it would remain and indeed, for that matter, even the question of the principle of the bill, was being seriously considered by the advisors to the government, not necessarily the government itself.

I can only indicate to the House that this investigation is still continuing. My understanding is that it is not yet ready to be presented to the Executive Council and therefore, under the circumstances, as the responsible Minister at the moment for the administration of the Act, we came along at this session to introduce—as I indicated on the first reading—merely a technical or rather two technical amendments to the Act.

The member for Riverdale refers to it as a "changing of the marginal notes". The member for Sudbury indicates that it is a "tinkering with the Act"; both of these descriptions are perfectly correct. That is all they are. They are merely two technical amendments at the moment but I can indicate to you that it is my hope that before long, the whole matter in relation to the principle of this bill is going to be seriously considered by the Executive Council of the government and I assume the results of that consideration will be imparted in due course.

I must say however, that there has been a rather one-sided, biased interpretation of the matter by the member for Downsview which, as he admitted, he knew very little about. As I understand the history of the Act—I do not want to defend it but I merely say for purposes of information more than anything else—as I understand the history of the Act this scheme was to facilitate the easier collection by people, especially in the Sudbury area, whose crops have been damaged by fumes emission.

Mr. Singer: How many arbitrations?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: By arbitration in respect of fumes only and—

Mr. Sopha: May I ask how many arbitrations have taken place?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I answered it last year. There have been no arbitrations for the last three years.

Mr. Sopha: That is what I thought.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The purpose of the bill was to make easier the collection of damage claims by people in the immediate vicinity of Sudbury, of moneys that they felt were owing to them because of those damage claims and for that reason it took away the common law right of suing in the courts for those purposes. Whether one may agree or disagree with this principle, the principle is there at the moment and it is being questioned at the moment by the advisors to the government and will be questioned by the administration—by the executive arm of government in due course.

In relation, Mr. Speaker, to some of the questions—and I hope I can remember them. Of course, the arbitrator is an employee of The Department of Mines not an employee of International Nickel or any mining company whatsoever. The purpose of the amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to increase the amount of the expenses under which he operates. Due to inflationary trends this had to be increased to $50,000 from $30,000.

This is no charge upon the public treasury in the long run, because these funds are collected in due course from those corporations from which these fumes are emitted. My interpretation, for what it is worth, in respect of any hydro plants of course, would be that they are not smelting minerals and therefore—

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East is up on a point of order.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: May I just finish my interpretation of the applicability—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East resumed his seat; he acceded to the Minister's request?

Mr. Martel: Well when the Minister indicated he wanted to just finish up his point, I sat down. I will raise my point or order when he is finished, as he asked me to.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well briefly and bluntly, I do not think it would apply to the emission of fumes from a Hydro stack. It would not be smelting of ores.

Mr. Martel: My point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Martel: The question I asked was who does the evaluation and the assessment of damages to crops by International Nickel—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not, in the mind of Mr. Speaker, a point of order. It is a matter of further questioning the hon. Minister. Each member had the opportunity to enter the debate and I think that questions of this type are not in order at this time. The hon. Minister has further remarks?

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I thought on this occasion that the Minister might use his discretion in entertaining a question from the member.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is what the committee of the whole House is for.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well I am wondering if the Minister would entertain a question.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is what the committee of the whole House is for.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Minister wishes to entertain a further question this is—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well to facilitate the matter I would, but I should point out that I think we could get into these discussions in the committee of the whole House or perhaps—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: But if the hon. member wants to ask a question, I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that it is not routine procedure to permit questions after each member has had the opportunity to speak to the bill. If the hon. Minister wishes to answer a specific question in connection with his remarks and with the concurrence of the House, otherwise—the hon. member for Sudbury East had risen on a point of order—otherwise the questions may be directed during the committee of the whole House.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to answering any questions.

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the opinion of the Minister in this respect. In view of the enlarging of the word structure from the original wording of section 2 to its present wording, the Minister refers to smelting alone.

I am wondering if the Minister would not agree that the words "or otherwise treating ores or minerals" might well lead a tribunal to come to the conclusion that in the manufacture of hydro electric power you are otherwise treating a mineral by changing its form, in effect.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The member has asked for my interpretation and my interpretation would be that it would not.

Do we have another question, Mr. Speaker?

I have forgotten, Mr. Speaker, some of the other points being mentioned. As I say, they are technical amendments only. One is to increase the expenses of the arbitrator; these amounts are returned to the consolidated revenue fund. The arbitrator himself, of course, does the assessment.

The expansion of the language is merely to clarify another geographic area that we feel may possibly develop in the future in respect of the smelting or roasting of ores that may not necessarily be nickel ores or iron ores. Therefore, we thought it best to widen the definition at the moment to include another particular operation that we had in mind.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 23. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to by the following vote:

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is quite a proper question in view of—

An hon. member: The member for Hamilton Mountain is not present.

Mr. Speaker: The answer is “no”. The member for Hamilton Mountain is not recorded as voting.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the “ayes” are 47, the “nays” are 39.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MINING ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves second reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend The Mining Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I cannot really oppose the bill, but I agree with it with certain regrets and reservations.

I think it is a necessary Act. I think it had to come. However, I realize—and I think the Minister must realize—that it is going to put the small prospector out of business; that the day has come at long last when they have legislated him out of business.

As I say, I honestly cannot oppose the bill because I believe it is necessary. However, I do have the reservations that I am sorry to see the small prospector in the position he is in today.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to add the observation that the principle apparently is continued in the bill of allowing the staking of claims. Now all restrictions are removed as to the number that may be staked in any particular mining division. The principle, as I say, is continued of this method as the basic vehicle for the development of the ore bodies that may be found in the province. And, sir, I want to call to your attention, by way of making an inquiry in this House as to whether the time has not arrived that the government of this province, charged as it is with responsibility for such matters, might not reconsider this vehicle of the development of the precious ore bodies. It might substitute for it something akin to the method adopted by the government of Quebec in relation to the establishment of the corporation, I think, that is known as SEDBEC.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in that light I must say that, whereas I am not against public entertainment—

Mr. MacDonald: SOQUEM.

Mr. Sopha: SOQUEM. Thank you—S-O-Q-U-E-M, I believe. I am not against public entertainment within limits, but I did think rather ludicrous the display put on in the so-called staking rush in the Elliott Lake area last winter, which followed hard on the heels of the elevation—or is the word translation—of this hon. member to the Ministry of Mines. Shortly after he was called he wended his way up to Elliott Lake—I think he wended his way by aircraft, or helicopter, or something—and he seemed to preside as the major domo of the Dan McGrew-like festivities that went on in that area.

It was good for public entertainment I must say, but I want to query whether we have not come to a time that we might approach the development of our ore bodies through the means of putting the areas that seem to be geographically favourable out to some form of tender. When I say that, I superimpose upon it the notion that, if they are put out to some form of tender, the Minister, or the Executive Council, on behalf of the people of Ontario, would say to those who would come and seek a license for exploiting them: “The public, through their ownership of these ore bodies, must get their fair share off the top. Off the top first.”

The Attorney General attends me in what I’m saying, and no one knows more than he, in this House, that, in many ways, over the 60, 70 years of this century that have gone by, we have collectively bestowed tremendous undeserved benefits on a very minute number of people in the exploitation of our rich natural resources in the northern part of the province.

I have often queried here—and I’ll continue to repeat it in the hope that perhaps some day, in some form, my words may be hearkened to—I really questioned the moral right of people like Harry Oakes and W. H. Wright to come along and point to a plot of ground and the resources in it put there by bountiful providence and say, against all other people, that it is his. "That's ours to do with as we will."

I really question the moral right of W. H. Wright to walk out of northern Ontario with an estate of $47 million. I say, what right has that man, one man got to such wealth?

My father worked at the Buffalo mine for 25 years before I was born. He went back to work in the mines at the age of 70 because of the shortage of men during the war. He went back to run a blast furnace at the old Nipissing mine. Through my father, I am an owner. He was an owner by the fact that he worked in the Buffalo mine in extremely hazardous and unpleasant conditions for 25 or 30 years of his life. And those like him—and thousands like him, who built this country by the exploitation of those rich deposits—they were owners. Then why should a privileged few come and stake out the ground and say: "By virtue of recording in the mining office; this bill sets out, by virtue of our investment of capital, we have the right to exploit it against all others."

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if these remarks are in order on the principle. They are however very interesting. I am just curious, if you would permit, Mr. Speaker, as to how putting these areas out to tender would obviate the acquisition by persons. I do not understand that.

Mr. Sopha: I have only a passing knowledge of the operations of the company known as SOQUEM in Quebec; and that was gained when the mining committee were guests of the government of Quebec during our deliberations. As I understand it, that Crown corporation has the right to deal with any person in respect of an area of Quebec and to enter into a contract with it, whereby the government of Quebec in effect becomes a partner, which has the virtue that the government of Quebec does not put up any money. They get a fixed return under the contract, and I understand that that contract is variable; it may be varied, depending upon the experience.

But if we may leave that system, let us go to the system adopted by the government of Alberta, when they suddenly discovered that Alberta was sitting on a virtual sea of oil and natural gas. They not only adopted the system of letting out concessions and getting a fixed return on the concessions, but indeed adopted the checkerboard system, whereby one piece of land was leased out, and the one next to it was kept in the Crown to be disposed of within the wishes of the government of Alberta. It became the only province in Canada with revenues so great that it managed to escape a sales tax—the only province in Canada that really has revenues derived from the rich natural resource sufficient to meet its needs, though I understand that that has somewhat changed of late. But that, in contrast to the principle here—my friend the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked if this is Liberal policy—that type of niggardly interjection—of course it is.

An hon. member: Like heck it is!

Mr. MacDonald: Down with free enterprise!

Mr. Sopha: Of course it is the policy, we are a progressive party. Indeed we are. And we remember our heritage of political traditions, in the tradition of Mackenzie, Baldwin and Blake, and all of those. We do not forget them like these people forget the Regina manifesto.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us play the violins.

Mr. Sopha: We do not forget ours, but it has become a bourgeois group, a bourgeois rump group, even Marx would disown them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I would be glad to hear about C. D. Howe.

Mr. Sopha: All right, you want to talk about C. D. Howe, what I propose is right in the tradition of his life's work. One of the greatest builders that Canada ever had.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: And a man, Mr. Speaker, who used the state as a builder.

An hon. member: And then gave it away.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I fear we have strayed far from the bill, with discussion between these two Opposition parties.

Mr. Sopha: It is enlightening, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And entertaining!

Mr. Sopha: All right; the point I make is simply this, that this method adopted in this bill does not give a fair return to the people of Ontario for their ownership of the resource.

Eventually this system has to change to a more enlightened one where we are assured, in the development and exploitation of those ores that belong to all of the people, that as a first charge upon them there is paid back into the public treasury a sufficient sum to be a fair representation of their value in the hands of those who exploit them.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, not being too technical about the mining industry, I do want to say this, that somewhere along the line I believe that there is in this bill a motivation to give unlimited claims to the larger corporations.

It would seem to me that if the ordinary people in this province are going to share in the wealth of the province, if the small prospectors are going to have a chance, he cannot compete today with the new technologies the wealthy companies have. They can fly over these territories and they can stake claims from the air. Multimillionaire companies are the only people today who can amass this great wealth and the day of the small prospector is over.

It would seem to me, somewhere along the line, that the government could come forth. The Minister of Mines in his forward thinking, could come along with something that would set aside a capital fund of money that would be available to the small prospector that would stake him to take his share of the great wealth of the north.

This bill to me, without knowing the intricacies or the mechanics of the bill, I would suggest it gives the larger corporations a blank cheque, as it were, to go out and sew up as much territory as they want with all the technology they have at their command. I agree with the member for Sudbury that, somewhere along the line, Mr. Speaker, this Minister, this House and the people of Ontario will expect that we should be looking after the great wealth that is there and is being tapped now only by the big corporations. Let the small men have a chance in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to the bill?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak just for a moment or two on the bill.

It is about time that the government got around to the proposition of discarding the outright grant of mining rights in the province and substituting for it a leasing basis. So that, when a claim is staked, instead of making an outright grant of the mineral rights to the person who has staked the claim, that you lease—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That was changed 12 years ago.

Mr. J. Renwick: But you have not done it. What have Texas Gulf got?

An hon. member: Answer that!

Mr. J. Renwick: The Minister will tell me in a minute? Oh fine, just tell me—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps if this debate is going to continue, it would be well to adjourn it. On the other hand, if the hon. member is about done with his remarks, or the hon. member and the Minister wish to deal with them shortly, we perhaps could finish this order of business. But there is little point in going on, if it is going to carry on as a debate.

Mr. J. Renwick: I was curious about the Texas Gulf situation, because is there not something that the government can do about existing outright grants to prevent this kind of exploitation which is taking place by the Texas Gulf company?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would respectfully request that the member adjourn the debate, because undoubtedly the Minister would wish to speak to this.

Mr. Lawlor moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow we will have a look at the order paper, and probably House in committee and the Throne Debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon we have students in the galleries once again; in the east gallery from Emery Junior High School in Weston, from Lambton Central Collegiate Vocational School, Petrolia, who are hosting the students from Lafayette High School in St. Louis, Missouri.

And in the west gallery we have students from Bridlewood Public School, Agincourt; Silverthorn Collegiate Institute in Etobicoke and from York Mills Collegiate Institute in Willowdale.

Petitions.

Motions.

Presenting reports.

Introduction of bills.

THE CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT, 1966

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Consumer Protection Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this bill fills an omission in The Highway Traffic Act. The purpose is to make it an offence for the driver of a motor vehicle to fail to stop when given a clear signal to do so by a uniformed constable or police officer driving a plainly marked police vehicle.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I have a short statement to make to the House today which I hope might well comprise the answer to—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Speak up, we cannot hear the Minister. Not that we want to very much.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would hope that the statement I propose to make, Mr. Speaker, would comprise the answers to certain questions sent to my office yesterday by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), and constitute a reply to the point of order he raised in the House yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to you and to the members of the House for the fact that copies of the abridged financial report for the year ending March 31, 1968, did not reach you before today. This is a matter of deep personal regret on my part and I appreciate the concern that was expressed, quite appropriately, by the hon. leader of the Opposition during the point of order he raised yesterday in the House. I can assure you, however, that this late delivery was not my intention.

I have been advised that copies for the members were delivered to the legislative post office at approximately 10 a.m. on Monday, December 9. Copies for the press gallery were delivered at approximately noon the same day.

Unfortunately, I now discover that some confusion developed in the mailing process, about which I was unaware when I telephoned the leader of the Opposition yesterday after I received his questions on the financial report. I was under the impression that it should have been in the hands of the members by that time. The fact that they were not is a matter of extreme personal regret, as I have said.

As the members will note from the letter accompanying the reports on their desks today, it was our intention that the material was to be in their hands before it was sent to the press.

If the material had been available to the leader of the Opposition in advance of press reports, as was intended, I believe that the report itself would have provided clarification of the matter he raised yesterday in his point of order before the House.

I must say emphatically, Mr. Speaker, that this redesign of our annual abridged financial report was not intended to mislead this House in any way; in fact, our purpose was the very reverse. Our new report was prepared with the express intention of providing the members of this House and the people of Ontario with a much clearer disclosure of the province's financial position than had been the practice in the past.

The point in question appears to concern two figures shown on page 1 of the report under the heading "Highlights of year ended March 31, 1968". The first figure shows our deficit on budgetary transactions to be $149,748,000—or the $150 million figure referred to in the press reports; the second figure shown is the increase in net debt at $106,748,000.

The larger figure shows the provision for sinking fund; the second relates to the actual increase in our net debt as a result of the year's operations.

The sinking fund provision must be shown separately from the year's operation in order to provide the members and the public with a true picture of the province's financial position. The allocation of funds for debt is not considered to be part of the current year's expenditures in the same light as salaries, services, grants or maintenance costs and therefore should be kept separate from these expenditures.

The provision for the sinking fund appears under the heading "consolidated revenue fund" on page 6 of the report and is explained once again very clearly on page 22 of the appendix.

I will quote the entire section entitled "budgetary transactions" as it appears on page 22 of the abridged financial report for 1968:

In the group are the general revenue and expenditure transactions resulting from the implementation of the government's taxation policies and the operation of its many public service programmes. At the end of any fiscal year the net result of these transactions will have a direct effect upon the net debt of the province.

There is another part of the government's operation which is not associated directly with a singular public service programme. This is a Treasury function, which makes provision in each fiscal year for the planned retirement of that portion of long-term debt which from time to time is incurred to provide funds to meet general government expenditures, rather than for capital or investment purposes. The controlled retirement of such debt is achieved through the operation of a general sinking fund, funds for which are made available by an appropriation of the general of each fiscal year. As such, this provision falls within the category of budgetary transactions.

The fund itself remains as an asset of the province and the appropriation made through budgetary transactions is reported as a non-budgetary receipt. There is, consequently, no outflow of funds, and the net debt of the province is not affected.

In addition, our 10-year review of budgetary deficit on pages 16 and 17 refers explicitly to the provision for sinking fund.

While there are many changes incorporated in this year's report for the purposes of clarification, I must assure the members that the presentation of the provision for sinking fund does not differ from previous reports of this nature. I would refer the members to page 11 of the previous report, for the year ending March 31, 1967, which shows the provision for sinking fund in our statement of net ordinary revenue and net ordinary expenditure.

If, Mr. Speaker, by including these two figures—the deficit on budgetary transactions and the increase in net debt—in the first-page highlights of the report, it would appear that I have misled this House, then I do humbly apologize. However, may I say that this was not my intention and may I repeat that the purpose of revising our presentation was to provide a more accurate and lucid picture of our operations to the members and to the public. To substantiate this intention, may I refer the members to my foreword statement in the report itself. I would also bring to the attention of the House the 12-page appendix which provides considerable detail and explanation of the changes we have incorporated to ensure that there would be no confusion or misunderstanding.

You may recall that the leader of the Opposition raised the question of more modern financial reporting in his speech to this House last year following the presentation of the estimates of my department, and on previous occasions. He urged us to modernize and clarify the abridged financial report among other official documents of a financial nature. Because I agreed with his criticisms, I instructed my officials to do just that.

As members of the House know, a major reorganization took place during the creation of The Department of Treasury and Economics. Following my own beliefs and the quite proper suggestions of the leader of the Opposition among others, I asked the officials of the department to streamline and modernize the technical aspects of our financial reporting. You will have noticed the substantial changes in the budget statement of 1968. This process has been carried on in the abridged report of 1967-1968. No instructions were given to the officials of The Department of Treasury and Economics apart from the request to improve and modernize the presentation.

Turning to the actual results of our operations for 1967-1968, may I explain that the difference in the increase in our net debt between the estimates in the original forecast and the actual figures in the abridged financial report is 2.4 per cent of the budgetary expenditures for the year.

I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that the difference resulted almost entirely from improved economic conditions which brought higher revenues than we had anticipated. I know the members will appreciate that the forecasting of revenues which depend upon future economic conditions is not an exact science and I expect they gratified, as I am, that our economy strengthened to the point that our revenues were higher than we could anticipate.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this submission will reaffirm to you, to the leader of the Opposition and to the members of the House that while certain matters may have appeared to be misleading, that was not in fact my intention and I would repeat that my concern was just the reverse. Our report was designed to disclose more fully the financial position of the province of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will permit a comment by way of clarification on two items.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. leader also advise whether he wishes to do anything with the question that he had yesterday so that it could all be dealt with at the same time?

Mr. Nixon: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer has answered the first one, which was asked for the date upon which the report was released to the press. The second one was for him to account for the serious over-estimation of our debt position, which he now has explained is because our revenues fortunately were larger than he had estimated by 2.4 per cent—which, at a quick estimate, I would say, is close to $50 million.

I wonder if the Treasurer would give us the amount in dollars rather than per cent of his error in estimation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, the mathematics of the hon. leader of the Opposition are quite accurate, something on the order of $50 million to $55 million. That's correct.

Mr. Nixon: I asked for comment on the Globe and Mail—which had access to the report, when we did not—to the fact, and I quote “that the two systems of reporting the fiscal position of the province are apparently political.” The statement was made because the position appeared advantageous at election time last year, and now that it has changed is advantageous at fiscal negotiation time this year.

But I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Revenue might very well take a leading role in this discussion, rather than sitting in the back row barracking. What is he the Minister of Revenue for?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on the invitation of the leader of the Opposition, I should like very much to get into this debate. The system which is now being used by the government is that system which was asked for by the Opposition, the ex-member for Grey-Bruce was one—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Unfortunately the rules of the House really do not provide for members to engage in the debate on the question—not even the leader of the Opposition.

May I therefore ask the leader of the Opposition to continue with his questioning of the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Nixon: Speaking to the point—and this would surely concern the Minister of Revenue—and on a point of clarification, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to continue briefly. The Treasurer was concerned about our receiving this report, which is now on our desks.

I received mine this morning by mail, and traced the difficulties the Treasurer has drawn to our attention. I would say it was mailed from his office with 14 cents postage, and that it was sent to the mailroom of the Parliament Building from where it was sent to the public post office downtown. Then it came back here and has still not been received through the mails by the members of the Opposition.

I am very glad, however, that the Treasurer did what he should have done on Monday—brought a few copies under his arm from this office, and had the pages put on the desks.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I frankly say that the leader of the Opposition is making a mountain out of a molehill. I have admitted that there was a mistake made. I phoned the leader of the Opposition yesterday when I got this question to tell him why I could not be in the House to table the report or make a statement, and that I had pursued the only means at my disposal to ensure that the members got the copy.

Now, if something went wrong with the mails, I must apologize, Mr. Speaker. That's a department for which I have no responsibility. There was no postage put on the envelopes in The Department of Treasury. We are pursuing how this happened and we will find out. Now, if the leader of the Opposition wants to make a real issue over that, let him go ahead. There are bigger things to do in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. leader of the Opposition has questions.

Mr. Nixon: A question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister and the Minister of Health, neither of these gentlemen are present, I regret.

Mr. Speaker: You are quite right, I regret. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food has a statement.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Well, it certainly will not be on the invitation of the Minister as a member for Rainy River.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to announce plans for major expansion of the facilities at the Centralia College of Agricultural Technology. In order that the large concentration of livestock and poultry production in the mid-western Ontario counties might be better serviced, we plan, early in 1969, to begin the establishment of a regional veterinary services laboratory on the Centralia site.

When it is considered that the eight counties of Bruce, Elgin, Huron, Middlesex, Norfolk, Oxford, Perth and Lambton produce one-third of the province's cattle, pigs and poultry, one-half of the turkeys, and 20 per cent of all horses and sheep, then it must be recognized that this area is vital to the industry.

The establishment of these facilities is in response to a growing demand for diagnostic and laboratory facilities to serve this general area. This laboratory will provide a vital service to the farmers in that area, and especially to the many practicing veterinarians, who service those farmers.

The decision to establish this veterinary services laboratory on the Centralia site was influenced greatly by the fact that there exists now a solid and substantial building, formerly used as the air base hospital, which can be converted to this new use with a minimum of cost and delay.

In addition to this announcement involving the establishment of the new laboratory, I would like to state that we have also decided to transfer the animal health technician course, now being carried on at Ridgetown, to the Centralia College of Agricultural Technology. This is a two-year course, started just two years ago in Ridgetown for the purpose of training technicians in veterinary medicine, who would be capable of assisting practicing veterinarians, and answering to the growing demand for technicians in laboratories, colleges and in the government service.

The first class will graduate this year, with 15 students, 10 of these young ladies. A further 23 students, 13 of these girls, are now completing their first year of study in this course.

The establishment of this new veterinary services laboratory and the transfer of the animal health technicians course to the Centralia College site will mean also that those young people presently enrolled in the general agricultural course at Centralia will have enriched facilities for their courses in animal health.

It will mean that the present students in their first year in the technicians course at Ridgetown will be moved to the facilities in Centralia, along with many of the teaching staff. I want to point out, however, that the veterinary services laboratory now located at Ridgetown on the campus of the Ridgetown College of Agricultural Technology will remain there to service the southwestern part of the province, and there will be adequate staff allocated to this facility to ensure that the Ridgetown students in agricultural technology will receive professional training in animal health.

Mr. Speaker, the moves that I am announcing today are designed to maximize the service available to this important area of agricultural production, and to minimize the time required for vital veterinary diagnostic work to be carried out.

When one considers that there are more than a million cattle, in excess of 10 million poultry — that includes chickens and hens — close to 2 million turkeys, more than three-quarters of a million hogs, and nearly 50,000 sheep in the eight counties I have mentioned, I am sure the provision of these facilities will be fully appreciated and welcomed by the farmers involved.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question of clarification?

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister give us some idea of the capital costs of the new facilities for the veterinary laboratory at Ridgeway for capital and equipment?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: At Ridgeway?

Mr. T. Reid: I am sorry, at Centralia.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, at Centralia — $72,000 is the estimated cost to renovate the present base hospital to the diagnostic laboratory facility.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question from the other day of the Minister of Education with other questions which he might place.

Mr. Ben (Humber): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question of the Minister of Education as follows: Is the formation of a youth and recreation branch of The Department of Education, as recently announced by the Minister, a government answer to the recommendations of the select committee on youth as set out in its report of March, 1967?

Secondly, does this mean that instead of the establishment of a Department of Youth, to which the member for Kingston and the Islands is looking forward, as recommended by the select committee on youth, all problems concerning youth will be handled by The Department of Education?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the consolidation of the former youth branch and community programmes branch resulted partially because of the report of the select committee on youth. I think it should be pointed out that this was done after due consideration, but it is not the final answer to all the recommendations obviously in that report.

Mr. Ben: Would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Can we expect a statement from the government that something will be done in setting up a Ministry of Youth?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would think that any statement with respect to the establishment of any new Ministry should—reading the speeches made by the hon. member's leader in recent days about the number of departments—emanate from the Prime Minister of this government. I would think that in view of what his own leader has said about the multiplicity of departments that this would be something of a contradiction of what he has already stated.

Mr. Ben: A supplementary question: What did the Minister say?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to repeat it but I am not sure that I can repeat it exactly as I said it.

Mr. Nixon: Or as well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Or perhaps as well, so if he reads Hansard tomorrow and if it is a matter that will not be determined the next day or so, perhaps he will be able to understand what I have said and maybe explain it to me.

Mr. Ben: Can I follow my question to the Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, questions that were submitted to you today were answered by the Minister of Education.

Is the extension of the secondary school year to June an attempt by the government to postpone the entry of secondary school students into the labour market because summer employment will not be provided for them by the government?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the hon. Minister answers that, the member for York South would allow me to place also before the Minister a question from the member for Peterborough yesterday, which has to do with the same matter, or does the member for York South have it there? Perhaps he would place it if he has.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Which one is it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It is No. 302.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, I do not happen to have the numbering. I have the question but I do not know which are—

Mr. Speaker: It is “what is the reason for the school year . . . ?”

Mr. MacDonald: What is the reason for the extension of the school year to Friday, June 13, with exams beginning on Monday, June 16, as indicated on a recent circular from The Department of Education?

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the two are related. The elimination of the grade 13 examinations and the emphasis now on a continued programme throughout the school year rather than on the reliance of examinations—and this applies at all grade levels—and the use now of shorter testing procedures which can be scheduled during class time and the greatly reduced amount of time required for marking resulting from the fact that students are permitted with a 60 per cent average to be exempt from final examinations, all of these factors enabled us to determine that more emphasis can now be placed on the actual learning process and this can continue throughout the year and until June 13.

This still allows sufficient time for examinations, the marking and the administrative work that must go on, to be completed by the end of the month. This, Mr. Speaker, I think answers the question of the member for Humber as well.

Mr. Ben: Does this mean that all examinations in the department are now going to be “yes” or “no” questions and will the Minister answer yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member perhaps is not aware that we do not as a department set examinations. So there is no need to answer the question. I do not think we have reached the point where the examinations which are set internally in the schools or the SACU tests result in “yes” and “no” answers per se. What I am saying is, the testing procedures have been shortened, there is no final external departmental examination now in grade 13, and this has enabled us to extend the school year.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister be kind enough to elaborate on what he means by “shorter testing procedure”?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the development of some of the tests that are now being given by SACU can be given during the school year, during the school term, without having to provide time for marking by the teachers giving the instruction. In other words, they are marked by the SACU people and this relieves the administrative task on the part of the teachers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has two questions of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management which he might place.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I have to get them in order of seniority.

Mr. Speaker: We are operating on members today, as the members catch my eye.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Have we changed again?

Mr. Speaker: No, we have not changed again. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: My questions, Mr. Speaker, are of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

The estimated cost in today's terms of the construction of the proposed power station (on the 2,300 acre site adjacent to Douglas Point) as reported in the Ontario Hydro news release dated December 5, 1968, is $760 million. My questions, Mr. Speaker:

1. Will the Minister inform the House whether the figure of $760 million includes the cost of charging, i.e. fueling the reactor?

2. If the answer to the above is no, what will be the cost in today's terms of fueling the reactor?

3. What is the cost per kilowatt hour based on a three-quarter capacity (3,000,000 kw) average output?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, as reported in the Ontario Hydro news release dated December 5, 1968, based on today's construction cost the estimated cost of the new Douglas Point generating station is $760 million.

The answer to question 1: The estimated cost of $760 million includes one-half of all costs associated with charging the reactors with fuel.

No. 2: That has been answered now, and the answer to No. 3: The cost per kilowatt hour for the proposed 3,000 megawatt nuclear generating station at Douglas Point based on (a) current costs for construction and fuel; (b) seven per cent interest charge on capital and, (c) annual capacity factor of three-quarter capacity is estimated to be 4.1 mills per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a second question?

Mr. Ben: Yes. I expected that answer because I did not think he could answer it anyway, but that is the opinion expressed. Again of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management—it chokes in my throat to use that word “management”, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is placing a question.

Mr. Ben: How many tons of coal will be required per annum to keep fueled the electric power plant which is to be constructed at Bath, based on operation of three-quarter capacity, being estimated at two million kilowatts?

How much will this coal cost per ton?

How much is that per kilowatt hour?

Where will the coal be purchased?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that approximately 4.4 million tons of coal will be required per annum to fuel the proposed 2,000 megawatt thermal generating station near Bath, based on the capacity factor of three-quarters. Based on current costs, that coal delivered to the plant is estimated to cost approximately $8.60 per ton.

Mr. Ben: I am sorry, is that 50 or 15? 8.15 or 8.50?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: What is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Ben: The cost per ton, I did not catch whether it was—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: $8.60 per ton.

Mr. Ben: 60?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The answer to three—the corresponding specific fuelling cost is estimated to be 2.86 mills per kilowatt hour.

The answer to question 4—it is expected that most of the coal would be purchased from the United States. If fuel oil or natural gas should become available at a competitive price, Ontario Hydro would, of course, turn to these sources. We are always hopeful that this will be the case.

Mr. Ben: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, but will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: No.

Mr. Ben: I would not ask anyway, the Minister never knows—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Brantford has a question from yesterday of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): A question of the Minister of Social and Family Services: Will the Minister permit welfare recipients to keep their basic shelter exemption grant payment or will it be deducted from their welfare payment?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the recipient retains the basic shelter exemption grant payments to the extent that the amount actually paid for shelter exceeded the amounts provided in their allowances for shelter.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York South wish to place the questions from yesterday, for the hon. member for Peterborough?

Mr. MacDonald: The ones to the Minister of Education?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the Minister of Education.

Mr. MacDonald: The first one from the member for Peterborough to the Minister of Education—

In view of the second report of the Bilingual and Bicultural Commission, would the Minister consider more generous grants to the Boards of Education to cover the cost of providing instruction in French in elementary school, at least, until the federal government accepts its responsibility in this area?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question similar to the one just put by the member for York South—

Mr. Speaker: Well perhaps it would help matters if the hon. member would place it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Education accept, as a desirable objective, the introduction of French as a course of study in Ontario's English language primary and secondary schools at the Grade one level, as recommended by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in its second report?

Second part of the same question: How many English language primary schools in Ontario have language laboratories?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Scarborough East would like to place the other questions that are directly related to the B and B report, in that the answer will be more or less identical to all the questions he asks.

I am just thinking—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, for the reason the Minister gave—yes, I would place them all at once. Although I would like an opportunity to ask him supplementaries on each of them individually.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have every opportunity to ask questions which are supplementary provided the Minister will accept them.

Mr. T. Reid: Which I am sure he will. Thank you. Another question, on the same subject Mr. Speaker.

How many people from France have been granted special teaching certificates by The Department of Education of Ontario to teach French in primary and secondary schools in Ontario during the current school year?

Second part of the same question: how many people from Quebec and other provinces in Canada, other than Ontario, have been granted similar special teaching certificates?

Another question on the report released, Mr. Speaker, is this:

What steps, if any, has the Minister of Education taken to establish a specific inter-provincial bureau to co-ordinate, on a national basis, training programmes for second-language teachers for elementary and secondary schools, as recommended by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in its second report?

And the final question, Mr. Speaker, is also to the Minister of Education:

En vue de la déclaration dans son premier rapport par la Commission Royale sur le Bilingualisme et le Biculturalisme que l'Ontario soit officiellement bilingue, et de sa recommandation dans son deuxième rapport qu'un sous-ministre adjoint ou associé en Ontario soit chargé du curriculum, des textes scolaires, des examens, de la formation d'enseignants et d'autres services académiques dans les écoles de langue française de l'Ontario, est-ce que l'honorable Ministre propose nommer un tel sous-ministre adjoint ou associé?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for York South would place the other question of the member for Peterborough with respect to the—is there another one?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is not really directly related. I can deal with it after.

Perhaps I can deal with all I have, if I can remember them at this particular moment.

The answer, Mr. Speaker, to all the questions, with the exception of one relating to the number of certificates, is very simply this: The report was made available to me in its actual form as of yesterday. If I had been able to be in the House yesterday I would have said that I had not read the report yet; I am in the process of reading it. I am not in a position to make any comment upon these specific recommendations contained in the report, so I am unable to give the hon. member any additional information on this occasion.

I would like to make one general observation with respect to the second portion of the B and B report and that is dealing with some of the general suggestions contained in it. I think it is fair to state, Mr. Speaker, that we are implementing, or are in the process of implementing, many of the general programmes suggested within the report itself.

But I am not in the position—because it is a very lengthy report as the hon. member, I am sure, is aware—to comment on the specific recommendations contained therein, at this present moment.

With respect to the question that asked something in detail that does not relate necessarily to the B and B report, I would say (with respect to the teaching certificates), that temporary certificates, such as teachers of French to English-speaking pupils in the elementary schools obtained after a five-week summer course, were issued to some 17 persons educated in France. This certificate is valid for one year. It may be renewed yearly upon the recommendation of the area or municipal superintendent. These certificates are not issued for teaching in the secondary schools.

At the secondary level, through the Franco-Canadian agreement, there are five "assistants" from France in Ontario schools this year; three of them I believe are in Scarborough, and two of them with the York board.

In answer to (b) part of the question, temporary certificates were obtained by the following persons educated in Quebec and other provinces; Quebec 25, Ontario 90—these are the temporary certificates—from the Middle East 19, from the West Indies 1, from Europe (not including those I mentioned from France) 19, from the U.S.A. 1, and from India 3.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary questions from the hon. member for York South, first—any supplementary questions?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I have no supplementary questions.

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the one supplementary question is: Will the Minister refer the report to the education committee of the Legislature so that we might look into some of the questions that I have raised at this time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to comment whether I will refer the report to the standing committee of education. Certainly, I think it is a report that we can discuss either there or perhaps during the debates on the estimates of The Department of Education.

I think certainly some opportunity will be given to discuss this in some detail. I cannot say, at this point, where the most appropriate place will be.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a related, if not supplementary, question. It is rather difficult for members of the Opposition to deal intelligently with this report until we have a copy.

The government provided members of the Legislature with a copy of the first report. Is it your intention, and how quickly can it be implemented, to supply us with copies of the second one?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was not involved in the distribution of the first edition of the B and B report. I would have to check with the Prime Minister as to what our policy will be with respect to the second edition. It does relate basically, I guess, to educational programmes. Perhaps I shall do what I can to see that we get copies for the members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Can I get a refund on my copy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, some of us have had to go out and get them.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of—point of personal privilege, if I may; it is related to the current discussion.

The point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is this: The Minister of Education has told us that he cannot comment on specific questions which I have asked him and which the hon. member for Peterborough has asked him, because he has not yet seen the report.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly accept—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I did not say that. I said if I had answered these questions yesterday this would be, in fact, what I would have said. I think I made it very clear that I am in the process of reading the report. I did not say I had not seen it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I accept that correction.

My point of privilege, sir, is that on page 12 in the Telegram on Tuesday, December 10, there is a fairly lengthy article entitled "Visionary, impractical, say Ontario educators" and I quote directly from this, Mr. Speaker:

Dr. J. R. McCarthy, Ontario's Deputy Minister of Education, warned last night that it would be a catastrophe to scrap the province's plans for bilingual education in favour of a haphazard crash programme.

His comment, which came on the heels of the Bi-Bi commission's second major report, neatly summed up the reaction of most Ontario educators to the latest document.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that when the civil servants of this province talk to reporters about government policy and the Minister of this province—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I fail to see how this—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. T. Reid: The Minister fails to see a lot.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will resume his seat when Mr. Speaker has the floor. The hon. Minister will resume his seat.

The hon. member is rising on a point of privilege. He will please state his point of privilege and then it can be dealt with.

Mr. Sopha: That is precisely what he was doing. On a point of order, that is precisely what he was doing.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: And that is precisely what Mr. Speaker is asking him to do.

Mr. T. Reid: My point of privilege, sir, is simply that we have a Legislature in this province with duly elected members in it; we have a loyal, official Opposition whose responsibility it is to question and criticize the government. I have asked this Minister questions; he says he cannot answer them and yet two days ago, his Deputy Minister, who is an appointed official—who is not elected but appointed by this government—sees fit to tell reporters what the official department reaction is to the Bi-Bi report.

That, sir, is an infringement on my personal right as a member of this Legislature.

Mr. Sopha: It should be the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to reply to that. I also read the story. I also discussed it with the Deputy Minister and I think if one reads the story carefully, one must assume from that, that the Deputy Minister was not commenting at all on the recommendations per se in the report, because he, at that time, had not seen the report either.

Certain hypothetical situations were placed by this reporter with great initiative and there was some reaction to these. I say very specifically that the Deputy Minister has not, in any way, determined policy other than that which presently exists. I want to make this very abundantly clear.

He has, as have other officials in the department—in response to queries from the communications media, gone out of his way to indicate the present programmes that are available in this province. Our present programmes relate to French language instruction in our high schools and so on, and that has been the extent of his participation.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on this same point of privilege. In the Globe and Mail dated Tuesday, Dec. 10, page 8, this quotation appears in it, and perhaps the Minister will say that it is an accurate quotation.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member may not put words in the Minister's mouth.

Mr. T. Reid: The quotation, sir, is this:

Spokesmen close to the government said Ontario would particularly welcome the recommendation that the federal government accept in principle responsibility for extra costs the provinces incur by providing education in minority languages.

Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege I have already stated and I would like to know whether the Minister is going to say that that statement in the Globe and Mail is incorrect or whether he does not know about it and what steps he is taking to prevent such statements from being made.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of privilege, that report was discussed with me by a member of the Globe and Mail staff and I will not be called a spokesman close to the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is answered.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, may I add to that. I would concur with what the last hon. member has said. We would not want it to be inferred that he is close to the government either. May I also add this: I fail to understand the point of order at all from the hon. member for Scarborough East. He is referring to a "close source to the government" or something.

It does not involve an official of The Department of Education or any official over whom I may have jurisdiction whatsoever. Why he directs this point of order as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, is totally irrelevant.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has two further questions.

Mr. MacDonald: I have two further questions to the Minister of Education on behalf of the member for Peterborough.

1. In view of the comments of the Bilingual and Bicultural Commission on the teaching of Canadian history, has the Ontario Department of Education accepted the recommendations of the National History Project directed by A. B. Hodgetts, and will the department provide leadership to other provinces in implementing these recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting of the Council of Ministers which was held here last September, I introduced Mr. Hodgetts, who was one of the authors of the report, to the other Ministers of Education. It was agreed at that particular time that the various Ministers and departments would study these proposals.

At the same time there would be some consultation between the staff of the project and the various departments of education across this country. There is a further meeting of the Council of Ministers, Mr. Speaker, in the early part of February—the 9th or the 10th, and I anticipate that this item will be on the agenda for further discussion at that time.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order in respect to this document that has been discussed here—the Report of the National History Project, published under the auspices of what is euphemistically known as OISE, though I think they call it “OIS” down below.

I call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that it was sold for $2 a copy to the public or anybody else that wanted it. It was highly critical of the teaching of Canadian history in all provinces, including Ontario.

As a member of the House, I consider that quite an affront. I say to you, sir, that, on the other hand, had it been laudatory of the teaching of history, this Minister would have given it away like hot cakes and had his picture in the front.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps after that excursion out of the area of points of order we would come to the next question.

Mr. MacDonald: A final question to the—

Mr. Sopha: Sold it for $2. Forgive me, it is a damning indictment—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Only in the member's opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: The final question to the Minister of Education is — what was the average percentage of electors who voted for trustees to the new county boards of education? That is again on behalf of the member for Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I just do not have this information available. We are in the process of trying to get some rough calculations, but it is very difficult to separate those voting for municipal elections and those voting for the new county boards. I am just not in a position to get this information as yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East might complete his questions of the Minister.

Mr. T. Reid: The question, Mr. Speaker, is in three parts.

1. Can a young Canadian living in Ontario, who is required by the laws of the provincial government of Ontario to register and attend school, be denied access to a school—which receives financial support from the provincial government—by the principal of that school on the grounds that that young person does not dress in a manner that would be acceptable to most businesses? For example, a male student wearing brightly-coloured clothing, or a female student wearing a mini skirt?

2. If the answer is yes, must there be due process of law before such a person is denied access to such a school and what method of appeal, if any, does a young person have? Or must he or she submit to arbitrary measures?

3. If the answer is no, will the Minister inquire into the case of David Budgell at Martin Grove Collegiate in Etobicoke as reported on the front page of the Globe and Mail this morning; and the case of several female students at Sutton District High School as reported in the Toronto Daily Star, October 10, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware of and has read the relevant statutes. The Schools Administration Act provides regulations concerning the bearing and conduct of pupils, with very broad guidelines as to how such matters should be dealt with. It is a matter that is traditionally dealt with by the principal and the board involved.

The Act further goes on to say:

The parent or guardian of any pupil suspended may appeal against the action of the principal to the board which has the power to remove, confirm, or modify the suspension.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question?

Mr. Lewis: Why does the Minister allow a punitive and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for High Park.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Enter what?

Mr. Lewis: Enter this particular dispute.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would observe the rules of the House. If the hon. member for Scarborough West wishes to place a question of the Minister, he is well experienced and knows how to do so. And perhaps the Minister would refrain from cross talk and let the hon. member for High Park have the floor.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. Why was no inquest held in the death of Samuel Farella—killed in Brockville on August 15, 1968—despite promises by the coroner and the Crown Attorney that an inquest would be held?

2. Is the Attorney General aware of the deep suspicions that have been produced in the Farella family by failure to hold such an inquest?

3. Will the Attorney General intervene to order that an inquest be held in the near future?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the matter of this death was fully investigated by the provincial police and the results of that investigation were made known to the Crown Attorney and to the coroner. After discussion between both those persons, it was agreed that no inquest should be held, that no new information would likely be brought out by the inquest. I am not aware that any promise was made by any official that any inquest would be held. I think that the statement an inquest was promised is incorrect.

As for the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I do not know about the word "suspicion", but I understand the feelings of the family in their bereavement. The circumstances were that a nine-year-old riding his bicycle was killed by a car as he crossed the street to his home.

As I say, the matter was investigated by the police and it was not found that any charges should be laid. A full investigation indicated that an inquest would not bring out any additional facts.

I wrote to the family in August, and again, after reviewing the file myself, to the father on December 3rd of this year. So I think the family, certainly the father, is aware that the file has been most thoroughly reviewed. I do not, therefore, intend to intervene and order an inquest.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, would the Attorney General accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: This child was killed as a result of a car accident and it has been the policy of this department, when there has been a death of this nature and when no charge has been laid, always to hold inquests. This has certainly been the experience up until April of last year. In view of these facts, will the Attorney General inform me if the policy has been changed in the department or whether a specific exception has been made in this case? And if so, why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there is no specific exception. It is not the policy to hold an inquest into every case of death by motor vehicle.

Mr. Shulman: Where no charges have—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: As far as I am aware, that has never been a firm policy. I recall, if I may refer to my own personal experience as a Crown Attorney several years ago. If the facts were clear on a police investigation, we decided whether charges would be laid and also, whether an inquest would be held. There is no change in policy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia has a question.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, a two-part question for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

1. Relative to the expropriation by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario of certain lands in the township of Moore, in the county of Lambton, and owned by Messrs. Wellington, Brown, Sharpe and Munday, would the Minister advise as to whether the commission has advised the property owners if the commission will accept the recommendation of the board of negotiation dated March 26, 1968?

2. If not, will the Minister advise the reason for the delay?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, on May 29 this year, the commission orally advised the solicitor acting for these owners that it could not accept the recommendations of the board of negotiation with respect to compensation for their properties, because these recommendations were substantially in excess of appraisals of value by qualified independent real estate appraisers.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Minister accept a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Could the Minister give me the name of the official of the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission who notified the solicitor on that date, please?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I cannot but I could get it for the hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: I would appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has a question of the Provincial Secretary who has now returned.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, on my behalf, for the Provincial Secretary.

Is it correct that permits granted by the LLBO for New Year's eve are for five hours for private clubs, and only four hours for Legion branches? If so, what explanation is there for this difference in hours?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt also has a question of that Minister.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary, a five-part question.

What are the names of the people who are conducting the review of Ontario's liquor laws?

Has the Provincial Secretary asked for a deadline when the review must be completed?

When will liquor be available in grocery stores?

How many stores will be involved?

Will the Provincial Secretary be asking the Legislature for funds to conduct an extensive public information programme on the uses and abuses of alcohol?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, may I answer the question as it was asked?

The answer to number one is that the review is, of course, an internal one being conducted by a committee of the Cabinet.

Number two—no deadline has been set because we are most anxious to have a very complete review.

Number three—I am very glad this question was asked because it gives me the opportunity to point out that notwithstanding all the speculation to the contrary, no such decision has been made. Indeed, no recommendations have yet been made because the review is still going on.

Number four—of course, is answered by the answer to number three.

Number five—I am unable to answer number five because the study is still going on and the implications of that study will have to be considered by government.

Sufficient though, perhaps, to say that as all members of the Legislature will know, the Legislature has voted considerable sums of money to the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation. You will notice in the estimates of the current fiscal year, the operating activity of that foundation has been awarded $5,566,000 and there is an additional $634,000 for research. I am sure that a good portion of that, or a substantial portion of that, is for public information and education programmes as well.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a supplementary question?

The hon. member for Windsor West has a question.

Mr. II. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

For the month of December, will the Minister agree to advance the date of mailing of benefit cheques so that recipients will receive their cheques prior to Christmas?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Peacock: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, will the Minister—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any supplementary is necessary in view of the answer to the first part.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. Peacock: That is why a supplemental is necessary.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Will the municipalities of Lincoln and Welland counties have an opportunity to review the legislation concerning regional government in that area, before it is submitted to the Cabinet by the Minister for approval?

When does the Minister anticipate that he will be able to announce the regional plan for these counties?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during the course of my remarks in this House, on December 2 last, I indicated that one of the criteria to be applied in regional government studies is community participation and, where possible, community acceptability. I assure the hon. member that this criteria, along with the seven other criteria I announced, will be applied in the Niagara area proposals.

I also indicated, on December 2, that I will be making a presentation to representatives of the Niagara area municipalities in January. I would certainly expect to receive the views of the representatives on the proposals.

I may also add that these views will receive very serious consideration before legislation is submitted to this House for consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Will the Minister introduce legislation during the current session, outlining the conditions, if any, under which rainmaker machines may be used in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General in four parts.

Is the legal aid programme operating within its budget for 1968?

Number two, what amount has been spent so far this year on legal aid programmes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as submitted to the Speaker is, what amount has been spent so far. There is no "this year"!

Mr. Good: Sorry. Thank you. Well, he got my reference.

Number three, does the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. the Attorney General can only answer the question in the terms it is submitted. Will the hon. member please read question two, again?

Mr. Good: In the context of number one then, what amount has been spent so far on legal aid programmes?

Part three—and Mr. Speaker, with your permission, the initials here are incorrect; they should have been "CA", which in turn means Crown Attorney.

Question three, does the Attorney General agree with—with your permission—Crown Attorney Daufman, of Kitchener, that legal aid has caused delays heaped upon delays and by the time these cases come to trial witnesses forget their testimony, as was reported on radio station CHYM on Oct. 17, 1968?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has lost its meaning now because the hon. member has changed it. Because he starts out asking the Attorney General if he agrees with the Crown Attorney and then it goes on as "he"; presumably the Crown Attorney stated. The member did not read it that way; he read it "as was reported". So perhaps he would place the question and get the proper meaning of it.

Mr. Good: Someone has changed the context on me, then. All right, as he stated on radio station CHYM on Oct. 17, 1968?

Question four, does the Attorney General agree with Mr. Daufman that legal aid is being taken advantage of by some lawyers who ask for remand after remand?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question—is the legal aid programme operating within its budget for 1968?—is yes.

The amount which has been spent so far on the legal aid programme since March 29, 1967—that was the date of inception of the legal aid programme—up to Oct 31 of this year, a total of 19 months, totals $7,700,000.

Mr. Speaker, as to questions three and four, I am not familiar with Mr. Daufman's comments and I am not, therefore, prepared to comment upon them. I will just say that if he said what is reported here, I would not agree with him.

Mr. Good: The Minister would not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would not agree with him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I do not know who changes the questions when they go in to you but somebody without my authority, has changed my questions around.

Mr. Speaker: I would inform the hon. member that Mr. Speaker tried to make a question out of the very long preamble which the member submitted. It was sent back with the suggestion and the question, as it finally came back, was a question that was quite acceptable. As it was submitted in the first place, it was a long statement of facts, which of course is not supported by the rules.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think that you have any right to take a question and destroy the meaning of the question. That is what you have done in this—

Mr. Speaker: I have taken out the advertising material.

Mr. Sargent: Question to the Provincial Secretary. In view of the fact that quality and quantity of the alcoholic content in brand names of spirits in liquor stores are protected by the government fiat, can the Minister advise the reason why the LCBO stores cannot deliver liquor like any other commodity? And two, can the Minister further advise the number of employees in the LCBO outlets and beer stores across Ontario?

Three, can the Minister inform the House the number of LCBO outlets and brewers' warehouses in Ontario?

Four, can the Minister further advise the total number of employees in the year 1957 and the number of employees in the year 1967?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, obviously I will have to take this question as notice to get this material ready. I might say, with the greatest respect, I really do not understand the first question. If Mr. Speaker would permit, I wonder if I could have some clarification in order that I might satisfy myself that I am in fact answering question number one.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, that is the very point you see—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out that this question was accepted by Mr. Speaker as it was submitted, even though he did not know what it meant.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, in answer to your question no—instead of going into a liquor store, lining up, making out a slip, is there a slip that needs a stamp, getting your bag wrapped, and stamped and sneaking home. Why can't you pick up the phone and phone an order of a bottle of booze, like any other commodity?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, I will check into this.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Question for the hon. Attorney General. According to the Journal of Correction, Mr. Minister, it was stated that Canada was the most—I am sorry—was imprisoning 240 people per 100,000 population, 20 per cent more than the United States and 500 more than Norway. Would the Minister advise what Ontario averages per 100,000 population, and why a work release programme cannot be instituted in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this question certainly is related to The Department of Correctional Services, and the figures which he referred to were, I believe, contained in the material published by the department and I. As to the second part of the question, I think that the Minister of Correctional Services answered that very same question recently in the House and I would like to suggest to the hon. member that he either refer his question to my colleague or direct it there, himself.

Mr. Speaker: I agree with the hon. Minister.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): We have been told on other occasions by the Minister of Correctional Services, that he does not do the sentencing. The prisoner, or offender against the law is sentenced under the auspices of the Attorney General's office. This has come up on a number of occasions.

Mr. Speaker: Actually I think what the Minister said was that the second part belongs to the Minister of Correctional Services, and I think he is quite correct, that is a release programme, and on the first part of the question. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for Parkdale, and therefore with permission of the member asking the question I would redirect these questions tomorrow, first part to the Attorney General, and the second part to the Minister of Correctional Services.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, with respect to your ruling, I would point out that the first part of the question does say "it is stated that Canada is imprisoning 240 people per 100,000". True, the Attorney General has to do with sentencing. Not, by any means, all those who are sentenced go to prison. I may not be able to get the figures, but I would not object if the Speaker directs the question to me. Those figures are within the Department of Correctional Services, and I would get them there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, I am sure that the two Ministers concerned will arrange that an answer to this be provided, and perhaps Mr. Minister you would arrange that without any further direction from Mr. Speaker or the member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I rose on a matter of privilege, protesting the lack of opportunity to arrange future activities of the standing committee on labour, and I made reference to the election of the member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps) and stated in effect that he had left the meeting before it adjourned.

I am now aware that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands had not attended the meeting at all, and I want to clear the record and say it was a clear mistake of identification, and I retract the reference to the hon. member in all cases.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order that has to do with your high office. The duty of the Speaker is of course to the members of this House and to this House, and by and large, I think that all members of this House are quite content with the way that duty has been carried out. However, there is something that happened yesterday which is to my mind extremely serious, and I wish to draw it to your attention. When votes were called on Bill 23, there were 21 government members in this House and 31 members of the Opposition. The government members, I may say, rather weakly called their aye; the 31 members of the Opposition very loudly, much louder than the government, called out nay, and yet, Mr. Speaker, the deputy speaker in your absence said—and he blushed when he said it—he smiled, in my opinion—"the ayes have it".

He knew very well that the ayes did not have it. Apparently there is a tradition in this House for the Speaker in moments of this type to forget his neutrality and to resume a partisan political role. I would like to suggest to you that this is a very bad tradition. It removes the respect which we in this House hold for the person holding that high office, and I would like to request to you that such an instance does not occur again.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I would like to point out to the hon. member that from where he sits surrounded by people, by members, who undoubtedly will be calling the same response to a vote as he, the sound might be much louder than the sound which Mr. Speaker—

Order—the hon. member was speaking about the ruling of the chair that the ayes had it, as I understand it, and I am pointing out to him that from where he sits, which is quite natural, he undoubtedly would have heard many more of the one vote, than he would of the other. One of the reasons Mr. Speaker is placed in the centre, and at the head, is so that he not only may look over the whole Chamber but that he may hear impartially from both ears, from both sides. And, therefore, it would be my opinion—not having been in the House at that moment—that it would have been more than likely—knowing the hon. chairman of the committee of the whole House—that undoubtedly he ruled as he heard.

I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing that to my attention, because there is some substance in what he says, but my own view of it is as I have stated.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I just add to this then that it is quite possible that sitting over here I may have perhaps heard the nays more loudly. May I suggest to you that there were some neutral people in the House at that time who are not known for their bias towards this party, and they were sitting in the press gallery. May I suggest, sir, that you have someone from your department question those men as to what happened in this House and you may then wish to make a different comment on the situation, sir.

Mr. Speaker: All that needs to be said on this matter has been said by Mr. Speaker, and the matter rests as so far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: With respect, I suggest that all has not been said that needs to be said. It is correct as the hon. member for High Park has said, that with one exception—which was startling in its uniqueness—the chairman of the committee or the Speaker of this House has never conceded that the government had been defeated in the voice vote, even when it was obvious.

The exception was when the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) on one occasion took a long look at the House and it was obvious there were more Opposition members than the other and he say "the nays have it", and it took about five minutes for the stunned members on the government side of the House to realize what had happened.

I think the point the hon. member for High Park has said is valid—that if there is in your view an equal balance, or more noise coming from the left side of the House, or if the Speaker is not certain and he examines by a quick count that there are more members on the Opposition side, that the truth should be spoken by the Speaker, not the tradition of invariably conceding it as an aye to the government.

Hon. Mr. White: Small potatoes.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not small potatoes at all; it is the system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Surely this House has important business which should now be proceeded with.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 1st order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE DEBATE

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, when I last had the pleasure of having a discourse with you, you may recall I was making some mild criticisms of The Department of Health. You may also recall that I chose The Department of Health to speak about this year democratically by democratic vote of all the members of the Opposition as to which was the most inefficiently run department in the House.

You may also recall that the Minister of Health won that vote by an overwhelming majority. So for that reason, I began by discussing air pollution, which up to this point at least has been one of the Minister's prime, if somewhat neglected, responsibilities.

And because one of the worst areas in this province as far as air pollution is concerned was Sudbury, I chose Sudbury as the area to begin and I discussed International Nickel briefly, you may recall, sir, I related how the Toronto Star had very enterprisingly hired a McGill University student, one Mark Starowicz, who bravely at night climbed in over the slag heap surrounding International Nickel and who had carried a Drager meter with him and how he found that the true level of sulphur dioxide within that plant is some 200 parts per million, near a certain area of the plant, while a safe level is only five parts per million.

I also told you, sir, you may recall, how INCO had denied this, how the inspectors from The Department of Mines had never been able to discover this, perhaps because they gave one day's notice every time they went to visit. I also told you something about the safety record, the excellent safety record of INCO, which is half that of the industry, and which is cooked by bringing sick people who cannot walk into the plant and putting them to bed in the plant itself. I am rather amused, Mr. Speaker, because in yesterday's Toronto Daily Star, by some coincidence, there is an article by one Mark Starowicz which bears some resemblance to the facts which I brought out here.

The heading of that article, which is what I want to draw to your attention, is "Company claim charges impossible". Well, the company claimed a little too quickly, Mr. Speaker, because I have not quite finished what I was going to say. Unfortunately we came to the hour and I was not able to reveal these facts, as I would have that day, if I had had time, but unfortunately we ran out of time, and these "impossible charges", these things that they deny can now be proved.

Mr. Shulman: Well, there is one other little piece of evidence I have here which I shall subsequently take great pleasure in showing to the Minister of Mines (Mr. Lawrence) if he is interested and there is some question about that.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a measurement of the sulphur dioxide in the INCO plant. This was not made by the union, this was not made by Mark Starowicz, this was made by the International Nickel Company themselves. They are very, very good record keepers and they like to know how badly they are poisoning their workers, so they have a little machine up there, and they keep a record of the sulphur dioxide in the plant. And it is very interesting. On the day that inspectors are coming, the sulphur dioxide level is about one part per million, in fact it runs right along the zero line. But, when the inspectors are not there, Mr. Speaker, strangely enough the sulphur dioxide level goes creeping away up over the safe level.

Well, here is the record. It is on INCO paper, it was done by INCO, and let me say, in case you are wondering how I got this, Mr. Speaker, everyone who works at INCO is not quite as callous as the board of directors. The board of directors do not care. "Get that nickel out, get it out as cheap as you can, do not worry about The Department of Mines, we do not have to worry about them, we gave the government $100,000."

You recall, Mr. Speaker, that Mark Starowicz was interviewed by the director of public relations from INCO and he revealed—spilled the beans unfortunately—revealed the amount that the government received in donations before the last election.

Well, I have the evidence here in my hand produced by INCO. Let them say tomorrow these charges are impossible and I am delighted to show this to any member of the House who is interested. I will not give it to the Minister of Mines—he is waving "please give it to me"—no, no, Mr. Speaker, I do not want anything to happen to it, but I would be delighted to show it to the Minister at any time.

Well, there was one matter, this time in relation to Sudbury and in relation to the safety record at INCO. It disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, to find that the safety record at INCO should be so very bad, while in fact, the Workmen's Compensation Board figures show it to be so very, very good.

I could not understand this, Mr. Speaker, I felt after all before October of last year there must have been responsible members of this House who would get up and reveal the true facts. So, Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be interesting to look back, so this morning I went to the library in this building to see what had been said about INCO in the recent past before the election of the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) and myself and other members of this party, and I was delighted to find a quotation here which perhaps reveals why INCO has been able to get away with this for so long. I will read you the quotation:

INCO and Falconbridge know how to mine the ore. If the hon. Minister wants to know something about the technique of mining, telephone INCO and Falconbridge and ask them how it is done. They are the experts. This department—

He is talking about The Department of Mines—

This department so far as I can see does two things, it looks after safety but with INCO and Falconbridge it does not have to bother very much about that because there are not two industries on the continent more conscious of the need for safety of the personnel who work for them.

The date is February 27, 1964, and the speaker at that time was the member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker.

Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps this explains part of the problem in Sudbury.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough East): Extreme provocation for the chair.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury) is acting as Deputy Speaker.)

Mr. Shulman: You see, Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury East and myself and other members from the north were not present then and Sudbury unfortunately had to depend for its representation in this House, and for the people to speak for safety of the men, on the then member for Sudbury. So, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I think perhaps you will understand why the safety level in Sudbury is so low; why men are suffering so badly in Sudbury; why perhaps with the Opposition at that time so weak, why perhaps The Department of Mines was able to get away by notifying INCO every time they were going to do an inspection.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: If the Speaker would like me to take his place while he can defend himself—

Mr. Speaker: Well I do not think the point of order is well taken. The overriding characteristic of this House, of course, is its dependence upon free speech.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): And impartiality of the chair.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You made that decision without giving us a chance to debate.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, on a more serious level—and that is very serious—but on a more serious level, the men were fooled for a long time in Sudbury and the union was not active on this for a long time in Sudbury. But they are not fooled any more, they know the facts; they have read what Starowicz found; they knew themselves before he went up there but now it has been proven. The material is available, it is being reproduced and every worker in Sudbury is going to get a copy of the true facts up there.

They are not going to be prepared to put up with this type of management; they are not prepared any longer to put up with this type of mines inspection; and I very much fear unless this government steps in immediately—and I mean immediately—and I fear very much that there is little hope of that with the present Minister, unless the government steps in immediately there is going to be an eruption in Sudbury which is going to shake this province. The union-company contract is running out in a very short time.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Oh, INCO is looking into that.

Mr. Shulman: We have already had plants by INCO in the Sudbury Star of "facts" to say that they are well overstocked with ore. Really, the implication was that if the men go out on strike they can stand it a long time and INCO is not going to suffer.

It is not true, mind you, because they need that ore and they are gobbling it up as fast as they can get it, but this is the first shot. The men are not so much disturbed about the matter of money. I do not think the wages are the major problem. What they are disturbed about is the fact that they are being killed in that plant.

And unless this government, this Department of Mines, steps in to ensure that INCO does something immediately to remove this dangerous situation both within and outside the plant, you are going to have a strike that is going to be ridden with violence.

There is going to be a long strike, and the people—not only of Sudbury, but of all Ontario—are going to suffer grievously as a result. So, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister, I ask you for goodness sake do something now, because if you do not we are all going to suffer very grievously.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to leave this subject now. I am going to go to a very different matter referring to an area of Ontario which unfortunately is not too well represented. Fortunately northern Ontario is now well represented and I would now like to discuss an area of the province which perhaps does not get as aggressive representation as northern Ontario. Of course I am referring to eastern Ontario.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, I must confess that our party has done very poorly at the polls in eastern Ontario. We get a tiny fraction of the vote, something—

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): So have the voters done very poorly.

Mr. Shulman: We get a very tiny fraction of the vote, Mr. Speaker, sometimes in some of the ridings like Glengarry, it runs around five per cent. Therefore, you can imagine my amazement, Mr. Speaker, when a delegation came to see me from eastern Ontario and asked if I would raise a matter for them in the Legislature.

This delegation came from Stormont riding and the member for Stormont riding I know to be a genial gentleman for whom I have the highest personal regard. He is certainly one of the least partisan members of this House.

In fact, I would say he is one of the nicest gentlemen in this House. And yet the people of his riding came to me because they were very upset. They have a very serious problem in their riding and the member for their riding—although he was very sympathetic with their problem—was not able to help them. In fact he had not even been able to get them an appointment with the Minister involved.

Frankly, I discounted this at first, Mr. Speaker, because I thought it must be a mistake and these people must be in error and I really did not do anything about it—I am embarrassed now. But then, the following week, Mr. Speaker, another delegation came with a petition—this time from Glengarry riding, Mr. Speaker. This petition is signed by some 500 names and I thought, having received this petition, perhaps I should get up in the House because it really—

Mr. Lewis: That will bring our vote to eight per cent.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to digress for a moment—the Minister of Mines has asked if he may see this draft and I am sending it over to him now, sir. I would appreciate it if you would see that I get it back.

Mr. Speaker, this petition which I received from Glengarry riding—and, Mr. Speaker, I am a little embarrassed at reading the heading of this petition; I am not going to take the time of the House by reading all the names because—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I will read the wording in the petition. I am a little embarrassed, Mr. Speaker, I really am, because I do not know this member particularly well. I do not think he has spoken any time I have been in the House, but I am sure he does his job to the best of his ability, Mr. Speaker, and for that reason I am a little embarrassed for him.

In any case it reads as follows:

Re: the closing of St. Lawrence Sanitarium.

We the undersigned would like to protest against the closing of the sanitarium until it is investigated more thoroughly.

and it follows underneath:

A sample of lists of people of Glengarry who protest unilateral decisions of Toronto bureaucracy; who protest that no one represents them in Toronto Parliament; who promise Mr. Osie Villeneuve to vote for anyone but him.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is then followed by some pages of names and addresses of people who live in the Glengarry riding.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps I should look into this matter. I agree that eastern Ontario has been badly treated by the government but on the other hand they have voted Conservative for a fairly lengthy time and they must take a certain amount of abuse for that reason.

But in any case—well I must point out to you, Mr. Speaker, I was rather delighted that the people of Glengarry and of Stormont at least were intelligent enough to come to the NDP, rather than to that other party which has done somewhat better at the polls that we have down in eastern Ontario. But somehow I wonder next time—they do not seem to have much faith in the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is he for real, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can understand the member for Sarnia's interruption, he has had a rather rough week in the House; he has raised two points and he has done poorly on them, but I will forgive him for that reason.

Mr. Bullbrook: The member should be in the House when I speak.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I shall look forward with delight to being in the House when the member for Sarnia speaks. I would never miss it because I must always make great notes so I can correct his errors.

Mr. Speaker, to come back to the point which I was discussing: under these circumstances I felt I should investigate this matter of eastern Ontario a little more carefully and so I travelled down there and I found to my amazement, Mr. Speaker, that the St. Lawrence sanitarium is being closed through an error.

I will tell you about that shortly. The following groups in that area around Cornwall realized it was an error and you may find this a rather diverse list. I will read it to you, it amazed me: the Cornwall Academy of Medicine; the Cornwall Ministerial Association; Dr. Z. Gorecki, the medical superintendent of St. Lawrence Sanitarium; a grand jury report made in September last; the Cornwall and district Labour Council; the newspaper, the Standard Freeholder; the mayor of Cornwall; the Catholic Women's League; the city council of Cornwall; the superintendent of nurses of the Cornwall Sanitarium and each and every patient.

All of these groups, all of these people—

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister without Portfolio): How many patients?

Mr. Shulman: We will be coming to that very shortly—19 Mr. Speaker. All of these groups, Mr. Speaker, were protesting the closing of the Cornwall sanitarium to their representatives—protesting that a mistake had been made. They protested that the Minister of Health was closing the sanitarium and they were having a little difficulty getting to see the Minister to protest this.

Well they had good Conservative representation in the House—there were three members involved actually, the third one was from Grenville-Dundas, Mr. Speaker.

Well they approached the three members and the people tell me that they received a very sympathetic hearing; that all three members agreed that it was an error to close the sanitarium. If I am in error, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to be corrected by any one of the three members if they feel it is correct to close the sanitarium.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, I never said it was an error, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Shulman: Well in that case, Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. The member for Stormont is in favour of closing the sanitarium, I think—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have made all the representations to the Minister in question on this, representing my constituents. Then, when I get word there are only 19 patients—and not all of them TB cases—and after a task force, who were not members of the government, decided to close the sanitarium and take the patients to the Ottawa Sanitarium and once the department had made a firm decision, then I had no choice but to support the Minister of Health. And I will again in the future.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for High Park may take the point as well taken. As I understand the rule if an hon. member says that he is misrepresented in the position he is taking, then he is at liberty to elucidate his position on the matter and I think the hon. member must accept the explanation.

Mr. Shulman: By all means, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear the explanation as a matter of fact.

An hon. member: Close that issue then.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I am not quite through with it yet.

The people in Cornwall and in Glengarry and in Grenville-Dundas are a little upset, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, what they decided to do, Mr. Speaker, was to set up a representative group to speak to the Minister of Health and see if they could not point out the errors it had made in its decision, so that he could correct them.

So what they did was to set up a committee consisting of Doctor McGuire, Doctor Corbeil and Doctor Sprulle. They approached their local member and said: "Could you arrange for our committee to have an interview with Doctor Dymond because he is coming to Cornwall anyway to open a nursing association home?"

The Minister was very courteous to them. He said he would attempt to set up the meeting with the Minister of Health. He was most kind, as he always is. I presume he approached the Minister of Health, but unfortunately he did not have enough influence with the Minister and the Minister of Health refused to see this delegation. And the delegation—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is incorrect. I approached the Minister's office and the Minister was away from his office on that day. His secretary told me she thought everything would be fine.

So I left Toronto and when I got to Cornwall I told the doctors that, as far as I knew, there would be a meeting with the Minister the next day. In the meantime, the Minister of Health had a press conference which cleared the facts. These are the facts.

Mr. Shulman: I am happy to accept the facts as the Minister has presented them. The fact is, unfortunately, that the Minister of Health refused to see the delegation. He was in Cornwall and they were standing there asking to speak to him and he refused.

Well, now that we leave that aside, let us look at the facts of the Cornwall closing. It seems very odd to me, Mr. Speaker, that when we have such unanimity of all the people of this area that an error was being made and when there was at least a sympathetic hearing from the three members involved, it seems very odd that the Minister of Health would press ahead with closing this institution.

So I looked into it a little further and it is not really the Minister of Health's fault. Actually, he hired a task force of very prominent men and they went around the sanitoriums in the province to see which ones should be closed.

We are very fortunate in this day and age that the tuberculosis problem is gradually being reduced. We need fewer sanitorium beds and so it is possible to close sanitoriums from time to time and move these patients into other accommodation.

This is a very eminent task force. I will read their names: Doctor A. R. J. Boyd, MOH of Toronto; Doctor J. B. Cook, MOH of Sudbury; Doctor H. T. Ewert, the superintendent from Mountain Sanitorium in Hamilton; Doctor Charlotte Horner, MOH of Northumberland-Durham Health Unit; Doctor McClintock, director of the Gage; Doctor McLennan, the TB Prevention Service, Toronto; Doctor Rorabeck, chief of the TB Prevention Service, Toronto; Doctor Shaffer, superintendent of Niagara Peninsula sanitoriums, St. Catharines; and Doctor C. A. Wick, superintendent of the Toronto Hospital, Weston.

Mr. MacDonald: That is an army, not a task force.

Mr. Shulman: Well, this task force travelled around to all the various sanitoriums. After making a presumably reasonable examination, they decided that the one in Cornwall should be closed. Well—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: The sanitorium is not in Cornwall, the sanitorium is in Glengarry. Point of order—he just said the sanitorium was in Cornwall—

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the rule, the hon. member may rise if he is being misrepresented or is being misquoted but—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I am being misquoted.

Mr. Speaker: But it is not the function of a member to assist another member in making his speech. Perhaps he will—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I thank you but I am always glad of the assistance of the members of the House in making my speech because I would not want any errors in anything I say. If there is anything that is not completely correct, please gentlemen, feel free to assist me.

Well the members of the task force travelled to the various sanitoriums and they decided the one near Cornwall should be closed.

Now, on what grounds did they decide this? Was this a matter of expense; was it a matter of vacancy; was it a matter of convenience? Not exactly, Mr. Speaker. To my great dismay and to my embarrassment for the members involved, the task force made a mistake.

They got their figures mixed up and the Minister of Health, in accepting their ruling, in his usual inimitable way, would not go back and look. They presented figures which indicated the costs were double what they actually are at Cornwall and this, undoubtedly, was one of the factors.

I have all the figures here now, Mr. Speaker, and at the moment I am not going to say anything about the human factor involved. I will come to that later because that is really the important thing.

First of all, I want to explain the error that was made by the task force and really, what I am doing now, Mr. Speaker, is pleading through you, not to the Minister of Health, but to the Prime Minister of this province. A member of the Cabinet got up publicly the day before yesterday and said—I saw him on television—that in the urban areas the Conservative Party is dead from the eyeballs in both directions.

Unless the Prime Minister intervenes here, you will be able to make the same comment about the rural party in eastern Ontario. You can still save those three seats, Mr. Prime Minister, if you will rescind this ruling because you made a very bad mistake.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking now for the benefit of the Conservative Party, out of loyalty to my old connections with them and I am giving them an opportunity to save three seats in eastern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, to carry on with the error made by the task force and which has been carried on by the Minister of Health who has been unwilling to even discuss it, unwilling to hear the representations in Cornwall, I have here first of all, the figures for every sanitarium in the province showing the vacancy rate and the beds available.

Cornwall has 20 beds available, 19 in residence; Fort William has 150 beds available, 29 in residence; Hamilton has 43 available, 28 in residence; Kingston has 50 available, 30 in residence; Kitchener has 42 available; 22 in residence; London has 103 available, 69 in residence; Ottawa has 53 available, 19 in residence; St. Catharines has 107 available, 50 in residence; Sudbury has 38 available, 34 in residence; Weston has 366 available, 222 in residence; Windsor has 36 available, 26 in residence.

That is a total of 1,008 beds, with 548 in residence. The overall vacancy rate is 46 per cent. In Windsor, the vacancy rate is 28 per cent; in Weston 39 per cent; in Sudbury 11 per cent; in St. Catharines 53 per cent; in Ottawa 64 per cent; in London 33 per cent; in Kitchener 48 per cent; in Kingston 40 per cent; in Hamilton 35 per cent; in Fort William 81 per cent. In Cornwall it is only 5 per cent. They are closing the sanitarium which has the highest occupancy rate!

Point two. I have the figures here—

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): May I speak on a point of privilege?

I question the figures that the member has mentioned for Fort William. Where did he get them from? I happened to be at the sanitarium on Sunday.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for Fort William, but I think his point is not well taken. If there is disagreement with an item of information presented by an hon. member during the speech, then it is open to the hon. member at a subsequent time to correct it. But I do not think it is in order to get up and interrupt an hon. member to correct factual information when he is making his answer to the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: How does he spend his Sundays there?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, actually I can explain the confusion in the member's mind. These figures are as of August 31, 1968. They were collected by the task force which I have previously referred to. The figures may have changed since that time.

Now what about costs? Mr. Speaker, I do not have the cost of all the sanitariums. I do have them for four. Here are the figures Mr. Speaker: The cost per day per patient is really the important thing if we are thinking of closing a sanitarium, outside of the human factor, which I will get to by and by. At the Mountain sanitarium in Hamilton, the cost is $30.40 per day; at the Ongwanada sanitarium in Kingston, it is $25.10 per day; at the Royal Ottawa sanitarium in Ottawa it is $28.80 per day; at the St. Lawrence sanitarium in Cornwall, the cost is only $14.80 per day, Mr. Speaker—half the cost of the other sanitarium.

Well perhaps there is no TB out in eastern Ontario. Maybe they do not really need a sanitarium, or maybe that is what the task force is thinking. Well I looked into that matter too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): Will the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Shulman: Certainly.

Mr. Villeneuve: Can he tell me how many patients actually have to be isolated in the sanitarium?

An hon. member: He does not know.

Mr. Villeneuve: If he does not know, I will tell him—four.

Mr. Shulman: I will give the members a little information on TB. The number of patients in sanitarium does not relate to the number of patients who have to be isolated. The same thing applies to every sanitarium across the province. Of course, you do not have to be isolated unless the disease is open.

Once you have reached a certain level in your treatment, then Mr. Speaker, you do not have to be isolated but you still must be in a place like a sanitarium. I suppose we could put them in the general hospitals and keep out the people who have to have babies and appendix operations if this is what the member is suggesting.

But those 19 patients have to be chronically hospitalized, and the fact that they do not have to be isolated is a complete irrelevancy which is nonsense that we should have expected from this quarter.

Well to carry on, Mr. Speaker, you may recall, I was discussing with you the matter of whether the level of TB is high in eastern Ontario or whether, perhaps, they have cleared the whole problem and they did not need sanitariums there any more.

So I looked that up, Mr. Speaker, and here it is: According to the latest report of the TB division of The Health Department of Ontario, there are yearly 19.5 new active cases of TB per 100,000 population in this province.

This morbidity has levelled off without much hope for a further rapid improvement. Let me repeat that figure, Mr. Speaker—19.5 new active cases of TB per 100,000 for all of the province. For the backward county of Glengarry—when I say backward I mean healthwise, Mr. Speaker, it was certainly intended as no slur otherwise. For the medically backward county of Glengarry, which is in the region of eastern Ontario, east of Cornwall on the border of Quebec province, the rate, Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed to say is 39.6 per 100,000 or twice as high as the average rate for all of Ontario.

This is where we are getting the TB from. This is why the rate in Ontario is so high, because there are two areas in the province where the TB rate is high. On the Indian reservation, and in eastern Ontario. That is where we need a sanitarium, Mr. Speaker.

Well, Mr. Speaker, how did the task force make such a mistake? By perusing their report, I discovered how this all occurred. They went down that list of sanatoria and they saw that Cornwall was the smallest sanatorium and they looked at the cost and somehow, Mr. Speaker, they got down that the cost per day was $37.31.

Somebody who had prepared the figures had made a mistake, and this is how the whole silly error occurred. This is why the Minister of Health has now got himself into a ridiculous position. And he would not listen to the people who came and tried to tell him when an error had been made.

The findings have been published by the Ontario Hospital Association. These show the daily cost of each patient is $14.80, with $7.72 of that used for food. The figures in the task report were $37.31 with $8.50 of this attributed to food. They have made a grievous error, and this Minister would not listen.

Mr. MacDonald: Insensible—that is the term we have used so often.

An hon. member: Senseless is the word.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps senseless too.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the people approached their member, and he was very sympathetic as I said. He wrote them a lovely letter, which they were kind enough to send to me and I thought perhaps the member would like to have his name in the records of Hansard, and he might like to have his letter quoted.

This is from the member for Glengarry, Mr. Speaker. I will not take your time by reading the whole letter, it is really very sad, but I will read you one sentence:

I can assure you that we have the interests of our population at heart, but some of these decisions are beyond our recommendations, and because the Minister in charge has a budget to work on, and he feels that the general public will not suffer adversely by this decision.

Well the phrase there that appeals to me is that some of these decisions are beyond our recommendation, and I do not like to digress, Mr. Speaker, but I am a little disturbed that none of the members from that area got up in this House to fight for their constituents.

I am just suggesting through you, sir, to their constituents and to the people of the rest of Ontario, if you are represented by a member who is a member of the ruling party, who may even be in the Cabinet, his recommendations will not be followed; perhaps, sir, it is time they got more active representation.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what comes of being in a Tory pocket borough.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a brief was prepared regarding closure of the St. Lawrence sanatorium in Cornwall, Ontario. This brief was prepared by a number of the medical people at the sanatorium headed by Dr. Z. Gorecki.

Perhaps I should tell you that Dr. Gorecki has some 11 years' experience at the sanatorium as the director. Just last month he was given the honour by the Ontario Hospital Association of presiding over the tuberculosis programme which was held during their 44th annual convention on October 28, 29 and 30, at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto.

He has been highly praised by one Dr. M. D. Dymond, present Minister of Health. His credentials are beyond question. His ability is beyond question by anyone, including The Department of Health. This is a brief prepared, under the direction of Dr. Gorecki, by the medical and nursing staff of that hospital.

I wish to read it in full, Mr. Speaker, because I feel this is a very important matter to the people of eastern Ontario, and I think it is very important that someone speak for them in this House.

I will quote the brief, Mr. Speaker:

Brief regarding proposed closure of the St. Lawrence sanatorium in Cornwall, Ontario.

Relying on the advice of an anonymous task force whose members from Toronto and west of Toronto never investigated local regional conditions of the Cornwall area, The Ontario Health Department ordered closure of the St. Lawrence sanatorium. The St. Lawrence sanatorium was built in 1937 by the people of the Cornwall region, because our area at that time had the highest rate of TB in the province. We still have a comparatively very high rate of TB. The people of the county, dollar by dollar, collected one-third of the cost of the buildings and bought the land.

They then appealed to the federal and provincial governments to provide the remainder with moneys collected through taxation.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): The member's own leader is not even listening to him.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, if I may digress for a moment to make a comment through you, sir, to the Minister of Revenue. I must digress; I am sorry to do this. I will explain to him—the reason my leader does not have to hear this is because he has had the pleasure of reading this brief already, because, of course, I would not bring anything up in this House without first consulting with him. The other point I should mention, I have not yet congratulated the—

Mr. MacDonald: If the Minister was not talking so much he might be able to listen.

Mr. Shulman: I have not yet congratulated the Minister on his high elevation to the Cabinet. I am very pleased that he has made Cabinet; I think he will make a great addition to the Cabinet. He is certainly one of the finest brains in the Cabinet; in fact I think he has one of the finest brains produced in the 18th century. And I wish him well.

Mr. Lewis: That is putting it ahead of his time in that category.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, to continue: I quote again, Mr. Speaker:

The people of the country, dollar by dollar, collected one third of the cost of the buildings and bought the land. They then appealed to federal and provincial government to provide the remainder with moneys collected through taxation.

Is it too costly to treat TB locally? The latest official report for 1967 shows the per diem cost: St. Lawrence Sanitarium, $14.80; Royal Ottawa Sanitarium, $28.80; Kingston Sanitarium, $25.10; Mountain Sanitarium, Hamilton, $30.40.

TB is not a disease of the past. One hundred and fifty one new cases of bacillary infectious TB were found in the Cornwall region since 1961, in addition to a greater number of non-bacillary TB. Fifty per cent of those in need of treatment come from French-Canadian families.

Compared to the region of the rich west of Toronto (Golden Horseshoe), where there are close to each other four sanitarium Toronto, Hamilton, Niagara, Kitchener—the Cornwall area has a lot of poor families, and only a few years ago Cornwall was designated as a depressed region. Due to overcrowding and poor housing, this region finds shocking cases of a father infecting four or infecting eight children before he reports for treatment.

It will be only much worse when the local sanitarium will be closed. The number of recent admissions to the sanitarium in the Cornwall region did not drop drastically.

In 1938, 75 patients admitted to the sanitarium; 1958, 67 patients admitted to the sanitarium; 1968, 60, the number of projected admissions to the end of December.

Mr. Speaker, I am stopping my quotation for the moment just to digress because those figures are terribly important. This shows that although the TB figure in the rest of the province has dropped drastically—which has resulted in other sanitarium becoming 50 or 60 or 80 per cent vacant—in Cornwall, because of the high TB rate, in Glengarry the sanitarium has remained practically as heavily occupied as it was way back in 1938 before this battle against TB was begun. And so another reason why this sanitarium should be preserved. I will go back to my quotation now from the brief, Mr. Speaker:

Bed occupancy: The official report for July, 1968, shows: in Ottawa, 47 per cent empty beds; in Kitchener, 40 per cent empty beds; in St. Catharines, 50 per cent empty beds; in Cornwall, 25 per cent empty beds. Bed occupancy in Cornwall in 1967 was 87 per cent; projected for 1968 is 92 per cent.

Ninety-two per cent occupied for Cornwall. There is not a record like that anywhere else in the province.

Mr. Villeneuve: May I inform the hon. member that a wing of it serves as an annex for the Cornwall General Hospital for chronic cases, and that is why there is high occupancy.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I was coming to that. I am glad the member for Glengarry brought that up, because I will digress again—

Mr. Martel: He seems to be opposed to it.

Mr. Shulman: I am not quite sure whether the member for Glengarry wants this sanitarium kept open or kept closed. If he would like to rise and state his views, I would be delighted to give him the floor for that purpose, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think he is too anxious. He does not wish the floor so I shall continue.

I would like to stress that, Mr. Speaker, I am honestly, sincerely, asking through you, sir, to the House leader and to the Prime Minister, save this sanitarium. This should be an apolitical matter. It is not. Because it is in this House and because I am saying it, it is a political matter; but I should not be saying it. I should not have to be saying it; it should have been said by men on that side of the House. But for goodness sake, do the right thing for once.

Anyway, to come back. Yes, of course, it has been used for a chronic patients' adjunct by the general hospital there, which is one more reason to preserve it. Where are these people to go?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Ottawa.

Mr. Shulman: Now we hear from the Minister without Portfolio that they want to send them to Ottawa. Now the truth comes out, they want to send them to Ottawa. I will come to that by and by, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: St. Catharines is next.

Mr. Shulman: I hope the record will show that the member for Stormont said Ottawa.

I will continue with the brief, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I will continue:

Economy: If a patient from the Cornwall area will be forced to go for treatment to Kingston or Ottawa, the daily cost of treatment will be twice as high. What about the hardships for the family of the poor wishing to visit the sick? A bus trip to Ottawa is $5.40, plus taxi, because the sanitarium is located far away from the bus terminal. A bus trip to Kingston is $8.10. As only the local people know too well, the communication with Ottawa is poor. We have no trains, whereas the commuter system west of Toronto is excellent and there are four sanitariums close to each other.

Dr. Z. Gorecki, MD,
Superintendent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not really think I need add anything more about sending these people to Ottawa; the brief speaks for itself. I am sorry that the Minister without Portfolio feels this way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the government is interested in savings and obviously the Minister missed one line, so I will repeat it: "If a patient from the Cornwall area will be forced to go for treatment to Ottawa, the daily cost of treatment will be twice as high," plus the cost to the family.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: For 19 patients, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: For 19 patients, Mr. Speaker, plus their families. If we are talking about costs, Mr. Speaker, it does not matter whether it is one patient or 100 patients. This involves 19 people at this moment but not 19 patients—let us not get confused. There were 70 patients admitted this year and there is going to be 70 next year, 70 the year after. Each one of those patient's costs are going to be twice as high as they are now.

It is not just affecting the 19 patients who are in there now. There are many more patients who will be admitted in the future if the government intervenes to save this sanitarium. You are going to push the cost for all of those patients twice as high.

Now, let us leave the money aside, they are wrong in the money; let us leave the convenience aside, they are wrong in the convenience; let us leave the occupancy rate aside, the cost of running it aside; what about the human beings involved?

This is really the ultimate important factor. Do we really, as a government—and now I say all of us—do we really want to see this occur? Do we really want to take chronically ill people and place them far away from their homes in chronic hospitals where, I think it must be obvious to all, the rate of visiting is going to be much lower? Where they are going to see their families much less? Where they are going to be able to get home for the day much less? Surely we as a group do not want to do this.

I do not think there is a member in the House who wants to do this, whether in the Conservative Party or in the Liberal Party or the NDP.

I ask the support of the member for Glengarry and the ex-member for Stormont, because I have not brought this up really to try and embarrass them. I would have preferred to have settled it earlier. One of these gentlemen, particularly, happens to be, I know, a very fine gentleman who does his best for his people.

I say now, Mr. Speaker, through you to the House leader who is here, intervene. A very grievous error is being made and I would consider it—and I am sure the member for Glengarry would consider it, the member for Stormont would consider it—an act of humanity if the government would intervene now and correct this mistake. Do not close this sanitarium. It is supposed to be closed in two weeks. Do not do it! Because you are making a grievous mistake; a grievous mistake politically; a grievous mistake in terms of humanism.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to go on to another matter here. But before I do there is a matter I wish to mention in connection with air pollution. I would like to make a small digression a little later in my brief comment about The Department of Health.

I had hoped to say a few words about mental retardation, and there is someone in the building at the present time to whom I wish to draw the members' attention. I do not want to keep her here any longer, because it is a great strain having her here. I will explain why I brought her in the first place.

One of the problems is that mental retardation has been grossly neglected in this province. I will come to this in some detail later on. But it's a very serious human problem that people who had mentally retarded children—so severely mentally retarded that they can not speak, in some case can not recognize; they cry all the time; they are a constant agony for those about them—cannot get these people into an Ontario hospital.

One of those children is here today. I asked the parents to bring her down, and I will explain why.

Her name is Susan A, she is a hopelessly retarded child who cannot be by herself for five minutes. She is 5½ years old and she has been on a waiting list to get into Orillia for 5½ years, ever since she was born. I have made a personal plea to get her in—as her doctor, not as her MP. As her doctor I pleaded, before I was ever elected here.

Since then I have been down at the hospital and she still can not get up to the head of that list after 5½ years. She is in the west lobby and I am inviting a few of the members, particularly from the Conservative side, to go into the west lobby now, talk to her parents, see what this child is like, see the horror that this family and countless other families are going through in this province because this department is being run so badly.

Please, somebody, go and see so you will know that I am not making this up. I am telling you the truth. I am going to talk about this into some detail later on, but I don't want to keep this child here; it is very difficult for the parents to have her here.

She is not an isolated case. She is on a long list; she has been on that list for 5½ years. How long must they suffer? They do not just suffer the agonies of this child; they are also being broken financially. The wife must stay home constantly; she can not go out to work, and the family is suffering grievously financially. Why can not we get help for her? Why can not we get this child into a hospital? I will come back to that.

I want to say a few words about this report of the committee appointed to inquire into a report upon the pollution of air, soil and water. This report damns the government. Its final recommendation is that a department of pollution control be set up, and with all this I can agree most heartily. We certainly need a department of pollution control. Surely what came out in the House about Sudbury and INCO points out the tremendous need to take pollution control away from the Ministry where it now is.

I do not like throwing kudos to the government, but you do happen to have a man on those benches who can handle this quite well. I am referring, of course, to the member for Quinte; I hope this is not the kiss of death. But for goodness sake—this is a department that has been abandoned; nothing has been done; we need aggressive hands at the helm there. We can not wait until the next election.

We need someone immediately to take hold of the pollution problem, to take an aggressive position, to step in on the collective companies down in Port Maitland and Dunnville, to step into the INCO situation. You have to take this out of The Department of Health; you must set up a department of pollution control.

I hope that this recommendation by the committee will be followed by the government.

But there is one matter that comes into the report which disturbs me. I have a deep doubt, Mr. Speaker, about the personnel of the Royal commission that has been set up in this province. The government sometimes appear to lean over backward to make sure they get the results they want. I was very disturbed when the personnel of this particular committee was announced because, you may recall, Mr. Speaker, that this committee was really set up as result of the work of Dr. Waldbott which was revealed by the CBC. Dr. Waldbott certainly should have been the key witness in any such enquiry; I don't think there is any question among the medical men in this country, or around the world, that he is one of the leading experts on chlorosis. He, of course, did not testify.

The head of the committee is Dr. Hall, and I found that upsetting because Dr. Hall was an old antagonist of Dr. Waldbott dating back to the fluoridation hearings that were also held here under the jurisdiction of The Department of Health. The two men disagreed, if you may recall, Mr. Speaker, quite extensively. I would have thought that the government would have been a little discreet and appointed someone who had not already disagreed with Dr. Waldbott before the hearing began.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Waldbott did not testify, and that is a great pity, because one of the findings, the key findings of the committee—the one that was in the headlines of the three newspapers—was that the fluoride in the air, in the ground, on the ground, on the vegetables, was not a danger to human beings. I am very much afraid, Mr. Speaker, that this may not prove to be true. I don't know.

There is certainly doubt in the minds of many. There is doubt in my mind; there is very acute doubt in the mind of Dr. Waldbott. Why didn't he testify? Why didn't they hear his words? After all, I see here on page 81 of the report, they heard—you will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, I must smile while I read this—they heard a recognized specialist in the field of chlorosis, Dr. Yendt. Dr. Yendt and I went to school together and I think he would be a little embarrassed to find himself called a recognized expert in the field of fluorosis. He was one of the smartest men in my class; he is one of the best internists in all of Canada but, frankly, I doubt if he has ever seen a case of fluorosis, because we haven't had these cases in Canada, thank goodness. There are very few experts in this field because there are few men who have had an opportunity to treat this disease.

Dr. Waldbott is one. He did not testify. In the summary here there is a page given to Dr. Waldbott, on page 347, and it says, "Dr. Waldbott was invited to testify, but did not do so."

He did, however, supply a brief on April 17 which was examined and which presumably was disagreed with by the other doctors the committee had heard.

With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a rather serious error. I have received a letter from Dr. Waldbott now explaining his view, and with your permission, sir, I would like to give the House the benefit of this. Because this is an extremely important matter, and I am afraid if we just accept the committee's findings, holus-bolus, people in the area which is receiving the high fluoride content may go along in an unjustified optimism which may really not be called for by the facts.

To refresh your memory, sir, I am sure you will recall back in late April the member for Sandwich-Riverside rose in this House and read a letter from Dr. Waldbott dated April 17, 1968, addressed to the hon. Minister of Health. It is a very brief letter and so I will read it into the record to refresh your memory, sir:

Dear Sir:

On January 8, 1968, in reply to an invitation by the Ontario pollution inquiry committee, I offered to appear as soon as I had accumulated sufficient data concerning the Port Maitland individuals afflicted by fluoride air pollution.

On February 16, in reply to my second offer to testify before the commission, its secretary requested an outline of 'the general nature of the evidence' I wished to present and asked to what purpose this evidence is directed.

I stated on March 4 that I was prepared to present the data originally requested of me, namely, 'a discussion of the disease which appears to be endemic in the Port Maitland area, its diagnosis and measures for its prevention'.

In response to the request by Attorney Brooks that the committee furnish me with some of the findings on the persons I had interviewed, the committee's chairman, Dr. G. E. Hall, stated on January 24, 1968, 'with extremely competent physicians and diagnosticians in Ontario, Dr. Waldbott's request will be reviewed by the committee'.

To date, I have received no further communication from the committee.

I have had no further word from the committee. Indirectly through Mr. Brooks I have learned that neither the final data on the individuals hospitalized in Toronto, nor my own presentation, in case I were permitted to testify, would be given in hearings open to the public, as was all previous testimony and that no further public hearings would be scheduled regarding Port Maitland.

Because of this decision and because no other physicians with personal knowledge about fluorosis not connected with industry and government had been heard by the committee, I consider it inappropriate to make further efforts to appear. Instead, I am herewith submitting my completed report to you. I trust that the data which I have accumulated will assist you in assessing the ill effects due to air pollution in the Port Maitland area.

Yours sincerely,

George L. Waldbott, MD

That was the letter of April 17.

Well now I have a letter written a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, from Dr. Waldbott, which sums up his views of the committee's investigations and their findings. I think they are very important, because in my mind and in Dr. Waldbott's mind, and I think perhaps in the minds of a number of farmers near Dunnville, the problem is not quite as neatly solved as this pollution report would have us believe.

This letter is dated December 2, and was sent to the member for Sandwich-Riverside and he was kind enough to pass it on to me, since I am speaking today on the Throne Debate, so that I could present this while the matter was topical.

At the Cayuga hearing it was revealed that neither of the two consultants from England who testified in ERCO's behalf, had carried out research in fluoride. They were not familiar with much of the available literature on fluorosis. One even failed to mention fluoride in his brief.

Those who had examined the stricken persons, although highly competent physicians, had acknowledged that they had had no personal experience with chronic fluoride poisoning. Some even denied the disease exists on the American continent.

Names of experts with clinical experience in human fluorosis were given to the committee of inquiry. Neither these scientists nor the two arbiters who had settled former claims between the company and the farmers were consulted. The arbiters had accumulated much information on the fluoride content of food and livestock produced in the Port Maitland area. In fact, no experts representing the farmers were heard at the open hearings.

The committee had discontinued its hearings before I had an opportunity to complete my report. My request for an opportunity to discuss my clinical data with a Toronto specialist who was studying some of the afflicted persons was rejected. These specialists, according to the transcript of the hearings, were baffled concerning a diagnosis of the illness of the two most seriously affected farmers, Ted Boorsma and Joseph Cassina. According to the transcript of the Cayuga hearing they had not arrived at an adequate diagnosis in Mr. Ted Boorsma's case even after three months' hospitalization.

When these two farmers were interviewed November 10, 1968, they were still consuming excessive amounts of fluoride. Their disease had not improved during the past 12 months. Mr. Boorsma told me that he was advised to undergo surgery on the parathyroid gland without having first been placed on a strict low fluoride regime. According to all medical literature a disturbance of the parathyroid function is associated with chronic fluoride poisoning.

Regarding my own investigation of 18 persons whom I interviewed in the fall of 1967, ten exhibited manifestations typical of fluorosis; in seven others the diagnosis fluorosis was probable. Of five examined in Detroit three were admitted to hospital where extensive consultations were carried out and thorough tests performed.

I was particularly impressed by the occurrence of acute episodes of severe abdominal pain which are usually incorrectly diagnosed as intestinal flu, gall bladder disease, pancreatitis, and the like.

In the meantime I had also observed this condition in three other fluoride polluted areas in the USA, namely in the vicinity of two additional phosphate fertilizer factories in Humboldt, Iowa, and Walcott, Iowa, and near one iron foundry in Inlay City, Michigan.

Acute episodes of abdominal pain can be traced to poisoning by fluoride contaminated food. Corn grown near one of the factories contained as much as 91.5 parts per million of fluoride according to government reports.

Many basic facts were not brought out at the Cayuga hearings, such as the number of cattle killed, and the extensive crop losses. As late as July 8, 1968, urine tests on four Port Maitland persons residing near the factory showed fluoride levels ranging from 7.04 to 12.6 milligrams. Normal is about a half to one and a half milligrams. Muscle tissue removed from one patient showed 116.4 parts per million. His prostate gland contained 92.2 parts per million. Normal is less than one part per million. The tissue analyses were done by one of Europe's most outstanding experts on fluoride analysis, Dr. W. Ohlschlager, of Hohenheim, Stuttgart.

Whereas meantime, the company may have installed equipment to reduce fluoride emissions from factory chimneys, no reliable data has been provided recently to the affected persons of the amount of fluoride emanating from storage bins and from the settling basins near the factory.

The dust formerly contained between 9,000 and 11,000 parts per million of fluoride.

On May 17, 1968, I examined three Port Maitland persons in my office who were suffering from chronic fluoride poisoning. As recently as November 19, 1968, I interviewed ten additional Port Maitland cases; seven of whom were adversely affected by fluoride.

The following action should be taken.

One, unbiased non-industry sponsored investigator should establish clearly the degree of fluoride intoxication in livestock.

Two, the amounts of fluoride in the edibles grown in the Port Maitland area should be made available to citizens.

Three, and this is the important one, a thorough survey of the health of every citizen residing near the ERCO factory should be made by physicians with adequate knowledge of the disease who need not depend upon industry sponsored experts.

Four, the most seriously affected individuals should be relocated in uncontaminated areas.

Five, adequate restriction should be provided through legislation on housing and on cultivation of edibles in the immediate vicinity of the factory.

Damage from fluoride emanation has been established in Canada and an aluminum company in Quebec has already paid out more than $1 million for damages resulting from air pollution by fluoride.

The committee of enquiry has failed to recognize the essence of the problem, namely the damage to human health by air pollution which is now being recognized throughout the world by some of the most eminent scientists.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, this is the leading fluoride expert in the world. He has not spoken from theory. He has, as recently as last month, done examinations, which have been confirmed by unbiased experts, of the fluoride problem near Dunnville and this report is not going to make it go away.

The interesting thing about this report is even though at the beginning they say there is no fluoride danger to human beings, in the recommendations which they make they act as though there was because their recommendations certainly say, for goodness sake do something, there is nothing to worry about but do something and do it fast, which makes me wonder a little bit about this report.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that Doctor Waldbott's findings cannot be shrugged aside. We have to do something immediately and that something is not just accept the report and sit back. The government should, immediately, now, before Christmas—this they can do right off the bat—pick one of your aggressive members, you must have one you trust, set him up at the head of a committee on pollution, get him to work on the Dunnville and the Sudbury problems to start with and then, next year he can go on to the more or less serious difficulties.

I do not think I will say any more at this time on the pollution report. I am sure other members will have some contributions to make and I may have something further to say about that later.

I would like now to turn to a different subject. I am not going to be able to cover it completely today. I am sorry, but I will begin it. It is really the subject that I wanted to talk about in this Throne Speech and these preliminary remarks were merely to lead up to the general problems in The Department of Health.

I have done a great deal of research, Mr. Speaker, in the problem which I am going to come to now. The work which I spoke of the day before yesterday in relation to Sudbury was work that was not really done by myself. It was done by the Toronto Daily Star and by Mark Starowicz.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Does the member represent the Toronto Star here?

Mr. Shulman: Well I always had the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the members to the right of me represented the Toronto Star here. But since the Toronto Daily Star was kind enough to let me deliver the material here before they printed it, I really feel no reason—no need to apologize.

Mr. Sopha: I must say there is one place you do not represent and that is High Park because you are never there.

Mr. Shulman: Since the member for Sudbury has brought up the complaint that I have not discussed—High Park—perhaps I should digress for a few moments. I had not really intended to give the type of speech we hear from the Liberals, which speaks about “my great riding and how many highways we have and our wonderful parks.” I honestly had hoped never to make a speech of that nature in this House.

But because I would not want to be criticized by anyone for not paying tribute to my riding, I thank the member for Sudbury for reminding me of this. I, perhaps, should say a few words about my riding and so, I will digress. My riding, Mr. Speaker, happens—

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Is that a "possessive" term—

Mr. Shulman: My riding, Mr. Speaker, the one which I have the honour to represent, has had the honour to be represented by a number of far more illustrious men in this House. I was preceded by a former Prime Minister, whose name I cannot remember, and there was also of course, Mr. William Temple, who was one of the better members in this Legislature, and of course, my predecessor. I am sure we all remember my predecessor because he, Mr. Speaker, was the head of the air pollution committee and we know what a wonderful job he did on that problem.

It is a fine riding, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent it. I am happy to say that I do not raise the local problems here. I do not get up like certain members to my right and say, we need a bigger bridge, why do you not widen the bridge going to Niagara Falls, why do you not give us a bigger highway going into Kitchener or Sarnia, something has got to be done. The local problems, Mr. Speaker, I have always believed, should not be brought to the floor of the House. They should not be used to waste the time of the House.

I look after those problems, Mr. Speaker, but I look after them in my office and by contacting the appropriate Ministers and I am delighted to say that on the local problems I have had good co-operation from the government Ministers. They co-operate very well on local problems. They only fall down on the problems affecting the whole province, and these are the problems that should be brought up in the House, not the local problems.

Unfortunately I sometimes have to bring up local problems in this House, Mr. Speaker, but you will notice they do not have to do with High Park riding. They have to do with the ridings that are not represented in the House. Ridings like Glengarry, or Sudbury; ridings of that nature, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sopha: Did you ever hear such strident arrogance?

An hon. member: Yes.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The hon. member for Sudbury has homework to do.

Mr. Shulman: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, to return to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: To return, Mr. Speaker, I will pledge though that I will no longer have to refer to matters from Sudbury because I am delighted the member has now been elected for Sudbury East, who is quite competent to handle those problems and I am sure, for the remainder of this Legislature, until we form—

Mr. Sopha: I was elected three times.

Mr. Shulman: —until we form the next government that he will do an excellent job and ultimately will take over as the appropriate Minister. Well now, to come back to where I was, Mr. Speaker. I think I was talking about the Toronto Star—

Mr. Sopha: There has got to be something wrong with us to have to put up with—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, again through you, may I thank the member for Sudbury for giving me these little rests because my throat has been weakening a bit and this allows me to speak a little slower.

Mr. Speaker, the work in Sudbury which was done by Mr. Starowicz of the Toronto Daily Star deserves a great deal of credit and I would like to thank him for it. I do not wish to take credit for that. I did not do that work. Similarly in relation to the matters in Cornwall this work was compiled by local residents of Gengarry and of Stormont and of Grenville-Dundas and I would not want to take the credit for that. The people of that area merely came to me because they were unable to get anyone else in the House who could—or would—present the matters for them. Now however, I would like to turn to a matter which I have done myself.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): How many members have you got in eastern Ontario?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): We will have a lot more after the next election.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Who said that?

Mr. Ferrier: You come up to northern Ontario and make those statements again and you will not get one up there.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): You are not so safe in Timmins.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this summer I spent productively I believe. I am going to make some suggestions about one of the problems in this province, Mr. Speaker, and I am not making them, I believe and I hope, in a carping or destructive way. I hope I am going to make them in a constructive way. I would like to suggest that these things are essential, not to the NDP or the member for High Park, but to every person in this House and I hope that perhaps we will have a more responsible attitude from the members who have been making interjections on these particular matters.

Before I go into this matter, which really has to do with mental retardation, perhaps I should say one word about The Department of Health. I do not have too much confidence in the administration of that department because of certain incidents that occurred there last year. You may recall that I made some harsh comments about not having too much confidence in the administration of that department because of certain incidents that occurred here last year. You may recall that I made some harsh comments about the administration of that department in reference to the Janet Gurman case.

And I asked at that time the member for Nickel Belt, who was the head of the health committee—a committee which incidentally never meets. It is rather strange considering the situation of The Department of Health.

In any case, I asked the member for Nickel Belt if he would have the committee meet to investigate the Clara Villa Nursing Home situation, and the Janet Gurman situation, and at the time he said: "We had better wait and see what the PM is going to do." And the PM finally decided, the best thing would be lay charges against Mrs. Gurman for all sorts of horrible things—you may recall; fourteen charges, I believe. They all failed. She was found not guilty.

What has the government done? Nothing! What has the Minister of Health done? Nothing! The Prime Minister has risen in this House and said: "Too bad about her, she lost her life's savings, she lost her nursing home. We made a mistake. Too bad, too bad about her, we have got to go on to something else."

Well I cannot do anything about her, we are not in the government yet—although we will when we are. But to go on—because of this case I have lost confidence in The Department of Health and in its administration, and because of that I did a great deal of research into this department this summer.

I spent a lot of time and visited a lot of institutions. And so that you would not think that my research was not done in some detail, Mr. Speaker, I am going to read to you a list of the institutions which I visited in these past few months, so that I would be in a position to make a comment which I am going to make shortly.

I examined and personally toured before preparing this speech, the following places: the Mental Retardation Centre on Surrey Place, the Aurora Ontario Hospital, the Aurora Hospital for the Retarded, the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital, the Smith Falls Hospital School, the Goderich Psychiatric Hospital, the London Children's Psychiatric Research Centre, the Good Shepherd Home, the Plainfield Home for Retarded Children, Gordon's Nursing Home, the Happy Half Way House in Belleville, the Lamb's Craigwood Home for Emotionally Disturbed Boys, the New Toronto Hospital, in company with the delightful member for Lakeshore, the Ontario Hospital at 999 Queen Street, the Harlow Lawson School and the Residence for Retarded Children, and I attempted to tour the Ontario Hospital at Penetang, but I was ejected on orders of the Minister of Health.

I have also had lengthy discussions with physicians on the staff of the Brockville Psychiatric and the Whitby Ontario Hospital. With reference to my ejection, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would like to know the details to that. I will give them to you in some detail a little later. You might find them quite instructive.

Mr. Speaker, as an MPP I am not speaking in a partisan way. I was ashamed to discover the neglect with which this government treats the majority of the thousands of mental defectives in Ontario.

What I am about to tell you is a story of institutional brutality, of misery, of callousness, but most of all of sheer neglect. And let me stress to start with, the brutality is not directed against the inmates by any staff member. It is a case of inter-patient brutality resulting invariably in some insufficient and often underpaid staff. Let me also stress the dedication of the staff. They would have to be dedicated to put up with the pay and the conditions.

A letter which I have here written last August by Mr. P. A. Smith, who is an after-care officer at the Guelph Reformatory, to his superior, illustrates the horrors that can develop in our mental hospitals as a result of insufficient supervision. And I quote from his letter:

Dr. Michael Conlin, chief medical officer of the Goderich Psychiatric Hospital requested an interview with the writer on Thursday, August 1, 1968, concerning Jack S. I won't use his full name. The doctor is deeply concerned at the recent escapade of S. who with another patient tied up a lad of seven years of age with wire. He was only discovered in the nick of time or there would have been a tragedy. The child had turned blue and there was evidence of strangulation.

I phoned the medical superintendent at Goderich to get further details, and he told me that this seven-year-old lad had been kept in the same ward as the two older boys, two teenagers. The superintendent said that one of the boys—the Jack S. referred to in the letter—was 13 years old, and had been transferred to an adult ward following this incident, pending transfer to the Psychiatric Research Centre in London.

Jack S. had been involved in serious trouble before coming to Goderich and had been transferred from a training school. The other boy was 14 years old, and he had now been discharged from the hospital as a result of the incident, because the hospital came to the conclusion that he could not be helped further.

And what is going to happen to the seven-year-old near where he lives? I could not believe these things when they were told me, Mr. Speaker. Imagine, putting a seven-year-old—and I will tell you a little more about this seven-year-old in a few moments—in the same ward with two teenage psychotics. Imagine, not getting proper supervision to this ward. Imagine discharging one of the psychotics when he strangles a boy, so he will not strangle anyone else in the hospital. Imagine sending him home. What is wrong in that department? Well, the next week I went up to the hospital, to try to learn how this type of thing could occur.

On August 25, 1968, I found that children from seven to 16 were kept on the same ward. I was surprised to find this ward included disturbed teenagers of both sexes, who used common washroom facilities with the girls living on one side of the ward and the boys on the other.

I was more shocked to discover this ward contained both emotionally disturbed and mentally retarded children. Think of it, Mr. Speaker, in 1968, putting mentally retarded in with emotionally disturbed. Think of the effect the retarded have on the disturbed children. Think of the terrible incidence that can occur when aggressive disturbed children vent their aggression on a helpless retarded.

Perhaps I shouldn't have been shocked. The government showplace in London—of course their showplace should be expected to be in London—does exactly the same thing. I will tell you about that institution later.

The staff were fine, dedicated young people. They all made the same complaints to me. Just not enough staff to look after the patients. What should the staff requirements be for a hospital of that type? Dr. Robert Switzer, director of the Children's Centre at the Menninger Foundation, who has done pioneer work with disturbed children, said on September 30, 1968: "There must be an almost one to one relationship between the staff and the children. These children must be cared for alertly, 24 hours a day."

But in the children's ward I visited, there was only one male attendant and one assistant. At night there was only one attendant on the boys' side, with no one to supervise the girls' side of the ward. This is how these two psychotics were able to get this seven year old boy off in a washroom and strangle him to the point of death. Because there was just no one to supervise. And this seven year old boy was not mentally retarded.

I was shocked to learn that he was in this hospital purely and simply because he had grown up with elderly parents on a farm, away from children of his own age, and as a result he had not had an opportunity to learn how to live with children his own age and he had become shy. And when forced to begin going to school he found it difficult to adjust and they had brought him here, to this place, so that he could learn to adjust better. And they strangled him almost to the point of death.

Imagine putting a child like that in with mentally retarded, aggressive emotionally disturbed boys who have been transferred from a training school. Unbelievable!

The staff and the patients at Goderich found it very disturbing that because of the proximity to other wards the occasional adult mental patient wanders through the children's ward. The staff shortage extends up to all levels of the hospital. In fact, there were only two doctors for all 250 patients. Two doctors, for 250 patients, and this is a psychiatric hospital.

If you just think about it, Mr. Speaker, a psychiatric interview takes about an hour. If these men work every day, for 8 hours a day, they could between them see 16 patients a day. That means that they would see the patients once every fifteen days. And this is supposed to be an acute treatment psychiatric hospital. Imagine seeing a doctor once every fifteen days.

As a result of the striking staff shortage a normal seven-year-old boy who had been sent to hospital only for investigation of shyness, had become strangled. Goderich was not unique in this type of inter-patient brutality.

I have here a statement given to me by Mrs. Ingrid K., of Rolyat Street, Toronto. I will not use her full name, although she has given me permission to do so. I quote the statement:

Stanley (her son) is now in Orillia Memorial Hospital.

Stanley is 17 years old.

He was admitted over four years ago on April 28, 1964. On Friday, August 30, 1968, Dr. Wilson phoned me and said Stanley had been in a scuffle with another boy—a patient. The other boy put his knee on Stanley's pelvis during the scuffle and Stanley was bleeding. There was blood in his urine.

I visited Stanley on Saturday, August 31, and found him half conscious in the hospital ward of the Ontario Hospital. Dr. Hopewood denied the scuffle, said there was no record of any scuffle. Dr. Cleary also said he did not know anything about it. Dr. Sinclair is going to operate today as far as I know at the Memorial Hospital in Orillia.

I saw Stanley last on September 2. On August 31 at the Ontario Hospital in Stanley's ward I talked to an orderly, the one who guards the patients, and the orderly said the children never get outside on Stanley's floor because of a lack of supervision.

Stanley is able to walk and knows how to go out and come back. I do not know why they will not let him go outside. If he was so badly retarded that he could not walk I would understand it. When he was on the first floor they took him outside. I saw him in June and he looked healthy.

Then I went to Sweden to see my mother because she was very sick and was not expected to live. When I came back in August and saw Stanley I was shocked—he was so thin as though he lost about 50 pounds. His ward is called E cottage.

Well I went to the hospital, Mr. Speaker, and when I was there, the doctors involved were not present so I wrote to Dr. Cleary and he replied as follows:

In regard to your letter of October 1 requesting some information on Mrs. Kulik's complaint that Stanley's hematuria resulted from being beaten at the hospital, I am unable to produce evidence that this did occur.

During his stay here, Stanley has been a very irritable boy; he has been very rough with other patients and he is easily provoked to anger and has a severe temper.

After he developed the hematuria, the staff members on the ward questioned some of the other residents and found that Stanley had been involved in a scuffle with another boy much smaller than himself.

This incident had not been observed by the staff who were supervising at the time. One of the staff physicians examined Stanley on the day that the hematuria first occurred and at that time he did not report any bruises, abrasions, or any other abnormal findings on Stanley. The only abnormality noted was the hematuria.

I accept Dr. Cleary's explanation without question. But in effect he is really saying exactly the same as Mrs. Kulik—there just is not enough staff to properly supervise the patients.

When I visited the Orillia Hospital this summer, Mr. Speaker, I had an experience which has not happened to me in some long time—I cried, I actually cried. It is a heart-rending experience. There is only one worse in this province and that is to go to Smiths Falls. I wish that some of the members from this House would visit the Ontario Hospitals in this province.

The member for Nickel Belt says he has. I am delighted to hear that. I was shocked to go into Ontario Hospital after Ontario Hospital where they told me there had not been an MPP visit or an MP visit in years. Place after place I was told that.

If you went there, if you saw for yourselves, you would not tolerate what is actually going on in those hospitals because it is a terrible experience. Each and every ward in Orillia is short staffed.

There are not enough doctors, not enough nurses, not enough attendants. The chief nurse of one section complained that her nurses were forced to do aides' work because there was no one else to do it and as a result had no time to work with the patients.

Salaries are low. They begin at $4,600—this was after the recent raise—and the department has just raised the educational requirements from grade 10 to grade 12 for beginning attendants.

As a senior nurse said to me at the time:

They are short staffed now and this will make it worse. The department just does not seem to know what it is doing. An attendant does not need higher education; she needs love and dedication.

The staff shortage at Orillia results in patients there in E cottage being locked up in their ward because there is not enough staff to supervise taking them outside to play. You have to see the despair and boredom of those children and then compare the children in Orillia with retarded children of similar IQs cared for in more enlightened surroundings.

When you walk into a ward in Orillia you will never forget the experience, the children immediately run up to you, they surround you, they clutch at you. They are starved for love. They are starved for affection. They are starved for attention. Most of them have been deserted by their parents. Over half of the children in Orillia never get a visitor—never.

They have been abandoned by society and in many wards there is only one attendant for 40 children. Those attendants try their best, but one human being cannot supply enough love or attention to 40 children. They have difficulty supplying the immediate basic needs, they have not time to give the love.

You walk into another jurisdiction, not in this province—and I will tell you about those soon—and the children carry on their work. They smile at you, but they carry on their work.

You go into Orillia, you go into Smiths Falls, they clutch at you, they say: "Please do not go. No one has come to see us this year. No one has time to talk to us." This is the situation in Ontario.

Well, I digress, Mr. Speaker. I was talking about brutality in institutions. It is not only children who are attacked in our mental hospitals. On September 27, 1968, together with the member for Brantford, I visited Mr. Malcolm White at the St. Thomas Ontario Hospital.

Mr. White was very elderly and unable to defend himself. He had been struck so hard across the neck that the black and blue marks extended from ear to ear. They looked like strangulation marks. A few days after this incident, in my opinion, probably as a result of the weakening produced by that incident, Mr. White fell and broke his leg. He will not recover. In my opinion he will not leave that hospital.

Dr. J. Kaufman, the superintendent, confirmed to us—the member for Brantford was with me when we visited—that the hospital was short of staff. I asked him how short and he said: "Well, perhaps you had better write me."

I wrote him the next day asking the cause of Mr. White's injuries and Dr. Kaufman's opinion of the number of attendants required in his hospital to bring this level up to a proper one and he replied: "Thank you for your letter of September 13. This matter is now under review." There has been no further word from Dr. Kaufman.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, to digress again for a moment, we have had the same experience, the same problem with other superintendents—they are having a little difficulty in expressing themselves at the present moment. When I come a little later to the material I have available, perhaps you will understand why they are having difficulty expressing themselves.

Well what do we find in the other government mental hospitals? The same, and worse. Smiths Falls is only for those with strong stomachs. Understaffed, underpaid, overcrowded—it is a terrible place.

The wards were built for 36 patients and they all contain 47. There were three staff for every two wards when the member for Lakeshore and I visited—an average of one attendant for every 32 patients. Think about that for a moment, Mr. Speaker. One attendant on duty to handle 32 mentally retarded patients.

I am embarrassed for the government now, Mr. Speaker. One of the Conservative back benchers has just come in with one of their typical comments. I would hope that in this material which should not be political we would have a little better attitude from them. For goodness sake try to improve this province.

The staff do their best, Mr. Speaker, but it is hopeless. As a result of insufficient supervision, pregnancies are common among the mentally-retarded female patients. I was told by the deputy superintendent of one of those hospitals—I have his name but he has asked that I not use it here in the House—that last year there were over 400 pregnancies among retarded long-term inmates of our mental institutions. Well, perhaps it is not 400, perhaps it is 100, I have no way of getting the figures but it boggles the mind, the chance that these children have.

What further preventable and foolish expense—and all because of the short-sighted policies of this government. Go to Smiths Falls, Mr. Speaker, see the hopeless dull faces of those children. See the toilets which have had the doors ripped off. See the clothing the children are given. As we walked the wards, we wondered why the patients seemed to be dressed in too small clothing. I asked our guide, a senior attendant, and he explained that all the clothing discoloured and shrank so badly after the first washing that it ceased to fit. We saw boys with sweaters which had shrunk to just below their elbows.

Mr. Speaker, I have brought samples here to show you. The attendant was good enough, the hospital was good enough, to give me this material and I wanted the House to see what is happening in Smiths Falls. What is happening in our mental institutions.

Mr. Speaker, these are pants. These are brand new. These are issued to patients in the mental hospital at Smiths Falls. They look very nice; nice colours. The patients look great in them the first time they wear them. That is what they look like, but that is not what you see patients walking around in.

This is what you see patients walking around in. This is what happens as they go through the washing machine. They shrink up; they discolour; they rag. That is what happens at Smiths Falls. The member for Lakeshore was with me when the attendant said "Go back and see if something can be done. Why do they send us this clothing?"

Mr. MacDonald: Where do they buy it, I wonder?

Mr. Shulman: We will come to that. Here is a sweat shirt; brand new sweat shirt, has not been through the washing machine. This was issued at Smiths Falls. Nice colours. This is not what you see the patients wearing in Smiths Falls.

This is what you see them wearing. Shrunken up, discoloured. Who makes it? Penmans makes it. Earl Penmans. So I said why in the world are you sending this stuff down to Smiths Falls? Does the government specifically order this shoddy material? And they said (they sent me back a great letter) no, the government does not specifically order shoddy material; we are going to investigate it and let you know.

That was two months ago. I have not heard anything more from them. I do not understand it. After all there are all sorts of very reliable leading business men on the board of Penmans; there is Marcel Faribault, and he should know something about business. I am waiting.

Undoubtedly there is an explanation. We will hear it. It is not just that the clothing they buy is sad.

These are the socks. Somebody orders wool socks and puts them through washing machines. Any housewife can tell you you cannot put wool socks through washing machines. If you are going to use washing machines, you are to buy artificial—nylon, orlon or things of this nature that will not shrink up.

If you insist on buying wool socks, you must not put them through the washing machine. Every patient is walking around with these shrunken up socks because someone does not know what they are doing down there.

That is the situation in Smiths Falls, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Look at the empty Cabinet.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, look at that front row Mr. Speaker, not a member here. Not one is interested.

Mr. Brown: That is why these conditions exist.

An hon. member: My member is here.

Mr. MacDonald: As long as the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guindon) thinks so.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, small wonder that the Minister of Health does not want the MPPs visiting these hospitals, unless he is aware in advance and is able to prepare a conducted tour. I did not believe that, Mr. Speaker. We have had Ministers get up, and even the Minister of Correctional Services, with all his faults, is prepared to allow the members of this House to go to the institutions under his control. He says "I have nothing to hide, go any time you want; see what you want".

I have always believed that the government, the Prime Minister, surely was not going to try and hide things in a public institution. I never dreamed that they would attempt to bar the MPPs from the public institutions. Even when I received this letter, Mr. Speaker, I still did not believe it. Now this is from a superintendent in Orillia, and I will read the letter. I quote:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I am not acquainted with you personally and as yet have not had the pleasure of meeting you, but permit me to congratulate you for your interest and your visit to the Ontario Hospital School in Orillia.

I venture to say, Doctor, you had not been in the Ontario Hospital School five minutes when my phone rang and I was told of your visit yesterday at 4.15 pm. I was duly informed that an open letter signed by Dr. Zarfes of Toronto was subsequently sent to all supervisors of the Ontario Hospital Schools, instructing them that under no circumstances was any member of Parliament allowed in future to visit or question anyone in the wards of that school.

So you see, I respectfully submit to you that your visit has caused some concern to the brass and it is very evident that they cannot stand up to any constructive criticism.

I did not believe it, Mr. Speaker. I thought surely, after everything that has been said by the Prime Minister in this House, by members of the Cabinet, this must be an error of some official at some level in The Department of Health. Surely they do not mean it. Perhaps this man is wrong with his information. I just disregarded it. To my absolute amazement, the Minister confirmed it himself. On September 4, I received this letter from the Minister of Health. I will read it in full. "My Dear Colleague"—

At first I thought I had received the wrong letter, Mr. Speaker, but then it was meant for me.

My Dear Colleague:

I was surprised and distressed to learn of your lack of consideration in visiting the Goderich Psychiatric Hospital, and the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute on Saturday, August 24.

For your information and guidance, I would direct your attention to the following extract from my remarks to the Legislature in May of 1966, as recorded on page 2933 of Hansard,

And then there is a quote inside the letter, Mr. Speaker:

"The primary purpose and objective of a hospital, whether it is a general hospital, a hospital for the mentally ill or retarded, is the care and treatment of the sick. The fact that the hospital is established and operated by the government does not make it any less important to give first consideration to the patient. Public relations are also important. A hospital is part of a community, and must have the support of the community to fulfil its purposes.

It is therefore, important to the community to know something about the efforts being made to care for the sick, and the problems faced by the hospital in achieving its objectives.

The interest of the public and the hon. members of this House in the services provided for the mentally ill and retarded is encouraging and appreciated by those who devote their lives to this work. This interest cannot, however, and will not, be permitted to interfere with the care and treatment of our patients.

My staff are prepared to make arrangements for a reasonable number of visits for interested individuals or groups to our hospitals so that they might better understand the work that is being done. We need to remember, however, that the staff are busy, and the patients do not relish being put on display.

If the hon. members, in their efforts to serve the people of this province, have a particular interest in the programme at one of our hospitals, I would ask them to make arrangements to visit the institutions through my office, or the office of my Deputy Minister.

We will do our best to accommodate you and I am sure that your interest will best be served if we avoid any unwarranted interference with the work of the doctors and the staff, and observe a proper respect and consideration for the patients."

End of quote within the quote. Dr. Dymond goes on:

I can assure you that we are most pleased to make arrangements for a visit in accordance with the above policies, and I trust that we will have your full co-operation in respect to any visit you wish to make to our facilities in the future.

Yours sincerely,
M. B. Dymond, MD,
Minister of Health.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am a very gentle, polite man, so I replied in my usual gentle way:

Dear Doctor Dymond:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 3, 1968. I certainly agree with you that the work of the doctors and their staff should not be interfered with, and this is why I have made my visits on weekends. In addition, I certainly agree with you that the patients should not be put on display, but I am sure that your staff have informed you that I have taken care to avoid anything of this nature.

On the other hand, I am sure that the Premier in the Legislature would agree with me that it should not be necessary to notify the Minister before a member visits a public institution. Certainly, if it were the case of the officials concerned having advance knowledge of such visits, abuses would never be exposed. I shall look forward to presenting this matter to the Legislature and to the public to get their view. I rather think that once again you will be proved to be wrong. In the meantime I shall continue my work, as the facts which I have already uncovered indicate an urgent need for changes at the top level of your department.

Your sincerely,
Morton Shulman.

I did not hear any more from the Minister, so I presumed that my argument convinced him, and I continued to visit the institutions. In fact, just two weeks after that, the member for Lakeshore and I had the pleasure of going down to Smith Falls. As we always do when we arrive at an institution, as I always do when I arrive at an institution, we went to the switchboard and asked for whoever was in charge that day. We then presented our cards and announced ourselves, and we said we were MPPs and we would like to see the institution and Smiths Falls. They showed us through and we subsequently went to other institutions and were shown through, but I thought that the Minister had relented.

Alas, this was not the case. What had happened was that his department, so badly organized and so inefficient, had problems getting the memorandum barring us, around to the various hospitals. I discovered this—

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): They have not had time to read it.

Mr. Shulman: Or the other possibility is, as the member for Scarborough Centre said, they have not had time to read it; they are so short staffed.

In any case, on Nov. 24, off to Penetang.

Mr. Sopha: I wish I could believe his interest was genuine.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is not the point.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I wish—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Can an hon. member gratuitously interject and cast aspersions on the motives of another member?

Mr. Sopha: I asked a question.

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the interjections, I am sure that all the members, and particularly including the member who now raises a point of order, have had a habit of making interjections which have not helped very often in the business of this House. But, of course, it is quite improper that any member should impugn the motives of another member in this House. I am sure that that must not have been the intention of the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. MacDonald: What was his intention?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, that was not my intention. I was wondering aloud, musing the form of a question.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, let me—

Mr. Sopha: I have no doubt about the member for Lakeshore, none at all.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, to give credit where credit is due, these visits were not my idea. They were the idea of the member for Lakeshore. It was his suggestion a year ago that, inasmuch as no member had visited these institutions in many a year, someone should go. It was my original thought that it would be best if members of more than just one party went but, unfortunately, we were unable to interest members of another party to go. I may say, sir, that in every institution I visited I asked, in every case, has any—

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a correction of the facts. I, myself, have—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): You will have a chance in the Throne Debate, sit down. Take your seat.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am speaking to the Chair, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will please resume his seat for a moment, when Mr. Speaker is calling for order.

Will the hon. member who has the floor permit a question from the hon. member for Carleton East?

The hon. member now has the floor to ask a question, not to make a statement.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member in fact checked to see whether other members of other parties have indeed visited these particular institutions?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, I have made a point of checking, Mr. Speaker. I must say that on two or three occasions there were Conservative members who had visited. I was never able to find one—

An hon. member: Why did you not tell us that?

Mr. Shulman: I mentioned the member for the Nickel Belt. I was never able to find one where a Liberal had visited, to my embarrassment.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Over a period of time I have been to a number of these institutions mentioned. I know that the member for Humber has been and, in fact, the member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson) has been and the member for Etobicoke has been to various institutions here, not only in the city but throughout the province. I know of four or five members that have been there. So that remark is completely, just utterly wrong.

Mr. Sopha: To make the record complete, on a point of order, I was with the member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to learn that the Liberals are not quite as remiss in their duties as I thought. What I was repeating, Mr. Speaker, was a question that was asked in every case of the superintendent or assistant supervisor who took us around. In every case I said, has any MPP or MP come to this institution? In most of the institutions, I am sorry to say, no MPP had come from any party.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is wrong.

Mr. Shulman: No MPP had come from any party. In two or three, they said the Minister of Health had been here. In one or two cases, a Conservative member had come to this institution, in most of the institutions, I am sorry to say, no MPP had come from any party. In two or three they said the Minister of Health had been here, in one or two cases a Conservative member had been mentioned. Now, to carry on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale rose on a point of order. He might state his point of order.

Mr. Trotter: All I want to say is I will again repeat (because the hon. member for High Park has gone into this question again that our members have not been at these institutions. In fact, I do not know if he has ever been to Cedar Springs; he has not mentioned that one), but I want to state again that I have been to almost all of them over a period of time. There are one or two that I personally have not been in. The ones I have not been to, I know other Liberal members have been, not only once but many times and particularly the Ontario hospitals. I have visited some hospitals four or five times, particularly those close to my own area, so I know that these statements are just wrong.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to learn that the members have been to the hospitals. Now I am a little worried because if they have visited them and saw what we saw, why in the world have they not been rising in this House doing something about it?

Mr. Trotter: On a point of order, I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member refer himself to Hansard over the last eight or nine years. And on this point of order, I want to emphasize that while I was speaking on this subject, the hon. member for High Park was working tooth and nail for the Tory party.

Mr. Shulman: Let me say the work done by the members who have spoken in aid of this situation appears to have been missed not only by myself but by everyone else in this House, and in reference to my working tooth and nail for the Conservative Party they somehow did not seem to think I was, because while these speeches were being made I seemed to be having a slight disagreement with that group.

Mr. Nixon: The member was appointed coroner by the Conservative Party by his own admission.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, yes, that was in 1952, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, before we had these outraged interjections, I was about to tell you about Penetang. On Sunday, November 24, I went to Penetang—

Mr. T. Reid: Why did the member not stay there?

Mr. Shulman: It disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals have shown as little concern with their interjections—I hope that interjection was on the record—as was that of the Conservative backbenchers. “Why did you not stay in Penetang?” I would hope we would get all-party support for this type or problem, not carping criticism. Would Hansard please note that the member for Scarborough East made this comment.

Mr. T. Reid: If the member presented his case in a decent way he would.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, November 24, I went to Penetang. I announced myself at the switchboard and said that I would like to see through the hospital and asked that the doctor in charge be called. I was told that the superintendent, Dr. Boyd, was away, that the deputy superintendent—I believe his name was Dr. Barker—was off at lunch, but that they would summon Dr. McKay, who was the ranking VIP and in the meanwhile the head of the nurses was called and she said “Please sit down for a few moments while I find out what can be done”. She spoke to Dr. McKay over the phone and she said, “Fine, let’s begin our tour at the new building”.

Well, I did not go up there to see the new building but the new building is a sort of little show place that has been put up to house a few old people and get them out of the sordid surroundings that they were in, in a mental home, and it primarily is to educate these people so they can manage in society. I had come up to see the branch of the building which is the old building, which contains practically all of the patients, which is locked, which contains all of the criminally insane. There have been a number of stories coming out—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Shulman: There were some hundreds of patients in the building for the criminally insane. There have been a number of stories that have been appearing in the press recently about rather unusual treatments that have been given there and I was anxious to see the medical treatments that were being given as well as the level of care.

However, to start with, this head of nurses said, “Well, let’s go through this new building where there are a few old patients until Dr. McKay arrives.” This was quite agreeable so we went through the new building. “Now, before you start to tour the hospital, we better go back to the switchboard and you can meet Dr. McKay and he will take you through,” said the head nurse.

So back we went to the switchboard and sure enough there was Dr. McKay and Dr. McKay looked very unhappy and he said: “Would you come into my office please—I want to stress I have nothing to hide and I am following instructions only. I have been instructed that you are not to be allowed to go through the Penetang Hospital for the criminally insane.”

I said: “Well I cannot believe that—it must be a mistake. Would you mind phoning the superintendent?”

So Dr. McKay said: “I will phone Dr. Barker and get him on the phone.” They got Dr. Barker on the phone and Dr. Barker said: “No, you cannot go through unless you have made a prior appointment.”

This is fine. It is only 11:00 in the morning, I have come all the way from Toronto. “Can I make an appointment for later today?” I guess that was not enough time to clean the place up. They said: “No—not today, how about some other day? We cannot give you an appointment for later today.”

So I went back to Toronto, Mr. Speaker, and I received a lovely letter just the next day from Dr. Boyd, superintendent of the hospital and it reads as follows:

Dear Dr. Shulman,

I was so sorry to hear that you arrived for a visit on Sunday, November 24, the only day in over a month when I have been away from the hospital, out of town. We frequently have groups of social workers, psychiatric residents, students and staff from other hospitals visiting us to see our facilities and our programmes.

Each year we hold an open house during which the entire hospital is open to the public and this year, we had over 1,800 people visit during our three-day open house. We are particularly pleased to have professional people in the health field and people occupying such responsible positions as yours, visit.

You will appreciate that on weekends we operate with a skeleton staff just sufficient to keep some programmes going for the patients and it is difficult to provide tours without prior notice. We will be pleased to have you visit us during the week or, if this is difficult for you, I would be glad to arrange it for a weekend if you will give me a few days' notice.

Signed, Dr. Boyd

Well, I was very pleased to receive this. It was all a mistake, so I wrote another letter back to Dr. Boyd telling him I was coming:

Dear Dr. Boyd:

Thank you for your letter of November 25. I do not wish to make another useless trip to Penetang and so would appreciate a clarification of your letter.

My visits to Ontario institutions have all been without prior announcement so that I could view the hospitals as they are and not after a clean-up specifically made for my visit. Therefore, would you please tell me if I arrive unannounced on a week day will I be allowed to tour your hospital?

If you are only prepared to allow me to visit the hospital with your previous knowledge of my visit, I will not waste either your time or mine with this type of visit.

Yours sincerely,
Morton Shulman

I did not get any answer to that letter, Mr. Speaker, so I thought perhaps I should phone Dr. Boyd, that perhaps he did not get my letter. I phoned him yesterday and he said: "Oh I got your letter all right, but I am not sending you an answer."

I said: "Why are you not sending me an answer?" and he said: "Well, I did not like that letter very much and I have been in touch with Toronto and I am afraid if you want to go to the hospital you will have to contact them down there."

So there is the situation—The Department of Health gave instructions I was not to tour that hospital. Well, I can tell you why I was not allowed to tour that hospital.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): What right does the member have over everybody else?

Mr. Shulman: Oh the Conservative back benches have come to! I should hope they would realize that any MPP should be allowed to tour any public institution in this province. If they cannot, there is something rotten inside those institutions.

Mr. W. Newman: Nobody said they could not, at any time.

Mr. Shulman: As a member of the Opposition—

Mr. W. Newman: Well, it is time the member learned a little bit.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I complete my sentence? I was merely going to say, Mr. Speaker, I now have the reasons here why they would not let me in Penetang. Tomorrow I shall take great pleasure in presenting them to you.

Mr. Shulman moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Consumer Affairs): We will continue with the Throne Debate tomorrow and I remind the hon. members that there will be a night session tomorrow evening.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today our guests in the galleries are: in the east gallery students from Hillfield college in Hamilton and from Saltfleet high school, Stoney Creek; and in the west gallery, students from St. Joseph's commercial school in Toronto and North Bendale public school in Scarborough.

Petitions.

The following petitions were read and received:

Of the corporation of the county of Ontario praying that an Act may pass extending the time for taking of the assessment for the township of Pickering and for returning the roll to the Clerk.

Of the board of education of the city of Windsor praying that an Act may pass approving completion and equipment of Centennial secondary school and authorizing the issue of the necessary debentures by the city of Windsor.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East), from the standing private bills committee, presented the committee's first report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting March Diamond Drilling Limited.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the town of Parry Sound.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): I move that leave be given to the legal and municipal committee to sit during the hours of sitting of this House until the Christmas recess.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, just a comment on that. I presume it is so that the investigation of Bill 5, the expropriation bill, might be carried to its completion before we rise for the Christmas recess. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if this is something that has been done during a session of the House before in your experience?

Mr. Speaker: I would be pleased to advise the hon. leader of the Opposition that some years ago I was chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. We sat investigated a certain matter every evening for a week while the House was sitting, I believe, so that within my personal experience it has been done on a resolution of the House.

Does any other member wish to speak to this motion?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say very briefly that I think it is the wish of all members of the House that this legislation be carried forward as quickly as possible, consistent with discussion of the provisions of the Act. We have had two meetings of the committee this week and we are making, I think, fair progress. But I think it is the wish of all members, certainly of the committee, and, I would think, of the House, that if we can, by the exertion of a little extra effort, conclude our discussions in committee before this session adjourns, we should do so.

There was a unanimous indication of willingness in the committee this morning that we should endeavour to do that, if the House would give us permission.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that it has a further benefit too. We always know where to go for members if we fall short in the House on such an occasion.

Motion agreed to.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, The Mechanics' Lien Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly introducing the bill. Actually, what I propose to say to the House is largely contained in the explanatory note which will appear when the bill is printed. This is really the statement of how the bill was developed, at this time.

I would point out that in 1965, the Ontario Law Reform Commission undertook an extensive study of the law in Ontario as it relates to mechanics' liens. A report, dated February 22, 1966, containing the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission for updating and revising The Mechanics' Lien Act, was made by the commission to the Attorney General.

Bill 190, which was a part of that report, was introduced and given first reading at the 1966 session. This bill gave the proposed legislation an opportunity for wide distribution in convenient form for study by interested persons and organizations. That study, I may say, was wide and extended.

The commission then held a further public hearing and considered many submissions resulting from the study and these, in turn, resulted in a supplementary report which was dated May 26, 1967.

The recommendations of the commission contained in the supplementary report have been incorporated in the present bill. There is, however, one major exception. The bill does not transfer jurisdiction in mechanics' lien action from the Supreme Court to the county and district courts as was recommended by the commission in both of its reports—both the supplementary report and the previous one.

It is thought advisable to leave this matter in abeyance, pending the conclusion of the general review of the jurisdictions of the several court systems in Ontario, which is now going on as a result of the recommendations contained in the McRuer Report on Civil Rights.

The bill also contains a number of editorial and other changes which are designed to clarify the intent. These have resulted from the study of Bill 190.

INSTITUTE FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF BIRTH DEFECTS

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish an Institute for the Prevention and Cure of Birth Defects.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I shall explain the purpose of the bill during the course of my Throne Debate contribution during the next two or three days.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting and proper, and I am sure the members of the House would agree, that at this time we pay some tribute to two young men, Detective-Sergeant Lorne Chapitis and Corporal James Smith. They had dedicated themselves to making Ontario a better and a safer place in which to live when they became members, some years ago, of the Ontario Provincial Police force, and each in his turn took an oath of office to serve Her Majesty the Queen without favour or affection, malice, or ill-will, and that to the best of his power he would cause the peace to be kept and preserved and would prevent offences against the person and property of people of this province.

Each of these men, Mr. Speaker, has distinguished himself in the service. Detective-Sergeant Chapitis was a competent specialist in criminal investigation and was charged with the responsibility of supervising that branch of the forces in No. 8 district with headquarters in the city of Peterborough. Corporal James Smith was a teaching corporal with the district and in addition was a specialist in the use of special equipment.

When the call came to these men, Detective-Sergeant Chapitis left his dinner table with his food untouched, met with the corporal, and these two men went about their duty where they met their death.

I am sure all members of the House join with me in expressing our condolences and sympathy to the families and in paying a tribute to the courage and the conduct and the devotion to duty of these two men, and I would associate particularly in those remarks the members of this House from Peterborough and Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is most appropriate that the Attorney General has taken this opportunity to say a few words to express our feelings on this particular day. I was listening to the news as I drove in to Toronto this morning and wondered what could be done to express in some small way the feeling that all of us as members of the Legislature have at this terrible circumstance. Certainly I join with the Attorney General and all other members in wishing something else might have been the alternative, but that we offer our sincerest condolences to the families.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be allowed to say a word in view of the fact that one of these men was from the city of Peterborough and the other I think was from the township of Ennismore. They were highly regarded men and I awoke this morning in the atmosphere of sadness in the city of Peterborough that such a tragedy should have taken place.

They were fine men who shared the admiration of the citizens of Peterborough and the surrounding district, an admiration which extends to all the men, I think, of the Ontario Provincial Police, who do such excellent work in that area.

I think that all of us would hope that the province can be as generous as possible to the families—one man I think has one child and the other one has three children. I am sure our condolences go out to the families and I do hope the province can see fit to be as generous as possible to those who are left.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt has a point of order.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if it is a point of order, but I would like to inform this House that there will be a memorial service for those who gave their lives during the construction of the east-west subway, tomorrow at 12.45 p.m. at Bloor and Yonge Streets. I think we should sometimes reflect on the sacrifice these men and their families have made to the industrial undertaking of our province and in the construction of our great city, and I would like to take this opportunity to express my personal condolences to the men who gave their lives during the construction of the subway and perhaps the condolences of this House if possible. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a question for the Premier (Mr. Robarts) concerning the disposition of the federal-provincial conference next week. He is not in his place but I do not believe the question requires any further answer since the news reports of the last few hours indicate that it is postponed. However, it might be possible for the hon. Treasurer to tell the House if the timing of the Conference of Treasurers with the Minister of Finance will be altered as well?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, we learned this morning that Ottawa is calling all provinces to secure consent to proceed with the Finance Ministers' conference. Indications at noon were that the meeting would take place as scheduled and we expect to be advised definitely some time later in the day.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs which I will ask in a moment, after I have asked a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

When the Ontario Water Resources Commission constructs a pipeline to a municipality and determines rates for water to cover costs, will the initial water rate be changed if the water is sold to another municipality from that pipeline?

And, second, will the rate be changed in London as other municipalities use the OWRC pipeline there?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I might say initially that when OWRC enters into the contract or agreement with the municipality, the answer could be no. But all these contracts or agreements are subject to review. The rates vary from contract to contract, in accordance with how the use of water on that particular line increases. Then after a particular period they are reviewed and new rates struck. And that would apply to London as well.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask a supplementary question: It is reviewed depending on the local situation, but there is no necessity that the cost would go down, as the number of users increases?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Not until they had initially fulfilled the first part of the contract or agreement. And the review date is in every agreement.

Mr. Nixon: Is the review date normally five years, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes, approximately five years.

Mr. Nixon: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Attorney General.

Will the Attorney General investigate the case of an 18-year-old Canadian Indian girl held, because of her inability to raise $1,000 bail, in the Don Jail for one month awaiting trial on a charge of theft, which was finally dismissed, as reported in the letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail, written by P. T. Matlow in his capacity as an officer of the court?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Crown Attorney for the County of York to get me particulars of this case and I propose to review it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. No. 1: What steps has the Minister taken to enforce "conflicts of interest" regulations for municipal officials in London?

2. Is the department contemplating any action against Mr. Les Thomas, a member of the London Public Utilities Commission, who refuses to sign the declaration of office form?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the disqualification of a member of council is a matter which must be determined by a court, at the instance of an elector of the municipality concerned. The Minister of Municipal Affairs not being an elector of the city of London has no authority to institute such an action. Therefore it follows that the answer for the second part of the question is no.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health; is the Minister of Health going to undertake any action to control the air pollution in the townships of Moulton and Sherbrooke, since the report of the Royal commission yesterday, the question, which was filed yesterday, indicates such pollution is continuing.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the report indicated that the pollution was continuing at the time when the commission concluded its hearings in March. During the 1968 growing season, ERCO did not operate their fertilizer production facilities, the company had been advised that such practice must continue until they install a positive means of control on their curing sheds, and this had been confirmed by a Ministerial order.

The facilities of Sherbrooke Metallurgical have been surveyed and requirements will be made upon completion of the work.

Inspection during the growing season this year indicates that economic loss of agriculture, crops and livestock was not evident. We have not been requested to provide negotiation services for the settlement of any claims.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford has a question of the Minister of Health, from yesterday.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health. How many patients from the Ontario Hospital at Woodstock are being transferred to private nursing homes? Two—What is the purpose of the transfer? Three—Is this a continuing process? And fourth, does this indicate that care may be provided more cheaply in private nursing homes than in Ontario Hospitals for the patients who are subject to transfer?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there is no stated number of patients being transferred. They are transferred as the need for hospital facilities come to an end. When patients are transferred from an Ontario psychiatric hospital they are discharged from psychiatric hospitals, because there is no longer a need of psychiatric treatment. Those who are in need of a certain amount of personal care, care which can be provided in a nursing home, are transferred to such a facility. The cost has really nothing to do with it whatsoever. The determination as to whether a transfer should be effected or not is dependent entirely on the medical view as to whether the patient requires the kind of treatment provided in the psychiatric hospital, and if not, to what kind of facility should he be transferred.

This procedure is to be continued in keeping with a policy laid down some time ago so that the facilities of the hospital can be put to the proper use and provide the care for patients who need such facilities.

Mr. Innes: A supplementary question of the Minister. How many homes are involved? Are they transferred to one home in particular? And how many at the moment are in nursing homes?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will have to get those numbers for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent has a question of the Minister of Correctional Services.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Correctional Services:

Has the Minister received the report of George Street, chairman of the national parole board that some provincial jails and mental hospitals are like dungeons, and what are the names of those jails?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, we have not received such a report. Indeed we are not subject to any such report by the federal authorities. I can only assume that the hon. member was referring to a news report of statements attributed to Mr. Street during an appearance which he made before the Commons standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

In order to answer the questions, it was necessary to telephone Mr. Street, who advised us that he had made absolutely no derogatory statements regarding the correctional system in Ontario. As a matter of fact, he emphasized "I stated that Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have good systems."

Perhaps I might enlarge on that too, Mr. Speaker. I think the confusion here arises because of the different systems in effect in the various provinces. There are some provinces which in effect have one building which is used as a local lock-up and what we would consider here a county jail for men, and for women, a detention centre for juveniles, what we would consider here a training school for boys—and for girls—and what we would consider here a reformatory for males and for females. In some jurisdictions in this country these are all housed in one building.

So, I think the confusion arises in interpreting Mr. Stewart's statement as referring to the kind of a very sophisticated system which we have in the province of Ontario, which of course he was not referring to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

When can the report of the inquiry committee studying the cheese industry be expected by the government?

Will the report be made public?

Has the disbursement fee paid to cheese factories not producing fodder cheese been discontinued?

Is it the policy of the Ontario milk marketing board to promote natural cheddar cheese?

How many pounds of this product have been exported to date this year to the United States and to France?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the report is now in the hands of the printer and copies of this report will be made available to whoever wishes to have one.

I am not sure what the hon. member means by "disbursement". Was it "disbursement fee", he referred to? What does he mean by that?

Mr. Gaunt: Well, on a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I understood that there was a payment made to cheese factories not to produce fodder cheese. In other words, it was hard to sell and they did not want them to produce it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Then I assume, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member means the diversion payment that was paid to divert milk to other uses?

Mr. Gaunt: Oh, was it called "diversion payment"?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If I assume correctly, this is what it is.

Mr. Gaunt: To divert it from one use to the other?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes. The diversion payment which is made to encourage the plants to divert surplus milk into other more marketable products, such as skim milk powder, because fodder cheese is difficult to sell.

This programme was discontinued by the milk marketing board on April 1, 1967 when the surplus removal function became the accepted responsibility of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Now in reply to the question, "is the policy of the Ontario milk marketing board to promote natural cheddar cheese" yes, it most certainly is. The milk marketing board has done this in several ways.

Firstly, the board provides moneys for advertising and promotional purposes to the Canadian dairy food service bureau, to promote all dairy foods generally. This programme has been highly successful, as far as cheddar cheese is concerned.

The milk marketing board has, on its own, engaged in some very extensive cheddar cheese promotion. For instance, during the month of October the National Cheese Festival month, the board engaged in such promotion in all media. In fact, the full page colour spreads placed by the board in many of the leading daily papers, won special awards.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the figures for the hon. member's last question concerning the export of cheese to United States and France are not yet available.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development advises me that he has an answer to a question placed by the member for Humber. Would the leader of the Opposition wish the answer given?

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have the answer if it is agreeable.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, tenants of Ontario Housing Corporation who are given an opportunity to purchase the dwelling which they occupy are under no obligation to take the step of becoming a home owner. Before any sale is consummated, the dwellings are thoroughly inspected by OHC and any repairs which can be attributed to normal fair wear and tear, and then carried out.

Once a tenant has entered into a purchase agreement with OHC any subsequent repairs or maintenance are his responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain has a question of the Minister.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Why has the Ontario Housing Corporation not sold the 2.6 acres to the Hamilton Separate School Board that are needed for a school site in the Lawfield subdivision in Hamilton for the proposed St. Pius School?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is that the Ontario Housing Corporation is endeavouring to expedite the sale of approximately 2.68 acres of land in the Lawfield subdivision to the Hamilton Separate School Board.

As I am sure the hon. member is aware, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is a joint owner of this land with OHC. Therefore, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's approval of the sale is required.

This has been requested by OHC. At the present time the area in question is not on a registered plan although registration is anticipated at any time.

Again, recognizing the needs of the separate school board, OHC has indicated its willingness to sell the site to the board on the basis of metes and bounds description, subject to the exact boundaries of the site being defined, when a plan has been registered.

The agreement with the separate school board will also make provision for payment by the board of its share of services and costs and so on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question to the Attorney General. Has the Ontario Fire Marshal yet made any recommendations arising out of the discussions at the 60th convention of the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs concerning problems in fighting fires in high rise buildings?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, at the present time, this matter of fire fighting in high rise buildings and apartments of that nature is under study by the Dominion Fire Commissioner, the Association of Fire Marshals and Commissioners of Canada and the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs. The subject is considered to be quite a complex and difficult one. No conclusions have yet been reached. Consequently, no recommendations have been made by the Ontario Fire Marshal to municipalities.

I would point out, that since the Association of Fire Chiefs are taking part in this study, the discussions and conclusions which so far have been considered and reached, are available to the fire chiefs of municipalities.

I think I might add that the problem is, not so much one of fighting the fire in these situations, but what to do with the occupants of the buildings; whether to take them completely away or just have them evacuate temporarily and so on. The problem really arises there and it is not really a case of fire fighting.

The study is continuing and it is expected there will be some recommendations shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has placed two identically worded questions; one to the Minister of Highways and one to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, requesting an opinion on a legal matter and I would have thought that it would also have been directed to the Minister of Justice.

However, perhaps the hon. member will place the two questions now to the two Ministers and we will see what happens.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Right. Mr. Speaker, the first question, which is identical to the second, is to the Minister of Highways.

As a result of the advice received from the Attorney General, would the Minister inform the House as to the legal position of the provincial government in regard to the raceway on Lakeshore Boulevard West in Toronto?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, we have not received any advice from the Attorney General on this matter.

Mr. Trotter: I have been informed that they were advised—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The hon. member has asked a question and it has been answered by the Minister. The hon. member may ask a supplementary question if he wishes but not make a statement.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Highways could let us know when the Attorney General will be giving him the information, as I am informed, he has already got it.

An hon. member: He wrote it on his Christmas card.

Hon. Mr. Gomme: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, we have not asked him for that information.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

An hon. member: He is not going to give it until they pay their bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I have some responsibility in this area. Perhaps not in a question in the House but in some conversation outside with the hon. member I may have indicated that I gave an opinion to the Minister of Highways.

An opinion was requested of The Department of the Attorney General and that opinion was furnished but it was requested from The Prime Minister's Department and the opinion went forward there. That was done some days ago.

Mr. Trotter: Well then, Mr. Speaker, my question no doubt to the Minister of Municipal Affairs is redundant. I assume the same answer: "He has not received the information."

An hon. member: He is very busy these days.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Ask it.

Mr. Trotter: I will ask the question if the Minister will feel better. Mr. Speaker, as a result of the advice received from the Attorney General, would the Minister inform the House as to the legal position of the provincial government in regard to the raceway on Lakeshore Boulevard West in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the advice has not yet been received.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health—

Mr. Trotter: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Trotter: Has the Minister requested advice from the Attorney General?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that in the House a week or 10 days ago—

Mr. Trotter: And the Minister has—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —that I asked for his advice, that we had collectively asked for his advice.

Mr. Trotter: Well your chains of communication in that government are really confusing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well then I can only say that the hon. member should refer himself to Hansard and he would find where I answered that question a week or ten days ago.

Mr. Trotter: That is why I am asking him now. I know an answer was given, I cannot—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member give legal advice right off the cuff?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister of Health has answers to two questions; one from the member for Humber, and the other from the member for Grey-Bruce. Would it be in order to have those answered or would you wait?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Humber asked question 330: What are the names of those mental hospitals which are like dungeons as indicated by National Parole Board chairman George Street to the standing committee of the House of Commons on justice and legal affairs? I am unable to provide that information since they do not fit any mental hospital in Ontario.

The other question, Mr. Speaker, placed by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce: What consent is sought before electro-shock treatment is given to patients in provincially—

Mr. Speaker: Order! That one, I do not think, has been asked. The hon. member is not here.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister of Mines.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, what action has the Minister taken or will he take in light of the findings by the Ontario Water Resources Commission after analysis of a sample of drinking water from the Fecunis Mill to the effect that the problem could be eliminated by the installation of a filtration system and the flushing of the water mains with a high dosage chlorine?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has no knowledge whatsoever of any analysis by the Ontario Water Resources Commission of this matter, nor the findings, obviously, of the commission, and therefore no action in respect of that matter by the department is being contemplated.

I must say, though, that the district mining engineer indicates that he has not observed any bad taste over the last five months in the water but he is willing to admit that this might be due to the cooling of the water by the cooler fountains which are all over the plant. It is also my understanding that the water in the Fecunis plant is already being chlorinated.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question. Would the Minister accept the report which I will send to him and then he will be in a better position to reply to the question?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Certainly, we might have saved time by having that in the first place.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have the answer to a question posed yesterday by the member for Grey-Bruce. He is not in his seat; should I hold the answer or should I proceed to give it?

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the Opposition has indicated that the answer should be given.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: May I rise on a point of order just for a moment? You have just heard the question and the supplementary question asked me by the member for Sud-bury East. He has now forwarded to me what appears to be a copy of a personal letter directed to him by the Water Resources Commission but the implication, I think, of the supplementary question was that somewhere or other this department or this government was derelict in not already having this information.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order. I assumed, Mr. Speaker, when I submitted the question to the Minister he would seek out the knowledge, because I submitted this water for analysis at the suggestion of the Minister of Health approximately a week and a half ago. I thought once he had received the question he would look into it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not in order. The hon. Provincial Secretary has an answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member for Grey-Bruce posed a four-part question to me and I would like to answer as follows:

1. Delivery service by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario has been available in Metropolitan Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, London and Windsor areas for some years. A charge of 35 cents per package is made for such deliveries, which are on a prepaid basis.

2. The annual report of the LCBO for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, showed the LCBO to have 2,144 persons in retail store operations. For the same period the Brewers Warehousing Company had 820 permanent people in their stores, plus approximately 1,000 part-time employees.

3. The LCBO has 406 retail stores in operation and the Brewers Warehousing Company has 358 stores.

4. The total number of employees in the LCBO in the fiscal year ending 1957 was 1,774 and in 1967 the total was 2,440.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the member for Grey-Bruce had an urgent question. I am wondering if the leader of the Opposition would like to place it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Then can I assume that this question is withdrawn?

Mr. Speaker: No, the hon. Minister cannot.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the member cannot be in his place and he will ask the question after notice being given.

Mr. Speaker: This matter was dealt with at some previous time and the hon. Minister either has not read Hansard or did not pay attention.

At that time Mr. Speaker agreed that there were occasions upon which Ministers could not be present to answer questions directed to them and occasions upon which members could not be present when answers were given, or when questions were to be placed. I think it was agreed by the House that in such events they would not be placed or answered unless the party concerned had asked the leader of his party to deal with the matter.

I think that is a very satisfactory way of dealing with it. It has worked very well and unless there is some change in the attitude of the House we will continue in that manner.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I just felt that as it was so urgent I would like to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I draw it to your attention and particularly to that of the Attorney General.

This morning most of my colleagues and I drove to Peterborough to join for an hour or two on the picket line with the strikers at the Examiner. In so doing we found ourselves in the good company of a couple of professors from the local university and a couple of members of the clergy and other citizenry.

The whole thing was relatively uneventful except for one rather interesting aspect. There were only two policemen on the site—local policemen, not OPP—and they spent their time taking pictures, first with the normal kind of camera that a press man would have and then with a telephoto lens, from various stations across the street.

The point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that I think that members of this Legislature—indeed, I would extend it to citizens of this province—have the right to go anywhere in this province and express their support of any event such as this without being subjected to continuous photographing by the police.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we were not intimidated, but a normal citizen who wanted to express his support would immediately find that his picture was going to be in the police file. For what purpose?

Mr. Speaker, three of my colleagues and I, not being able to get an explanation from the police officers on the scene, went to visit the chief. It was confirmed by him that the men were there on his instructions.

Since they arrived half to three quarters of an hour after we did they were obviously there to photograph members of the Legislature who came down to express support for strikers out on a legal strike. When we asked whether or not for example, this kind of thing had been done with the strike-breakers brought in from other Thompson plants, the answer was no, unless they happened to be in other pictures that were taken.

Mr. Speaker, I draw this to your attention because I think it is intimidation; I think it is intimidation for members of the Legislature, or for any citizen of the province.

I would ask the Attorney General to examine under what authority citizens of this province are subjected to continuous photographing by the police.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, since this was drawn particularly to my attention by the hon. member, I would first of all say I would think there is no question of privilege involved here. I know of no law which says that any citizen may not be photographed as he goes about his lawful errands.

Mr. MacDonald: Continuously, by the police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can recall an occasion, when the hon. member was photographed; I saw him on television in a very similar situation. He seemed to be very proud of the fact that he got that publicity.

I do not think there is anything to constrain the police from photographing anyone. I do not think it is a question of privilege. Perhaps it was unnecessary. But I would say this further, Mr. Speaker. The police in this province are governed at the local level in their activities of this nature by the local boards of police commissioners—that is the head of a municipality, a judge, and a citizen of that municipality—on matters of discipline and conduct which, under The Police Act, have to be dealt with. They come up through procedures laid forth in that Act to the police commission and then to the Attorney General.

I will look at this. At the moment I do not think it is a matter of privilege—I say that openly and frankly and firmly. But, since the hon. member has raised it, I shall consider it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Remember what happened to Joliffe. Be careful! It could happen again.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order. Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment of the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): You may recall, Mr. Speaker, in recent days I have had the pleasure of talking with you about areas of this province which had not had too good a representation in the Legislature. I thought I could briefly turn my attention to another area of the province—the area that lies somewhat to the west of Toronto where, perhaps, the people are not quite satisfied any more with the representatives they are sending to this Legislature.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): The member was talking about Sudbury.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, well, the member for Sudbury has abandoned us, so we will leave that. I am sorry the member for Stormont (Mr. Guindon) is not here, but we still have the member for Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve). But I am not going to talk about that today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to give away a political secret now. I am giving this to our political opponents so they may use it for what it is worth. We, in this party, have set up a new plan to save the areas of the province that are still backward politically and each of the members in our caucus has been assigned two or possibly three ridings in which to act as foster father and which it is our duty to win in the coming election.

The member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and I were given the honour of taking the ridings of Halton East, Peel South and Peel North from the infidel, and we have been working industriously—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): What happened to St. Andrew-St. Patrick?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): It is being looked after.

Mr. Shulman: We have been working industriously at this problem, Mr. Speaker, and I am delighted to announce that there was a breakthrough this morning. Mr. Speaker, I was called this morning by one Bruce McKinnon, president of the Young PCs of Oakville, and he said they are having their next regular meeting on March 5 and they wanted me to come and be their guest speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They figured it was time for some entertainment.

Mr. Shulman: At first, Mr. Speaker, I thought they had made an error and that they were still using an old list of guest speakers. I questioned Mr. McKinnon about this matter but he assured me that this was not the situation and he told me that I could choose any topic I wished. I told him the topic I would discuss is, "Why you are getting poor representation at Queen's Park."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why do we not get these invitations from the NDP?

Mr. Shulman: The Minister is welcome at my riding's next meeting. I want to invite all of the members here, particularly on the Conservative side of the House, to come to Oakville on March 5 and hear the discussion of why representation is poor from those three ridings, and perhaps we will convert a few of the young PCs. I am hopeful to get at least a few workers for the next election.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): The member knows he is second choice—

Mr. Shulman: You can see, Mr. Speaker, how desperate the people in those ridings are; they are even trying the Liberals.

Yesterday, you may recall, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing some of the problems in the mental hospitals and homes for the retarded throughout this province, and discussing some of the interesting travels that the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), the member for Lakeshore and myself had about the province. And there was a little uproar towards the end of the day from the official Opposition when I suggested that perhaps they were not visiting these institutions.

If I may digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I use the word "official" Opposition with some pleasure. You may have noticed, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal members always stress when they get up, "the official Opposition", and the "leader of the official Opposition". What they do not realize—the error they are making—is everyone else in the House also refers to them as the official Opposition; and then there is also the real Opposition.

We did not go on a bi-partisan basis to these institutions, although I wanted to. The member for Lakeshore and I said we should not go as two NDP members to these institutions, we should go with two Liberal members, so the things we would bring out of there would be apolitical, on a bi-partisan basis, so we could make these suggestions in an apolitical way. I would like you to know why we did not go in that way, Mr. Speaker.

We made two approaches to the Liberal Party. The first was made last year at the time we discovered there were beatings occurring in the Guelph Reformatory, and we asked at that time if one of their members would accompany us down to Guelph and we were refused. We made a second approach; I personally spoke to the executive assistant of the Liberal leader before we began this tour, and again we were rebuffed. For that reason and that reason only did we make these tours on our own. I wanted to get that quite clear, Mr. Speaker.

When I left off I was discussing my ejection from Penetang and I promised you, Mr. Speaker, that I would explain what I discovered about Penetang without getting into that institution. But first of all, I kept all this clothing from Smith Falls here. It really belongs to The Department of Health and I would not want anyone from The Department of Health accusing me of taking any of their goods, so could one of the pages arrange to have this returned to the Minister, please?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: You notice the attitude, Mr. Speaker, of the Conservative backbenchers. They say “put it in the wastebasket”, and that is where it should be; it should be in the wastebasket—

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): It should not be in this House.

Mr. Shulman: It surely should not be in this House and it should not be in the Smiths Falls institution where it was. It is shoddy goods produced by a Conservative manufacturer for a Conservative government and foisted on the helpless people who cannot do anything about it. And if you are not embarrassed, you should be.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Except I am not certain he is capable of embarrassment.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: How come you are defending it?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is that his maiden speech?

Mr. R. M. Johnston: We can make a blooper. Down boy, down.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to hear the erudite remarks of the member for St. Catharines. He is now at his best and I would hope that Hansard has it all down for the benefit of his constituents.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Best speech he ever made.

Mr. Shulman: It is indeed.

When I went to Penetang, shortly before my ejection from that building I had an opportunity to examine the bulletin board and to copy down a little notice that was on that bulletin board. It is not a terribly important matter and I only mention it to show how very disorganized The Department of Health is. When I came back the next day I asked a question in this House of the Minister of Health about patients in that hospital who were being assigned at low rates of pay to act as domestics or labourers for the staff. And you may recall the Minister of Health replied, and I asked him a supplementary because I was wondering if he had made a mistake.

He replied that the workers did not receive any of these funds and they went into a common fund which was then divided among all the workers. This is completely wrong, and although it is not terribly important, I merely mention this before I come to the important thing about Penetang, to show how poorly organized this department is. The Minister just does not know what is going on in his own hospitals. I will read the copy of the memorandum, signed by Dr. Boyd, superintendent of the hospital, which was taken from the bulletin board. It reads as follows:

Sixty per cent of these moneys will go to the patient concerned.

Of course this money should go to the patient concerned, but it bothers me that the Minister does not know what is happening.

You will recall that I did not have an opportunity, unfortunately, to go through Penetang. However, by the strangest of coincidences, the very next day I discovered why—or a very good reason why—the Minister would not want me to go through Penetang, or for that matter, any other member of this House to go through Penetang. A woman came to my office and by sheer coincidence her name is Mrs. May V.—I have her full name here. She lived at Orchard Park Boulevard in Toronto and she has a 16-year-old boy who has spent the last year in the Penetanguishene psychiatric hospital.

She was extremely upset and distraught when she came to my office and she told me a hair-raising tale which at first I did not believe. This hair-raising tale is that her boy was on a certain ward F, and she begged me to phone to the supervisor of the hospital, Dr. Boyd, and get him off. When I asked her why she was so upset about him being on this ward F, she explained to me that because of the shortage of staff at this hospital, inmates of the hospital had been assigned as teachers, and her boy was under two of these inmates, and they had been forcing him to have homosexual relations with them.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I didn't believe this. She went on to say that they had been caught doing this, as a result of which one had been transferred back to Kingston Penitentiary—back—note the word "back". Apparently he came from Kingston penitentiary to Penetang, and there had been assigned as a teacher with young boys in his care. The other one had been transferred to another part of the hospital. A fantastic story, hard to believe. The only trouble is, it is true.

I phoned the hospital. Dr. Boyd was not there when I called, and I was put in touch with Dr. Barker. Dr. Barker, you may recall, was the assistant superintendent who refused me permission to tour the hospital. Dr. Barker, when I related these facts to him, said: "Well, there was no proof they were having homosexual relations." I asked him: "Is it true you transferred these two men, one to Kingston, and one to another part of the hospital?" He said, "Yes, that's true." I said, "Why did you transfer them?" "Well, we thought they were forcing the boy to have homosexual relations."

They must have had pretty strong thoughts to take such radical action. That is what is going on Penetanguishene. That is what they do not want us to see.

And where is the Minister of Health? As always he's not in this House. He is not out doing the job he should be doing. For goodness sake, through you, Mr. Speaker, through the Prime Minister, do something. There is something very, very wrong in that department. This comes back to the same problem that I hammered at yesterday and the day before—shortage of staff. You shouldn't be putting homosexual inmates with other inmates, or in charge of young boys. You must realize what is going to happen in a situation like that. And, if you don't realize it, you are incompetent.

Now, appropriate the money; instead of spending $300 million this year on new highways we do not need, spend $290 million. Appropriate enough money out of that bloated highway budget, and do what you have to do in those institutions. Because if you do not, you are going to have abuses of this nature—scandals repeatedly—and be forced to do the type of thing, the Minister of Health has been forced to do, that is turn these opened places into closed places where the Opposition may not go for fear they will discover the horrible facts.

Well, so much for Penetang. I could not—I did not see Penetang. I wish I had. I am sure there is a great deal to see there. Perhaps someday we will get in, and find out what is really going on in Penetang.

Well, Mr. Speaker, The Department of Health does have a show institution. They have one and are proud to show it to you. There is one in this province. You would have no difficulty to get into that institution. It is in London, by coincidence. All the good institutions in this province come to London. It is called the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute. This is a beautifully landscaped place. It is a former sanatorium and covers 160 acres.

On this 160 acres, the department says, there is capacity for only 100 children.

Actually, last September when I was there, there were only 80 patients. Eighty on 160 acres. This is while we have a long waiting list of children who cannot get into these hospitals. I could not believe that—even where you have 160 acres, with 100 patients supposed to be there, you only have 80. I could not believe they would leave 20 empty places. When I have patients in my own practice—I am sure every doctor in this city has patients who are waiting to get into a place like that—and they cannot get in. For goodness sake, why do you not fill those 20 empty beds?

The supervisor of nurses replied: "shortage of staff." The junior supervisor said more staff was available in the area, at the salaries offered, but unfortunately there was no money to pay them, because the staff requirements, which had been submitted to the department for each ward, had been slashed this year. Cutting back this year, when they should be expanding!

Mr. Gisborn: This is a great programme we heard about a year or so ago.

Mr. Shulman: Because of the shortage of staff, in London, at this show institution, patients today have to wait a minimum of six weeks, many of them longer, just for the initial outpatient interview. Not to be admitted—just to be heard and to see what the problem is.

As Dr. Zarfes, the then superintendent, said in 1965—and I quote him: “Parents who wait the longest for their appointment tend to be negative in their attitude and felt that they had not been helped by this institution.”

That was the situation in 1965, and this year, in response to Dr. Zarfes’ plea—Dr. Zarfes is now at a higher level in the department—they cut back from 100 to 80 beds.

I find it very disturbing that the stated and published aims of the institution are not followed. They say one thing, as this government does often, and they do another.

For example, in the annual report of the institute it states that a child will be accepted, unless, “It is obviously not mentally retarded.” This is an institution for the mentally retarded. They do not want people in there who are not mentally retarded. This is common sense, one would think. Yet, when I went there in September, children who obviously are not mentally retarded, children who are obviously emotionally upset, are mixed in with the obviously mentally retarded. Surely, the institute could follow its own rules?

Furthermore, the institute was set up for research among the retarded, with the intention of having the patients in for short terms, with ultimate care. That’s what it is—a research institute to try and find out what can be done for the children and then to send them to the appropriate institution, with appropriate care laid out for them. Yet, even this rule is not being followed.

I was amazed to have a conversation with Sandra, a hydro-cephalic girl of 12, who has now been in the institute for seven years. The maximum stay is supposed to be 60 days! She is there seven years with no thought of moving her. Something has gone wrong with the mechanism. Something has gone wrong in that department. Something is very seriously wrong in the show institution in London.

So even in the very best institution for our retarded—the very best public institution in this province—the Children’s Psychiatric Research Institute, there are serious and obvious flaws, and fatal understaffing.

But of all the Ontario hospitals for the retarded, none is as depressing as Aurora. And Aurora, I may say is one which, for some reason, nobody has visited.

I wonder if the Minister of Health has ever been to the Aurora hospital? The staff do not recall him going there. None of the staff I spoke to could recall anyone ever visiting. And for darned good reasons.

Mr. Speaker, go for yourself. It is very close to Toronto. It is not too far from your riding. Go for yourself, and go up to the top floor, Mr. Speaker, the common room. An elevator opens and you step out of this common room and it is a sight that is beyond description. It is emetic! This is the only word I can use.

You see the hopeless, the abandoned, the helpless. You see people like animals, like vegetables, lying on the floor, others trotting on and over them. There is only one thing I can compare it to, Mr. Speaker. I saw a movie a short time ago, a movie which I fear will not be shown in Ontario, because of our present Minister of censorship. It is called “The Tittie Cut Follies”. This is a movie that was made surreptitiously in the Bridgewater hospital for the mentally ill, in Massachusetts.

When I saw this movie, I was frightfully reminded of our institutions. The state of Massachusetts has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States, and has succeeded in stopping the showing of this movie, with good reasons. For the same reasons the Minister of Health does not want me to go to Penetang, and does not want any of us to go into the public institutions. Because it shows the truth. And when you see that movie, “The Tittie Cut Follies”—and we are going to try to show it here—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Invasion of privacy was the reason given.

The state of Massachusetts felt that it was being slandered and said the patients’ privacy was being invaded. And the patients looked terribly like the patients in the hospitals here in Ontario—the same problems, the same difficulties, the same shortage of staff. I hope that our Minister of Tourism and Information will at least be willing to arrange to have the members of this House see that movie. Because that movie outlines the problems we have here in this province.

If, Mr. Speaker, the Minister prevents it from being shown in this country, I shall inform you in due time in this forum.

Well, what of the senior staff in the Ontario mental hospitals? I received a letter from a psychiatrist who is a senior physician at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. He is a man who has been on the provincial staff for a long time. I will quote—this came in just a few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I enclose here a memo, the contents of which will make clear the subject I wish to see you about. We believe you are the person able to help us here. Needless to say, being a civil servant, if you reveal my name as the informer, I will be immediately fired from my position.

Having tried every means available, there appears to be no other way than to seek external help, and we trust you will help. No one knows that I have contacted you, only that someone's aid will be sought. If an official inquiry is ordered, naturally all the persons mentioned, including myself will testify accordingly. Please let me know, whether you are willing to provide help.

So, I phoned that doctor and made an appointment to see him and he gave me this memo. Let me quote from a portion of the memo:

Nursing and attendant staffs of wards are suddenly totally transferred to another ward without prior notice to or consultation with the physician in charge. Physicians who carry out ECT treatment [that is electrical treatments for the mentally disturbed] and have to do also the anaesthetics find themselves with untrained new staff and this creates a great danger to the safety of the patients. The new staff know nothing about the patients, so that after such a change total confusion exists for days, hampering treatment.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Is that why one died the other day?

Mr. Shulman: I am going to digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and as the member for Windsor West has just pointed out, under ECT treatment just a few days ago, a patient in one of these hospitals did die. There is going to be an inquest held.

Mr. Peacock: One has been held.

Mr. Shulman: I continue with my quotation:

Presently a number of female wards are completely staffed by male attendants who are obliged to bathe female patients. They resent this work and report sick in large numbers.

Pharmacy keys have been withdrawn from all physicians due to the pilfering of drugs. There is absolutely no communication between the medical, nursing and administrative staffs, except in written orders.

Due to these conditions there is an atmosphere of mistrust, fear and frustration. Any attempt at change or improvement is immediately suppressed. Physicians who take up positions soon leave the hospital.

Sexual intercourse between male and female patients is tolerated and ignored, frequently leading to marital troubles. The same is tolerated between female student nurses and male patients. Night staff of wards frequently consists of a male and female attendant, in most cases, both married, frequently leading to break-up of marriages of the same.

The conditions as described above can be verified by the following staff members.

I have the names here and I will be supplying them shortly.

I am not going to repeat the names in this forum but I hope to supply them to the health committee. The list includes six medical doctors, one psychologist, three nursing superintendents, one chief attendant, and three attending superintendents. The medical doctors who are listed either are, or have been within the last two years, on the staff of that hospital.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the health committee—we are supposed to have a health committee, it has never met since it was organized—I ask the health committee to travel to this hospital and interview the staff members mentioned—and I will supply the names to them—to determine the facts for themselves. I ask only one condition; that each of these staff members be interviewed privately and that they be promised they will not be discharged if they tell the truth. Under those—the member for Fort William is jumping a bit. Did you wish to ask a question?

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): Oh no, Mr. Speaker. Just that the member has mentioned that student nurses have intercourse with the patients. He has said this in the House and now he wants secrecy. I cannot understand his sadistic attitude, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Obviously, the member is confused, as usual.

What I am doing, of course, is preserving the jobs of the people involved. The homes of the doctors and nurses should not be disrupted because they are willing to speak out and tell the truth. They have promised to speak—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): The hon. member is casting a smear against every nurse in every Ontario Hospital—a shameful accusation!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: They have agreed to—

Mr. MacDonald: The usual Tory reaction.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, we see the typical attitude of the Tory benches.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): They are trying to cover up something that is wrong.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, they will not be willing to have the health committee go there—you know it and I know it. But because they are afraid of the truth, they yell the usual Tory word—smear. That is the only word they know. They are afraid of truth, particularly that front bench.

Mr. Brown: If they have nothing to hide why do they not bring it out in the open?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member smears everybody disgracefully—that is his tactic.

Mr. Shulman: All right. I ask through you, Mr. Speaker—we have a Minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see there is a Minister in the front bench. Will the Minister agree that the health committee should go to that hospital?

The government has stacked the health committee with Conservatives. They have nothing to worry about. They have a nice safe majority. Is the Minister willing to let his back benches hear the truth? Say yes.

Big silence. Silence. He is afraid. Sure he is afraid.

Mr. Brown: Let the press in. Just open it up to the press.

Mr. Shulman: I am not even asking the press, I am asking the Conservative back benches, there are a few good Conservative back benchers. Let the head of the health committee go there; let the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) hear the facts. The Minister is afraid. He does not want him to hear.

Well, what of the hopelessly mentally retarded?

Mr. Martel: They are all over there.

Mr. Shulman: What of those who are waiting to enter places like Orillia because it is impossible for the parents to keep them at home? Children like Susan A., who I had down here yesterday. Susan—I stood here, in this Legislature, I said I want you to see this child who has been brought down here by her parents—it was a heartache for them to do it. I said to the Conservative members, go and look; go into the west lobby and see for yourselves.

There were 12 members that went in to see; one Conservative had the heart to go and see what it was all about, the member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson).

Not one member from the other side of the House would walk across and see for himself. They do not want to know: “keep it hidden, do not show it to us.” They did not have the heart to walk that 20 steps.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Then the hon. member would complain we were out of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: That is pretty neat.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I would have expected better from the Conservative Whip. We can understand the Tory back benchers, they are frightened. They are afraid they are going to lose their seats. The Whip comes from a good Conservative riding and when we own all 116 other seats he will still be here. So he does not have to worry.

So there is no reason for him to be afraid to step those 20 paces and peek out the door, if he does not want to leave the House. Not one of them took the trouble. Not one from that side of the House. You have one man here, over on our side, and that is where he should be.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: We served our people.

Mr. Shulman: You served them. I have seen how you served them. I have been to Orillia. I have been to Smiths Falls. I have been to the other institutions. Go in and—

Mr. R. M. Johnston: You do not know you are alive.

Mr. Shulman: Go in and take your health committee. You know why the health committee never meets, Mr. Speaker? Because they are afraid of that health committee.

They made the mistake of putting a few Tories who think on it and that is why they do not allow it to meet. They are afraid it might go into some of these institutions and see what is going on. It has not met in a whole year and a half.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The member for Nickel Belt and the chairman of that committee is not present here today, Mr. Speaker, but I was on that committee last year and we did meet at least once. The hon. member for High Park was not there to express his views.

So I would like to set the record straight: we did meet last year, but the hon. member was not there.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Rainy River would not wish to mislead the House. There was one meeting last year and I was present. I hope they will take the trouble to get out the minutes to check the attendance because I was there.

It was the organizational meeting and we organized the meeting and we then dismissed and we have not heard from them since. They have not been to one institution in this province.

An hon. member: They do not care.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They were out at the Ontario OMSIP.

Mr. Shulman: They went to OMSIP, Mr. Speaker. They took a little tour and had a lunch at OMSIP and that is their contribution. That was their one meeting. That meeting, incidentally, was called at the same time as the meeting of the committee on government commissions.

There is your health committee. But it is not a bad committee, if they would just be allowed to meet. So I say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister—there is no use speaking to the Minister of Health, I do not really think he wants this committee to meet—but to the Prime Minister, for goodness sakes either disband the committee or let them do their job. Maybe they can save this situation for you.

Well, what about Susan A? She is a patient of mine, has been for some four years—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Maybe that is the trouble.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, perhaps that is the trouble.

Mr. Martel: That is the type of remark we expect.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps that is the trouble. I like the implication of that remark from the hon. Treasurer. If I have taken the wrong implication—I hope I am wrong, I hope the Treasurer will correct me. If that patient is a patient of mine, is that why she is being kept out of the mental hospital? If that is what the hon. Treasurer is suggesting I am ashamed for him. I weep for him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That was not the connotation of my remark.

Mr. Brown: That is why the conditions are the way they are.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, this is a patient of mine, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps if it was a patient of Dr. Dymond's, the patient would be in hospital by now. But that is the trouble. The hon. Treasurer blurted it out in his usual—

An hon. member: Inimitable fashion!

Mr. Martel: Boorish manner!

Mr. Shulman: When this child was born 5½ years ago, it was immediately obvious to the doctors that she was hopelessly retarded; that she could never live in a home setting; that she could never be cared for at home. She was immediately put on the waiting list to go into Orillia. She is still on the waiting list.

A year ago I wrote: What is wrong; why is it taking so long? At that time I got a letter back: "Do not worry, she is on the list. It is coming along, she is number seven."

Six months ago I could not understand what was happening, so I contacted Dr. Fotheringham at the mental retardation centre and went to see him. I have no criticism of this man; he is a kindly man who is working under horrible conditions and doing the best he can. He told me an incredible story.

He said most children are admitted within six months, but Susan had not been admitted, and would not be admitted, because she had been put on the wrong list. There are two lists.

It seems that two years ago, because of the long list of waiting children, the department decided to start all over again. All new applicants went on to a new list and, if severely retarded enough, were admitted within a period of six months—within a reasonable period of time. But if you had applied before that date two years ago, your child could not go on the new list. You had to stay on the old list and you just had to keep her at home and wait. What a system! What a department!

Mr. MacDonald: It is a good Tory way of getting rid of the problem.

Mr. Shulman: It is a good Tory way of getting rid of the problem except that Susan A's do not go away. They stay at home and the misery continues. The families are going through unbearable tortures as a result of this.

Periodically the department says, "Oh well, we feel sorry for you"—actually it is not the department, it is Dr. Fotheringham. Periodically he calls the family up and says, "Look, we will give you a couple of weeks' rest, send her in here to the mental retardation centre". They call it family relief. They take her in for ten days or two weeks so the mother can have a few days when she can leave the house.

They have done that I think three or four times for Susan. Very kind of them. Dr. Fotheringham is doing his best, but what a department that must be, when you can let children like that remain on a list for five and a half years with no hope of getting her in even today. And how many Susan A's are there in this province? How long is that list? Who knows? Dr. Fotheringham did not have a copy of it. The Minister of Health knows nothing of what goes on in his own department.

Mr. Martel: They ripped up the list to stop the problem.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, the list got too long, so they ripped it up to stop the problem. You notice the Treasurer is fleeing again from the House, Mr. Speaker. If he had stayed we would at least have one member in the front bench to hear the true facts. What is the department doing about this mess? They now have a new policy, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Provincial Treasurer has a question, he has his hand in the air. Oh, I thought you wanted to leave the room, I am sorry.

They have a new policy. After all these years, this year they finally brought out a new policy; they have decided that the number of retarded in the Ontario Hospitals must be reduced, so in order to carry out this policy they are doing two things. They are discharging patients and not taking an equal number of new ones in, which means the Susan A remains at home; in addition to which they have a bright new idea—they encourage nursing homes to be set up to take these patients. The results have been disastrous for the patients involved, and this has quickly become common knowledge among parents of the mentally retarded so that more and more of these families are refusing permission for the move.

You make have heard earlier today one of the backbench Liberal members ask a question of the Minister of Health in which he enquired about the policy of transferring patients to nursing homes from mental hospitals. The Minister of Health replied in a way that indicates he probably is not aware of the policy, so perhaps I should inform the House, and perhaps, through you, Mr. Speaker, if he returns you will let the Minister of Health know what is going on in his department.

These nursing homes have very quickly degenerated, and the relatives who have visited them have become aware of the bad surroundings in these nursing homes. Now it is becoming almost impossible for the hospitals to get permission of the relatives to get these children or the older defectives moved, and the reason for the difficulty is so very simple. Again it boils down to the same old thing: This government's priorities are cockeyed.

They have agreed to pay $8.50 per day for the care and feeding and nursing of each patient. Compare this to the $23 and more per day paid for the care of the emotionally disturbed and you will understand the difficulties in the nursing homes. You just cannot care for a mentally defective—and these are the hopeless ones that are going into these homes for $8.50 a day.

I visited two such homes in the last three months, and at both, the proprietors were bitter and unhappy. One home in Belleville had been set up to care only for infants, and even under these circumstances the $8.50 per day barely allowed the owner to break even. But even worse was the fact that for unknown reasons—unknown to the proprietor, unknown to me, unknown to everybody—The Department of Health persists in sending older mental defectives to the home even though there is no staff in that home to handle older patients.

In recent months five patients have been sent from Smiths Falls, from age 10 to 16 years, to a nursing home that has only cribs. To aggravate the situation, the patients have been sent to the home with no accompanying medical or psychiatric information. Requests for this information by the owner of the nursing home were met with the reply that it was none of her business.

I said to her, "I do not understand it, why do you not just refuse these patients and send them back?" She said, "Well, I barely break even now keeping a full complement. I did that twice; I sent two patients back and they said if I continued to do this I was not going to get any more patients. They have no infants for me, therefore I take them and I shut up, or I lose my investment." That is what they are doing—running things badly from one end to the other.

At the other nursing home I visited, which was in a city in northern Ontario—and I will not mention the name of this nursing home—the owner complained that he could not break even on this $8.50 per day but he was certainly trying his best. The home was understaffed, the patients were lonely and neglected, the stench was unbearable due to uncleaned human waste, and there was not even a yard for the patients to be taken out to. Small wonder that parents beg to have their children kept in Orillia or Smiths Falls, with all their faults, rather than to be transferred to these nursing homes, if we can call them nursing homes.

How did we in Ontario come to allow such a hideous scandal to develop? It did not happen overnight. It was not through lack of knowledge of the need. It really developed because like so many other branches of this government, there is a wide discrepancy between what the department says and what it does. Our Minister of Health, in the last Legislature, published a white paper. You have heard that white paper referred to several times this last week, this great white paper which was going to clear up the whole problem. This white paper was the government's plan for services for children with mental disorders. I quote from page 5 of that white paper:

Good programmes can only be provided by properly trained staff in adequate numbers. Salaries and working conditions will be adequate to recruit and hold staff.

That is what the Minister said. It is interesting to see what he actually did.

I told you how short-staffed every hospital is throughout the province, so what about the salaries? Well, the government is not too anxious to advertise the salary level plus the requirements to go with it, but one of the supervisors at one of the hospitals, who is not too enthusiastic a supporter of this Minister of Health, supplied me with the salaries and the requirements. I am going to read them to you, Mr. Speaker, and I would suggest that at the lowest level the requirements would adequately fit any of these people to be Cabinet Ministers at least.

The lowest level is a trainee. These employees participate in the daily life of the residents and assist other staff in guiding them in a variety of activities such as dressing, personal care, ward housekeeping, sports, games, hobbies, industrial or occupational training.

Qualifications: Grade 12 in Ontario or an acceptable equivalent. Applicants with grade 10 may be accepted provided they have demonstrated competence in working with the mentally retarded or in related fields of youth work. Staff employed prior to the establishment of this class, who have demonstrated competence to work with the retarded, may be accepted in this class. It is necessary to have ability and desire to understand the problems of handicapped persons, and the capacity to establish and maintain effective relationships with them—leadership, resourcefulness, integrity, good moral character and habits, emotional maturity, good physical condition.

The salary for all these qualifications is $4,400 rising to $4,800 ultimately. That is what they want; that is what they are prepared to pay. There is not a man in that whole government side who fits those qualifications. Not one!

Suppose you want to be a counsellor, the next step up. Let me read what is required to be a counsellor, Mr. Speaker.

Employees and physicians allocated to this probationary training class, have completed the mental retardation certificate course and are gaining partial experience and training in an Ontario hospital school, or similar facility, pending confirmation as fully qualified counsellors. Positions in this class emphasize the skills and techniques required for the care and training of the mentally retarded within the daily living situation.

Practical training involves work on any shift, under the supervision of more qualified staff, with all aspects of residential life programme. But these employees may be temporarily assigned to other areas of residence therapy as required. In all activities, these employees substitute as parents for the handicapped residents under their care. They must assist in developing acceptable habits and manners, and assist in counselling residents concerning personal problems. These employees assist in guiding the activities of an assigned group of residents in accordance with an approved programme of activities and events, both on and off the premises.

They supervise the residents and actively participate in sports, games and hobbies. They may accompany an assigned group of residents for occupational and industrial training location and assist in the training programme. They promote habits of safety and administer first aid or bed-care. They assist the residents in personal care such as bathing, dressing and preparing for bed and assist when required with dormitory housekeeping. They adjust heating and ventilation, inspect lockers, beds and dormitory quarters.

It is required that they have successful completion of the prescribed mental retardation certificate course. They must have the ability and desire to understand the problems of handicapped persons and the capacity to establish and maintain effective relationships with them. They need leadership, resourcesfulness, integrity, good moral character and habits, emotional maturity, good physical condition. Salary is $4,600 to $5,000 per year.

Mr. Gisborn: Bring your own lunch.

Mr. Shulman: Less than half of what is paid to the members of this House. Let us suppose we want someone higher in the qualifications, a counselor grade II.

Employees and physicians allocated to this class, have successfully completed the prescribed mental retardation certificate course, and as qualified counselor, act as substitute parents for an assigned group of mentally retarded residents in an Ontario Hospital school or similar facility. On any shift, under the direction of a supervising counsellor, incumbent physicians in this class actively encourage and train the residents to develop acceptable standards of personal behaviour, cleanliness, dress, conduct and sportsmanship. These employees supervise the residents on or off the premises and participate in sports, games, hobbies and other programmes related to the needs of the residents and teach them the mechanics of daily life.

The counsellor advises and encourages the residents in the areas of moral development, deportment and adjustment to the demands of contemporary society.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am always delighted to have the help of the member for London South, because he brings out points which otherwise might have been missed. And as I pointed out yesterday, he is the best brain they have, so it is always nice to have him. It is quite correct that some of the members on this side of the House are not listening because they have all had the opportunity to hear and read this speech beforehand.

It is more disturbing, Mr. Speaker, that the government benches, whose occupants should be here to listen and learn, are empty. There is one Minister in the front bench. As a matter of fact, what have we got here? We have 17 government members in the House, Mr. Speaker.

These counsellors grade II must assist in medical treatment and chart residents' behaviour and progress. They meet with other counsellors to discuss problem cases and methods of unit programming. They provide advice and guidance to less experienced counsellors and they supervise counsellors in training, and are responsible for their practical instructions. Salary—$5,000 rising to $5,500.

Let us go to the top level and see what they pay for the really top people. Those are counsellors, grade III and IV.

First, the counsellor III, which is the second level, is under the direction of a senior counsellor.

Employees and physicians in this class supervise staff and residences usually housing 35 residents. They are required to work on any shift. On all shifts, they supervise at least two subordinate counsellors, and assist in the training of counsellors. They may be temporarily assigned to other areas of residents' therapy. During the presence of the counsellor in charge of the residents, they assist in the supervision and instruction of residents' staff. When the counsellor is not present, they are in charge of the residence, acting in accordance with the instructions of and with authority delegated by the counsellors. These employees direct the board and staff on their shift, in providing day-to-day living activities for the residents, self help, socialization and other training programmes related to the needs of the residents.

They meet parents and visitors, and advise and consult with parents concerning their resident children. They organize and delegate work to the staff. They train and advise counsellors in their duty. They maintain standards of cleanliness and discipline to ensure proper moral and social training of the residents. They control the drugs, they supervise the administration of the medications, they consult with the supervising counsellors on the problems of the individual residents. They assist in supervising pin-money expenditures. They maintain all the records.

What are the qualifications required? Supervisory ability, ability to promote and maintain harmony and a working relationship amongst subordinates and other staff. Ability to deal tactfully with parents and others. Good physical condition. Salary for this boss, this supervisor is $5,700 to $6,300.

Well, let us suppose we rise to the top of the department. Let us suppose we go as high as we can go. Counsellors IV—what do they pay the top people?

An hon. member: Shorten it up, get to the Ministers.

Mr. Shulman: They pay the Ministers too much, and they help too little.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Counsellors IV—May I suggest again through you, sir, that the member for London South had better leave because now I have promised my wife I will be through by Christmas, but I do not expect I will be through much before that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Counsellors IV—I will quote again from this document—

Incumbents or physicians allocated to this class are in charge of the residents in an Ontario Hospital school or similar facility for the mentally retarded, usually housing the order of 35 residents and requiring a staff of at least ten qualified counsellors to cover all shifts.

Under the direction of a senior counsellor in charge of the unit, they are responsible for the effectiveness of the programme and the residents assigned to them, and for the wellbeing of the residents. They sit in committee with the unit programme director and the other staff involved in the administration and they are responsible for the practical training of the counsellors.

The incumbent or physician in this class normally is required to work on either the day or afternoon shift, depending on which has the greater degree of activity scheduled on the given day, and may be temporarily assigned to other areas of therapy as needed.

These employees recommend changes in policy and procedures, interpret policy to parents, visitors and staff, and consult with their supervisors and other staff and providing day-to-day living activities for the rest of the residents.

They set standards of cleanliness and discipline, ensure proper moral and social training of the residents, arrange work of subordinate staff, ensure the administration of prescribed medicines and the safe control of drugs; supervise pin-money allowances, and they may make limited purchases on behalf of residents; requisition needed supplies and equipment; maintain inventory and all other important records. Salary for a counsellor IV—$6,672.

No wonder this document was so hard to get hold of. Just compare, Mr. Speaker, the qualifications of these men with the qualifications of the Cabinet Ministers and then compare the minute salaries of these men with the highly overpaid Cabinet Ministers who sit opposite, occasionally. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that with that salary scale the department is only going to recruit those dedicated persons who want to work with the mentally retarded in Ontario, regardless of the pay and regardless of the working conditions and regardless of the poor administration given by this Minister.

We should bear in mind particularly when hiring professionally trained workers for our institutions that we must compete with similar state-run institutions in neighbouring jurisdictions. If our salary range is too low, all the staff, the nurses, the psychiatrists, all the others, will gradually drift to the higher paying competitors and we will be left short-handed, and that is exactly what has happened.

I made a compilation of the salaries of the personnel in the state institutions for the mentally retarded in 15 states of the U.S. and we should have no pride when we compare our salaries and the qualifications. In some states the salaries are no higher, but at least there they have had the common sense to reduce the educational and other qualifications so they are at least fully staffed. The department has just not been realistic; it is too easy for our staffs to move that 100 miles across the border and raise their salaries.

Let me say at this point that everything is not bad in the field of mental retardation in this province. Fortunately, part of it does not come under this government. There is one small part which does come under the government which should be given certain credit. There are a number of places I would like to give credit to.

On the first one, in all fairness, I would like to say that since the hon. Minister of Education has supervised the programme of education for the retarded, after his department had taken this over from The Department of Health, there was tremendous progress. It is still not ideal, but there has been tremendous progress in that particular field. This, may I say, is a very small part of the care of the mentally retarded.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Is the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute in London a good facility?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I hate to repeat those 12 pages, but I would not want the Minister of Revenue to miss anything about London. For the benefit of the Minister I will give him a capsule summary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, through you to the Minister, it is a shame of course; the showplace, in truth, is in London. Of course things are run badly there, as elsewhere, and incidentally it may be of interest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Revenue has been through the institution a number of times, I was told by the staff there. I was very pleased he had come there; I am only sorry that all the shortcomings which I pointed out here today had never had anything done about them, with the Minister having gone through so often and not having noticed them.

The second area where things are not all bad—it has nothing, of course, to do with this government—is the Metropolitan Toronto Association for Retarded Children. They have done yeomen work. A visit to their Harold Lawson residence is a heartwarming experience, but unfortunately limited to very, very few children. When I complained to their director that they were just scratching the surface, he replied, "No, we are not even tickling it." If only the care that was given to the 40 children in their residence was available to the many thousands of similar children in places like Orillia.

Thirdly, the Ontario home for mentally retarded infants in Plainfield has provided a setting for 70 retarded crib patients which is a pride to this province. Unfortunately, even this wonderful institution must fight The Department of Health rather than receive its co-operation. Because the home has been set up to look only after crib patients, it is essential that the department co-operate by transferring patients to other institutions when they become ambulatory, because there is not the staff there to handle children who can run around and who are retarded. And that means that at the age of four or five these children must be transferred out of there. Unfortunately, this does not occur.

The people in Plainfield are continually fighting with the department, begging that these transfers occur. When I visited Plainfield last month, the staff was distraught because of this difficulty. One mongoloid lad, Russell W, a seven-year-old, had become a serious problem in that he was ambulatory and he begun to eat anything made of wood. His diaper was frequently found with wood chips in it, with blood stain, and yet repeated requests for the essential transfer did not come through.

I think the whole problem in The Department of Health was well summed up by the present Minister of Health when he visited Plainfield. He did go to Plainfield on April 26, 1965, and made a speech, and perhaps unkindly, Mr. Speaker, the home reprinted that speech. I have the whole thing here but do not have the heart to read it. Even I could not do this to the Minister of Health.

I will quote one line of it because this appeals to me, just this one line. If the Minister of Revenue asks, I will read the whole thing, but this one line sort of sums up the department's problems.

There are apparently increasing numbers of these sorely needed handicapped infants in every community and none of us have been able to decide or to figure out what best should be done for them.

The speech goes on in this tenor for some pages. I am tempted to read it all because it really sums up the problem. I would be delighted to send a copy of this speech, which has been printed and distributed in some thousands, to the Prime Minister, if he would like to read it, and after reading it perhaps then, he might realize what the problem is in this department. But I like that line, I will just read it once more, it appeals to me:

There are apparently increasing numbers of these sorely needed handicapped infants in every community and none of us have been able to decide or to figure out what best should be done for them.

Well, other people have been able to figure out what should be done for them and we are trying to tell you.

Fourthly, the Good Shepherd Manor in Orangeville works with 13 boys—only 13—aged 12 to 20, in a farm setting. They appear to be getting good results, and the staff are a pleasure to meet and visit, but they are taking only mildly retarded boys. Because of the limited enrollment available, they can have only a marginal effect on the problem. We could use 300 Good Shepherd homes in this province and that would not cover the whole problem.

And now I would like to tell you of a non-Canadian project which I visited last month in Illinois. This is perhaps the most productive and hopeful of all the projects in the field of the retarded. It is called The Lambs, and it is a six-year-old successful project to allow the mentally retarded to lead productive, happy lives.

You see, there are people not only outside of this province but in this province, who know what the problem is, the trouble is they are not in this government and they have not been hired by this government and that is why you have the horrors of Orillia and the horrors of Smiths Falls and the horrors of Brockville, but in Illinois they know what the problem is and they have done something about it.

The Lambs is a non-profit organization that was set up by two teachers, Bob Terese and Corinne Owen, to provide work for mentally retarded young adults. They now have two locations, The Lambs Pet Shop in Chicago and The Lambs Pet Park, a 48-acre farm in Libertyville.

The basic philosophy of The Lambs is that the mentally retarded can develop much faster in skills and in social graces if they are given something other than routine work to do. By giving the retarded some responsibility, by letting them meet the public and do a variety of tasks, the latent potential of the retarded is brought forth and the personality actually is changed, you can see the change.

It was felt by the co-directors that if the young people worked with pets that needed love and care, this responsibility would help turn the retarded's attention away from his own problems and toward the problems of feeding, cleaning and caring for the animals.

A total of 65 retarded young people have worked for The Lambs. There are presently 40 mentally retarded working in either of The Lambs' two locations. Another 25 have left The Lambs and are now working full time in commercial businesses; four are working part time outside The Lambs.

Other than the basic success of helping retarded young people, The Lambs have been recognized by the President's panel on mental retardation as one of the five outstanding new projects in America and by the governor's committee for the handicapped to represent Illinois in a bulletin designed to encourage industry to hire the handicapped.

Where is the government here? The Lambs Pet Park will be the centre of large future expansion with plans for a pet cemetery, the development of a 15-acre lake for fishing and family picnics, a bakeshop, a cannery for jams and jellies, a greenhouse, a gas station and—most important—residential dormitories for the retarded to live in, should their families die, so they should not have to go to the horrible institutions such as there still are in this country and elsewhere.

On my visit to The Lambs I was delighted, amazed and excited to find young mongoloids and other defectives with IQs as low as 45 happily working with the animals, serving in the restaurant and working in the print shop. My waitress was not a mongoloid, she was simply retarded with an IQ of 46; she served, she poured the water, she brought the plates, she was happy; she was doing something productive.

The difference between this happy productive group of young people and a group with similar IQs in Orillia is like the difference between a normal child in an orphanage and that same child in its own home. The Lambs are truly doing great work.

We could do it here. I hope we are not going to await a change of government. Do it now, why should we have to wait these two years?

The philosophy and practicality of The Lambs' work have been well set out in this letter from Mr. Terese, which he gave to me and I quote:

Corrine and I are pleased to have this opportunity to present our philosophies and goals for The Lambs Community to you. We are respectfully submitting the Lambs plans for a better life for the higher level mentally handicapped young adult who has completed his academic years and must now make his adjustment to the world of work.

We have long felt that the key to happy living is worthwhile work. We believe this is especially for the mentally handicapped, because for most of them life has little purpose. It was discovered a few years back that some of these people were capable of performing low level work chores. The enthusiasm of this discovery swung the educators' opinion from the past position that they were virtually non-productive to the position that they could be self-sufficient.

We believe both extremes are wrong. Since work is a most important cog in a normal person's life, it is true that it is equally important in a handicapped person's life. The normal person, however, balances his satisfied work life with equally satisfying social and recreational activities. Thus, we have a well rounded, productive, contented individual.

The handicapped person has only his work life to sustain him and, because he is a human being made up of parts, this is not enough. He frequently becomes discontented and frustrated, thus causing a serious erosion in the satisfaction of his work life.

If, like bread, work is one of the staffs of life and we remember that "one cannot live by bread alone", then equally important is the social development of the young person. We must plan for the entire human being if any of our plans are to be fruitful. It is this total plan of both work and social development that we are presenting to you here.

The first area of our work plan is the successful operation of the largest pet centre in the United States. We have the physical plant for it—a barn 100 feet x 100 feet, with a second floor of equal space, giving us 10,000 square feet.

Our plans call for going beyond the selling of pets and pet items and extend to the manufacturing and packaging of many of these items ourselves. Thus, we will earn a higher profit and productively put to work more mentally handicapped. As related businesses to the pet centre, we plan to operate a kennel for boarding dogs and a pet cemetery.

We have selected pets as a work area for the mentally handicapped because, as Dr. Karl Menninger keenly pointed out, pets are a "product" that has warmth and can be related to—also they need taking care of and give a great sense of responsibility. We are combining a successful business with satisfying motivations.

Mr. Speaker, may I digress for a moment? I am sorry to read all of this but I think it is so very important that I am going to take the time of the House to read in their entire programme.

What I have said up to now about The Department of Health has been basically criticism. What I am saying now is basically suggestion. Perhaps some of this—maybe a little of it—will fall on fertile ground. I want to read it all because obviously the department is completely unaware of this type of programme.

I will continue with the quotation:

The second major part of The Lambs' work plan is the development of the kitchen, bakery and dining room. The dining room is now in successful operation, and growing popularity has already necessitated a larger facility.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that when I went to the dining room there was a lineup of people who had come out of Chicago and driven the 40 miles to The Lambs' pet park to eat—specifically, in that restaurant—and it is like that every week-end. There is a lineup from 12 right through to 3 o'clock because this project, for the past six years, has caught the imagination of the people of Illinois. They realize the tremendous work that is being done and they, and the government, are thrilled and delighted to support it.

The people of Ontario have no possibility of supporting such projects because we do not have them. I continue the quotation:

Food, of course, is one of life's nicest pleasures, and it is enjoyable to work in areas that we warmly relate to. The baking of delicious bread and preparing of tasty foods is a natural motivation. The food experts of Sara Lee Kitchens are donating their time in creating bakery and food products the mentally handicapped can successfully produce. They are also making teaching time available so we will have better trained personnel.

The work areas of the kitchen and bakery will include operation of a dining room, canning jams and jellies, candy making, and baking one or two products of bakery goods for resale. We hope to eventually duplicate the School of the Ozarks approach in mailing our food products throughout the United States.

A companion business to a dining room is a gift shop. This is inadequate, and we have been advised by Robert Carlson (a trustee of The Lambs who is associated with Marshall Field and Company) that the gift shop would do much better connected directly with the dining room.

Most of the young peoples' day will be taken up by a work pattern beginning at 9.00 a.m. and ending at 4.00 p.m. Recreational planning should begin in the evening to make their day complete. Planned recreational activities would centre around drama, music, arts, and crafts, organized games and swimming.

Again may I digress, Mr. Speaker. The type of thing we do not find in any of our Ontario institutions.

Our development of social and recreational periods will be new and imaginative. We intend to have few non-participation activities such as films and television. Our main—

Incidentally—again may I digress, Mr. Speaker—this is the one form of recreation that we do find in the institutions: "Show them a movie, this will keep them quiet for a few hours. Put them in front of a television set, that will keep them busy."

Of course, this is wrong and The Lambs have recognized this. Other jurisdictions have recognized this. In our institutions, because of the short staff perhaps, they have no choice—keep them busy, get something that does not require any staff, get the idiot screen, set it there and let them watch it. To continue:

Our main goal is active participation—plays, musicals, and arts and crafts. An example would be the inter-mingling of high school band members with our young people to form a Libertyville community band. Our young people could be active in the percussion area.

Once again, The Lambs' leadership of community involvement would be found. A major accomplishment has been the placing of the mentally handicapped directly into the main stream of public activities. The most vital purpose of The Lambs is to provide a live-in community that would encompass the work and social life of our handicapped young people.

Basically, The Lambs' community is divided into two groups—the mentally handicapped, who will be holding full-time outside employment and those who, because of their more pronounced limitations, will always work within the structure of the community.

As an example, John, a young man trained in The Lambs' programme, is now gainfully employed by the United States Post Office. However, if John's parents were not here to back him up with a good home, John would be institutionalized. He cannot carry out normal, essential everyday duties, such as making change, choosing a balanced diet or suitable companions. Such a bleak alternative need not be, because John could keep his job and use The Lambs as a live-in community like a YMCA. Here he would receive shelter, food, clothing, counselling, recreation and friends. He would have a fuller work and social life; a home to come to.

Janice, a more childlike young adult, is actively producing within The Lambs' work structure. However, because of her limitations, she would not be able to hold a regular full-time job in the velocity of today's society.

I had the pleasure, Mr. Speaker, of meeting both these children, actually they are young people now and they have made a happy productive life for themselves under these circumstances. I continue the quotation:

Our homes for the mentally handicapped are to be built along the shores of our lake. The architecture of the homes will be efficient and warm. The landscaping will be pleasant and give character to the home community. Unfortunately, most previous home planning has been institutional in construction—

They must have been in Ontario, Mr. Speaker.—with little thought given to the esthetic needs of mentally handicapped.

The Lambs has socially matured and the mentally handicapped and their housing and environment must meet the needs of this more socially developed person. Each home would accommodate 15 and would enable us to form group living with personalities in harmony with each other. This cannot be done in conventional massive type construction.

Our unique work has brought us into contact with administrators and teachers of the mentally handicapped throughout the world and we have been told that the Lamb's home community as envisioned could be a model especially in the United States where little innovation has taken place.

Sincerely,
Robert Terese, Corrine Owen,
Directors, Lambs Incorporated.

I asked if someone had visited from Ontario and they said: "We have had visitors come here from all over the world. We have had visitors from Quebec. We have had visitors from western Canada, but no one has ever come before from Ontario."

This is the leading innovator in care of the mentally retarded in all of the world, and no one from this government, no one from this department, was willing to take that one-hour plane trip to find out what it was all about.

If only there were someone, one person, in The Department of Health who had the vision and the energy of Mr. Terese and Mrs. Owen.

I would not like you to think that the Lambs is a unique organization. This has not just been done by the Lambs in Illinois. Similar villages have been set up in England, Germany, South Africa, in Switzerland, and in New York state, modelled after a wonderful development for the retarded in Botton, England. These were described just last month in the Wall Street Journal of November 6, 1968. It is terribly important again and I am going to take the time of the House to read this because this is a programme which we in Ontario should have copied a long time ago. Perhaps someone over there is listening:

If three of every four adults living in this tiny village at the end of a winding Yorkshire county country lane are mentally handicapped. We have mongoloids and many people with unspecified brain damage, says one of the normal persons who lives with the handicapped.

Botton is neither institution nor mental hospital, at least in the usual sense of the term. It is a small town representing an unusual approach to an often neglected field. Here handicapped adults live, work and participate in their own community. The minimum entry age for Botton is 18, and one resident is 60 years old. Decision making, though often nothing more momentous than choosing a new colour for a room, is open to them. And everybody here has a job. Throughout the world much attention is given to care of handicapped children. But sponsors of the village here say relatively little concern is paid to handicapped adults.

They should come to Ontario; little concern is paid to either the children or the adults in this province.

Often these people wind up sitting aimlessly in a mental hospital, unhappy and unemployable. It is such adults that Botton is trying to help. "Our aim is not to rehabilitate the handicapped into the outside world but to give them a permanent life here," says Mrs. Joan Tallo, a staff member. As a result, Botton, and a handful of similar villages around the world, started by persons trained here, have evolved as secluded, nearly self-contained societies. They aim to be free of the competitive atmosphere that makes it difficult for the mentally handicapped to get along in the outside world.

Many handicapped have left the village, improved enough to live on the outside, but sponsors of Botton do not claim any miracle cures. Most village residents, though free to leave, would prefer not to. At least half of the 90 handicapped here now will live their lives in Botton. The village has become so popular that it now has a waiting list of 500 persons.

Botton is a pleasant place, a town that at first view seems just like any of the hundreds of other hamlets sprinkled across England. The town comes as a surprise to the visitor who has driven miles across the desolate Yorkshire moors to reach it. The road suddenly bursts into the greenery of a quiet valley. Tucked at the far end is the town.

On the hills there are farmers pasturing cattle. Lower down others tend vegetable gardens. In town the postmaster eagerly shows off new commemorative stamps while a dozen or so villagers bend over their work in the doll factory—Botton's main industry. Others grind designs in glassware, weave rugs, carve wooden toys, make candles, and operate the general store and tea shop.

Life is informal. Everyone is on a first name basis and no one gets paid for work. "The communal life works, partly because there is not the competition for the pay packet and we are prepared to live with the handicapped," Mrs. Tallo says. "They find a recognition. The isolation we have is because they need a sheltered social and work environment." There are 35 staff members—

I want you to notice that, Mr. Speaker, 35 staff members to 90 handicapped—there is a proper ratio. Compare that to what we have in our mental institutions.

There are 35 staff members with two living in each of the 17 farmhouses that are homes for the handicapped. But the staffers work hard to avoid being proctors. No walls surround Botton. This has caused problems on occasion, with nights spent searching the moors for someone who wanders off, but staff members dismiss this as the price to pay for avoiding the mental hospital atmosphere. "We try to do away with the staff-patient relationship," says the Rev. Peter Roth, who lives here directing Botton and two other similar villages in Britain. "The handicapped also are human beings," he adds, "and their dignity must be upheld."

Mr. Roth, a minister in the Church of the Christian Community, was one of a group of Austrians who worked with the handicapped in Germany but fled to Britain at the coming of Hitler. After months in an internment camp they were freed to set up a home for the handicapped in Scotland. By the early 1950s the leaders of what by then was called the Camphill Movement wanted to try the idea of a secluded village community.

In 1955 a 280-acre estate was acquired, and Mr. Roth, his wife, and 18 handicapped, of whom half still live here, moved into Botton. "There was hardly any sanitation at first," Mr. Roth recalls, "and our generator always broke down." Residents of Danby, a town a few miles away, were troubled by the new village, too.

Says Mr. Roth: "They thought we would be a kind of looney bin and our people would murder them in their beds." This fear was quickly dispelled by inviting the Danby residents to visit Botton. Botton, which receives much of its financial support from the British government, became a successful operation. Two more villages were put up in Britain and one each was established in Germany, South Africa and Switzerland. In 1962, a Botton-trained worker organized a Hudson River city close to New York City. A village currently is planned for Norway.

Over the years life at Botton has slipped into a routine. At 7 a.m. an old convent bell near the main house clangs and awakens the residents. They work through the day and spend their evenings in discussion groups or at movies, lectures, or amateur theatricals. The Botton Players, who one staff member says are "extremely good actors, because they are not inhibited in any way," recently have performed Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan" and Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale". When heart transplants became big news, a physician visited to lecture to the villagers on this subject.

At 11.30 each morning the workshops close and the villagers gather for lunch in their homes. One group passes through a pasture and up a path to a white clapboard farmhouse perched on a hill. A couple of the handicapped are already inside helping prepare the plain English lunch. Soon the rest gather and lounge in the red-walled living room reading mail and newspapers—English dailies and Botton's own weekly with articles by residents.

One villager excitedly tells a visitor that he had a letter today from his father in the U.S.—he is the only American at Botton—but he will not be staying for lunch to discuss it—brain damage at birth 39 years ago. He eats in his own room because he cannot stand being hemmed in at a table.

Conversation over the lunch of boiled beef, boiled cabbage and boiled potatoes, covers a wide range. There is discussion of a recent movie and the coming vacation of one villager, a tiny mongoloid, who though 20, looks only 14. Now and then she reaches out to the arm of a woman guest and affectionately pats it. At the other end of the table a ruddy-cheeked resident, both spastic and brain damaged, tells about his job delivering goods from the general store in his wheelbarrow.

There is a 39-year-old woman who tries to dominate the conversation. Quick to speak, quick to laugh, she also is quick to rage at any seeming slight. She apparently has little or no organic disability but is emotionally disturbed. Her acute paranoia would make it impossible for her to hold a job on the outside. A similar case is a 24-year-old who years ago was dumped into a mental hospital by his parents because he was backward. He outgrew the backwardness but it was replaced by a sense of complete rejection. Two years here have cured most of this feeling and staff members think he may someday leave.

The closeness of living in Botton does cause friction but staff members think the family unit idea is important. Mrs. Tallo says: "I lose my temper sometimes, and I shout at them just like I do my own family." But a moment after saying that, she is comforting the tiny mongoloid who has burst into deep tearless sobs. The heat of the summer and the work of the morning were too much and she is packed off for an afternoon nap.

There is one married couple among the handicapped. They were married in 1963 before all the villagers. For years they wanted to get married, and for years we stalled them, but it became obvious they had every right to be married. They have a four-year-old who was backward though the parents' problems are not considered hereditary. Now the staff believes it is only because the couple could not help the baby develop properly. Since he has begun playing with children of staff members, he is quickly catching up. None of the other residents are married, but staff members say that sex has caused few problems at Botton.

I will tell you why sex has caused few problems at Botton, Mr. Speaker, and the reason is very simply that the mentally retarded, who have very short attention spans, are kept occupied, they are given something to keep their lower IQ busy. They work during the day, they act in plays, they beat on drums, they talk, they do things that are productive at night, and this is why sex is not prominent in their institutions; this is why they do not have homosexuality in Botton, there is no homosexuality in The Lambs, none.

They do not have the pregnancy problems, the concealed intercourse. When mentally retarded who have normal sexual drives are left with nothing to do, the obvious is going to happen, they are going to have sexual intercourse and we are going to have unwanted and hopeless pregnancies. This is one other reason why we must develop a programme, we cannot just put them in the rooms and let them sit there. We could do equally good work as that being done in England, or in all these other countries, if only someone in The Department of Health would provide the leadership.

Now, there are seven things that should be done initially here in Ontario to make up for our 25 years of neglect.

First, the health committee should visit these institutions and verify the facts I brought here for themselves. I came here and I brought these facts and sure enough last night I went on a radio programme where there was a spokesman for the establishment. This gentleman immediately spoke up, he is from—I do not wish to feud with that newspaper, but he is from an organization newspaper—and his first comment was, "How do we know it is true?"

Well, all right, here is how you find out whether it is true. You get the health committee, without prior notice, to travel to these institutions and see for themselves. You do not have to worry, gentlemen, you have a nice, safe Conservative majority on that committee. If the worst comes to the worst, you will twist a few arms and they will modify their findings a little bit. Send them down, let them see.

Second attendant and professional salaries must be raised to realistic levels and requirements reduced to practical levels, because until you do this the whole thing is hopeless, you cannot get the staff that you are requesting with those ridiculous salaries. As an initial step, reduce your requirements, and you can staff the place. You cannot do anything without staff. And you must appropriate the money, because if you will not appropriate the money the whole thing is hopeless. Your priorities are cockeyed.

Third, fees paid to nursing homes for the care of defectives must be raised immediately to a minimum of $12 a day. They cannot break even on $8.50 a day and the result is they cut down, they cut down on staff, they cut down on food, they cut down on care, they cut down on laundry, cut down on everything. The patients are the ones who suffer. Visit some of the nursing homes, you will not believe your eyes. You must pay them more money.

Fourth—please, please, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Health, children like I brought down here yesterday, like Susan A, must be admitted promptly to a suitable home or institution. If you have to take a crash programme and build them. Build them.

You have empty institutions that you can use. Do not close the Cornwall sanatorium. If you must do this stupid thing and take all those TB patients out, use it. These children must not be allowed to sit for 5½ years outside. Do something!

Fifth, programmes such as Plainfield, Good Shepherd and Harold Lawson must be expanded. They must get more government support; these are private programmes which are great programmes. They are run by dedicated people—in many cases religious people, who, as a result of their religion, are giving their lives to do this. They need more support—I mean financial support—from this government.

Sixth, and most important of all the things which I have said, The Department of Health must begin a modern programme to encourage the training and integration of our mentally defectives similar to that being done in Chicago and in England, and as I have outlined here at some length. Until you are prepared to do that, you are going to have to be prepared to run institutions for people who are put away so they are out of sight and so we can forget about them. That is what we are doing now and until you are prepared to change the whole basic plan, that is what we are going to continue to do.

Seventh, earlier today, Mr. Speaker, I made a mistake. I introduced a bill which I should not have introduced. I have drawn up a model bill here to set up a birth defect institute. I am going to tell you about that, and I must confess I apologize. I wish to withdraw that bill; I am not going to ask that it have second reading. Because I am so used to jumping up, when you call bills, and proposing a bill and because I had this model bill in front of me, I automatically presented it for first reading.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A poor try, eh?

Mr. Shulman: No, it is a wonderful bill and I am going to tell you the details of this bill right now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Why is the member going to withdraw it, if it is so wonderful?

Mr. Shulman: Well, you see, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, like the members to my right, the Conservatives also do not know the rules of the House. If they knew the rules of the House they would have recognized immediately that the bill setting up a birth defect institute is improper and should not have been submitted because, of course, it involves the expenditure of funds.

It probably would have gone through all three readings and would have been passed and this would have been very embarrassing for the government. But I am withdrawing it because I do not wish them to be embarrassed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I want you to take note that we have finally had a positive contribution by a member, from the far left.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the hon. member would leave the matter of the bill to Mr. Speaker and the officials of the House because it is not within the competence of the hon. member at this point to withdraw the bill. It will be dealt with properly if it is not in order.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any case, I will now discuss the bill.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): This is out of order.

Mr. Shulman: I believe the member for Downsview is making a point of order?

Mr. Singer: Oh, no.

An hon. member: He wants to be chairman for a little while.

Mr. Shulman: This suggested legislation—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, the member for Downsview was talking in his sleep, it was my mistake.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. Shulman: This suggested legislation, Mr. Speaker, provides:

1. For establishment in an appropriate agency or institution, a birth defect institute.
2. Conducting a scientific investigation and surveys of the causes, mortality, methods of treatment, prevention and cure of birth defects.
3. Publishing the results of such investigation.
4. Carrying on programmes of education and training in the field of birth defects and allied diseases.
5. Clinical counselling services concerning birth defects.
6. Reporting of birth defects and allied diseases by physicians and hospitals on a confidential basis for use in scientific studies.

This bill, which I presented for first reading, Mr. Speaker, is closely patterned after the 1967 enactment in the state of New York and the governor's memorandum accompanying signature of the bill, which he was kind enough to send to me, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

Of the approximately 28,000 children born each month in New York state, an average of 320 have defects visible or detectable at birth, such as cleft palate or mongolism and other congenital conditions which manifest themselves later, such as heart defects. The birth defect institute will pursue research into the cause, prevention and treatment of these defects.

An example of such fruitful research is the test for pku, which was mandated for all infants by this administration. Each year this test detects cases of pku and rescues children otherwise condemned to a life of mental retardation. The birth defect institute will seek similar knowledge and disseminate this knowledge through training programmes in order to save children from lives of deformity and disease.

The counselling services provided for in this bill will enable the institute to advise parents and prospective parents with family histories of congenital disorders as to the possibilities of further occurrences of defective children and can also offer advice as to treatment facilities available for children born with congenital defects.

Of course, we should have such an institute here in Ontario. The cost would be very, very low. Far less than the alcoholism and addiction research institute—far, far, less—and involving a very serious and absolutely neglected problem in this province.

May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, through you to the government, this is the type of project that the government normally looks upon favourably because this would provide a showplace institution and building and a great deal of favourable publicity for them. So I heartily recommend it to them and I hope that within the next few years they will see fit to bring in this improvement which was pioneered in New York and is now being copied by 11 other states, Mr. Speaker. It is something that we should do here.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): It would have made a good centennial project.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, it would have made a good centennial project. I thank the member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken briefly about The Department of Health and although I have considerable other material here about

The Department of Health, I have recently been assigned the position by my party as critic of that department, so I shall save the remainder of that material until my initial speech on the estimates.

Actually, these were just preliminary remarks, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you realize that my main, primary love was reform institutions, and The Attorney General's Department. Before I took my democratic vote, which I explained to you earlier, as to which was the most inefficiently run department—which was won overwhelmingly by The Department of Health—I had prepared a speech; in fact I prepared three speeches—one about The Department of Health and one about The Department of Correctional Services and one about The Attorney General's Department. It is a shame to waste the speech so perhaps I should at least give you the benefit of a little of that material, Mr. Speaker.

I can see that now I am through with The Department of Health, the Minister of Health has finally returned, Mr. Speaker. He has been absent for a few days.

Perhaps I should make a few brief comments, Mr. Speaker, about The Attorney General's Department.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, may I be privileged to interject here that I have been absent while going about the business of the province, and I have been trying to find methods of controlling the air pollution which is so rife in this Chamber.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that I hope the Minister is a little more successful outside this Chamber in controlling air pollution than he has been up to this time.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is that his view on retardation?

An hon. member: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: It is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, the member is quite right. Is that not a shame that these comments that have been made—and they were not directly for or against any political party—should be regarded as air pollution by the Minister of Health? What an indictment of the Minister of Health.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Shameful.

Mr. Shulman: With his own tongue he has indicted himself and proven his inadequacy to hold that high office. Where is the Prime Minister? Why does he not do something about this situation?

Mrs. M. Renwick: What about these children?

Mr. Shulman: Enough of the Minister of Health. I think he has done himself in with his own tongue. Let us turn to the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) a much kinder man.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Heal thyself.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this summer I had an experience, that is the only way of describing it, as I travelled about the province, and went to the various towns, trying to visit the mental hospitals, the jails and when it was not on weekends, the courts. Visiting the courts of our province is a very traumatic experience because our courts are not the type that we can be proud of.

I have ordered some 25 transcripts or more of various cases I heard which I intend to read in full, in this Chamber, because each and every one illustrates an outstanding abuse of the judicial process, as I understand it. They are similar to the case which was described in the Globe and Mail this morning and which well deserved its editorial, of the poor Indian girl who was held and then, with no charge being laid against her, walked out of court after being held in jail for no reason, and with no apology given. It is case after case like this.

I have suggestions made by a very eminent organization in another jurisdiction, who came up here and studied our courts six years ago. With great difficulty I received a copy of those suggestions. Nobody seemed to want to give them out and I will tell you why they were not given out—because none of these suggestions has been followed. Not one, Mr. Speaker, and I shall present these criticisms of our courts, which were done by a neutral governmental body in another area and which have been completely ignored, if they have been read, by the Attorney General.

I intend to read all these transcripts to show you the urgent need for immediate reformation of our courts—particularly the lower level, particularly at the magistrate court level, because that is where the injustices occur. Supreme Court or Superior Court are not so bad, because up there we have a slow-paced, measured quality, high-priced lawyers, lots of time. But down in the magistrates court it is rush, rush; horrible surroundings; rush them in, rush them out. Often there is no duty counsel; often there is no legal aid. Bad things are happening there and we need radical changes in those courts.

You will be delighted to hear I am not going to read those transcripts today. The reason I am not reading them today is, for some reason, the magistrates courts are so jammed up that a number of the transcripts that I have ordered, and some of them some time back, have not yet arrived and I do not want to give an incomplete picture. But when the Attorney General's estimates come—if I am allowed to do so, and if not, certainly in the Budget Debate—I shall read all of these transcripts to show you what is happening in our courts.

But today, very briefly, I wish to comment about one thing which can be handled without the use of these transcripts, and this is our legal aid system. This is upsetting me mightily because two very, very bad things have happened with legal aid in the last very few weeks in this province. I am going to tell you about two cases because they have upset me a great deal.

I have here the Law Society of Upper Canada, Ontario Legal Aid Plan Annual Report 1968, and it makes great reading. Like everything else associated with this government, if you read it, it sounds great. It is only when you go and see how it works, that it does not work so well. On page 6, I quote:

Ontario has now taken a giant stride to ensure that no one shall be denied the services or advice of a lawyer because of lack of money. It is in consequence of the vision of both the government of this province and the Law Society of Upper Canada.

It sounds lovely. On page 11 I quote again:

The new plan ensures that no Ontario resident shall be denied his legal rights because he cannot afford a counsel.

Let me read that again.

The new plan ensures that no Ontario resident shall be denied his legal rights because he cannot afford a counsel.

That is what they say but that is not what they do. I want to tell you about an incredible case, in fact, I am going to tell you about two incredible cases.

The first one was that of a Mrs. Rose Szego. This is a woman who is a graduate of Auschwitz. She spent the war years in concentration camps. She was the only one of her family to survive and she returned to Hungary where she remarried. She and her husband fled from Hungary during the 1956 revolution and emigrated to Canada. They came with nothing; no money, just with the clothing on their backs. They went to work immediately and they worked steadily, did not miss a day.

Her husband became crippled by an accident. The Compensation Act would have covered him, but he worked for one of those terrible firms, a small steel company here in this city—which would like to keep its WCB rate low. They said, "Do not report it." But he went ahead and reported it and he was off work for some four weeks with a bad back. When he came back, this was a man of 66 at this time, they said, "We told you not to report it. From now on you do not work inside any more; you work outside with a wheelbarrow." Well, he lasted one day and could not do it. He was old and he was weak and he came in and said, "Please, can I have my old job back?" and they said, "No, you can have that job out there." So he quit and he could not get another job; he is 66. So they had to depend on her salary and she went to work as a fur worker and she worked every day.

I am glad the Attorney General is here to hear this matter because it is a very serious matter, and it involves his department. She worked every day and then she gradually developed an allergy to fur. She had five different doctors who gave her certificates proving she had this allergy to fur. As a result of this allergy to fur she developed asthma. This asthma completely crippled her and it will never be cured.

The doctors, leading experts in this city, said there was no hope of curing the asthma; whether or not she stayed away from the fur had become immaterial. As a result of being in contact with this fur, she now had an incurable condition which would prevent her from ever working again. She applied for compensation some two years ago and was turned down. At that time, they were turning down a lot of cases they should not have been turning down. The situation has improved a little since then.

She then appealed. You are allowed several levels of appeal. You can appeal to the review committee which really is just a man who sits at a desk and looks the papers over. He does not see you but there are two levels of appeal where you could actually appear. One is the appeal tribunal, where you can come and say your piece and be heard by three men who may or may not reverse the ruling of the lower board. If you fail there you can go higher to the workmen's compensation board itself.

This woman is an immigrant. She spoke poor English. She had no money. She had been out of work now for a good year. She appealed to the legal aid plan for legal aid to appear in front of this appeal tribunal. They turned her down. She then appealed to Andrew Lawson, who is the head of legal aid, and said, "How can I go there as I cannot speak English, I cannot manage? Please can I have legal aid?" Andrew Lawson sent her a nice letter dated February 26 of this year and I will quote him exactly:

I have carefully reviewed your application and I have decided yes, you are quite right, you should have legal aid. In my view this case merits the appeal procedures requested and should be appealed to the appeal tribunal, and if necessary to the workmen's compensation board itself. I therefore reverse the decision of the York county area committee and give you legal aid.

She went with her legal aid lawyer to the tribunal hearing as suggested by Andrew Lawson, and he gave her arguments, he presented all this medical evidence proving quite clearly that she should have been granted her compensation, and that this asthma she developed was from being in contact with the furs where she worked. They turned her down.

I am not suggesting that the lawyer did not do his very best; it is very difficult to win cases in front of the appeal tribunal. The appeal tribunal has very little leeway, I believe. Once you get up to the highest level, the compensation board itself, they appear to have much more leeway. They are very loathe to have this type of speech made in the House and so we find we do very much better at a higher level.

So she was turned down there, as most people are, and this should not cause great surprise. She then, as Andrew Lawson had suggested, appealed to the workmen's compensation board itself to have her case heard, and the York county legal aid then proceeded to refuse her legal aid. So she thought, "Mr. Lawson himself said I should appeal to the workmen's compensation board, so obviously they do not know; I will write to Mr. Lawson and appeal this decision." Mr. Lawson answered her. I have his letter here, and it is dated June 25, 1968. I will read it in full because Mr. Lawson changed his views somewhat:

Dear Mrs. Szego:

The area director forwarded to me your appeal dated June 13, 1968, from the decision of the York county area committee. This committee refused to grant you a legal aid certificate to appeal to the workmen's compensation board.

This letter is to inform you that I have now thoroughly reviewed your application. It is my opinion, with respect, that a further appeal to the workmen's compensation board would not be successful. I am unable to find that the area committee erred in coming to the decision which they made.

I therefore refuse to reverse the decision of the York county area committee; a copy of form 18 setting out my decision is enclosed.

Very truly yours,

Andrew Lawson

Enclosed is a printed form saying, "Notice is hereby given your appeal has been reduced." Too bad about you.

Fortunately, Mrs. Szego had heard there is a political party in Ontario that is interested in this type of injustice, and she approached the New Democratic Party and they assigned me the job of representing her at this hearing. Frankly, having read the evidence, it was so obvious that her case was just, it was so obvious that she should never have been rejected in the first place, I thought it quite incomprehensible. First of all the compensation board had turned her down. Secondly the review committee had turned her down. Thirdly the appeal tribunal had turned her down, but most of all, how could the legal aid committee refuse legal aid to someone when it had five sworn affidavits presented to it proving that her case is clearcut and just?

I went with Mrs. Szego to the hearing and the hearing took all of seven minutes. I came in, and I believe Mr. Legge was the chairman, and I said: "Mr. Legge, I do not know what we are doing here. This woman has asthma as a result of having been in contact with fur. She has tests here that were taken by an allergist to prove this; she has five different top doctors in this city to back it up; but somehow she was refused compensation. Here are the certificates," and I handed them across to him.

Mr. Legge looked at them and he turned across to, I believe, Mr. Johnson, who was sitting beside him, and showed them to him, and they both turned to me and said, "Very strange. We have no questions to ask Mrs. Szego. Mrs. Szego, thank you for coming down. You are the type of person we want coming to this country; you will hear from us very shortly." Two days later she got a letter. Of course she got her compensation, and she got her two years' back pay, and everybody, as far as the Szego family was concerned, was quite happy.

But what worries me about this is not the compensation foul-up—we will come to that under the compensation board—what worries me is the foul-up in the legal aid plan. How could they refuse legal aid to a person like this where the case is so clearcut? If they are refusing clearcut cases like this, how many other mistakes are they making where the area is not so clear, where the matter is a little blurred? How many people are not smart enough to come to the NDP? How many people are not lucky enough to get someone to go down for them and appeal for them and win the case? In other words, how many people are going to jail or not getting their compensation because the legal aid is run ineptly?

This was not an isolated case. But before I go on to the second case, the thing that that worries me about this case is that Mr. Lawson, in his letter to Mrs. Szego, said in his opinion this case could not be won with the aid of a legal aid lawyer, and what worries me is maybe he is right; that is the second disturbing thing.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the only case. I guess the Attorney General is not as interested as I thought, he has left the House. This is not the only case of foul up in legal aid. Within a matter of weeks another case came to my attention where again the facts were clear, where again there was no question of injustice, and where again the legal aid had turned this man down. This case came to me by accident, Mr. Speaker, and it is, I think, the most incredible case I have ever had come to my attention—incredible for a number of reasons. It has been mentioned in this House already; I have discussed it with the Attorney General; I have had questions across the floor to him; and he has shown very little interest, I am sorry to say, in this case.

The name of the man is Douglas James Woods, and just to refresh your memory, Douglas Woods is that poor man who was up in Port Severn when two provincial police officers decided to have a little lark and see if they could persuade Mr. Woods to break into a marina. Because there has been some question as to the facts and some blurring of the facts here in this House—particularly by the Attorney General, who saw that there was no reason to take action against these officers other than to reprimand them—I have brought the facts here. I have the entire transcript here of the case and I shall not take your time by reading the entire transcript. However, I shall read the facts, the memorandum of the facts and law which was submitted to the court of appeal, which took all of ten minutes to decide this case was a disgrace and throw it out.

I am going to read you the memorandum of fact and law, and I have the actual transcript here to read the quotes if there is any doubt in anyone's mind that these are the facts:

On the 25th day of March, 1968, at or about 11.30 p.m., provincial constables Crozier and Groves, whose usual responsibilities were criminal investigation for the Bala detachment, were returning from taking a prisoner to Guelph. They were in plain clothes and were driving an unmarked black police car. They were not on duty and were not required to be making any enquiries or investigations in the Port Severn area and their superiors had no idea what they were doing:

This is from the evidence of police constable Crozier, page 106, lines 10 to 34, and page 109, lines 10 to 20.

Next, constables Crozier and Groves decided on their own initiative to check into information they had received about possible liquor offences in Port Severn, and while having something to drink at the Riverside Hotel they made enquiries of the bar tender of that establishment. These officers were not operating in their own jurisdiction and the Ontario Provincial Police for the Midland district had not requested such investigation.

Upon leaving the hotel, the officers, who had never before seen the defendant and had no reason to approach him otherwise, did approach the defendant, who was standing beside a car talking to an occupant thereof.

Let me just digress, Mr. Speaker. This was not the evidence of the accused; this is the evidence of the police constable, and if we accept it on its face—and let me say there is some doubt about some of it—it is an indictment in itself.

Twenty-four-year-old Constable Crozier, an officer of three years' experience, who had been previously used an agent provocateur, liquor investigation, represented to the appellant that he, Crozier, had been released from Kingston about six months before, and that he and his friends were from Toronto. And in carrying on conversation, the officers were using prison vernacular and acted like big-time gangsters or toughs.

The appellant had previous convictions, which occurred in Midland in 1965 for breaking and entering and theft, for which he received two months, and a further conviction in Midland, in July, 1966, of theft over $50 and taking an automobile without consent, for which he received three months on each charge consecutive. The police evidence is that they first asked the appellant about the sale of liquor to under-aged persons at local outlets, and asked the appellant whether he knew where they could buy stolen outboard motors.

A preference was expressed for a Mercury-type motor having 50 horsepower, for which they would pay approximately $250. They indirectly threatened the appellant that if he was just taking them on a wild goose chase, he might get hurt. An indirect threat was made. The appellant was told that he might be roughed up if he had no stolen motors, and I am quoting from police constable Crozier, page 107, lines 9 to 25, page 113, lines 18 to 34, and page 125, lines 18 to 23. This is the police constable's evidence.

The defendant's evidence was similar, but goes further. I shall not go into detail of his evidence because I am prepared to rely on the police constable's evidence alone. In any case, just briefly, some of the rest of the facts are: The two police constables went with Douglas Woods in the car—which he supposed was a stolen automobile but which was actually a police car—to the marina where Douglas Woods worked. They then waited in the car while Woods proceeded to break in and carried out a motor. Actually, he said they helped him carry it out; they say he carried it himself. Then as he carried it out, they said: "You are under arrest. We are police officers. For stealing a motor." Well, that is a pretty strange way of running the police force in this province, Mr. Speaker, but there was worse to come.

The police constables then laid charges. Douglas Woods was put in jail, appeared in court, and was found guilty by the learned magistrate, who in his comment said—and I shall quote him, page 129, lines 10 to 22: The learned magistrate stated that he believed constable Crozier because of previous years of knowledge of this officer.

I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, thank goodness, but it appears to me that when one goes to a court, the magistrate is supposed to make the decision on the facts, which he hears in front of him, and not on what he has learned from previous acquaintances or previous friendship with one of the accusers. And that is what the magistrate did in this case. In any case, the fact remains, he said you are guilty and off to jail with you. And away they took Douglas Woods; no bail.

An officer of the court came to me with this case, and he said, "This is a terrible case. Please do not use my name, but see what you can do." I ordered a transcript, but I really did not believe it. I wrote an open letter to the Attorney General saying, "What are you going to do about it?" And he informed me that the case was under appeal, which I did not know. Douglas Woods then approached the legal aid committee and asked for legal aid. Incredibly, they refused him legal aid for an appeal. Once again I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is something wrong with the legal aid system when a man who has been railroaded into jail is not allowed an appeal, and is not allowed the funds or legal aid which we are so proud of in this province, to have that appeal.

I have here a legal aid form refusal from the Law Society of Upper Canada, as dated November 5, 1968. He had applied for legal aid on May 24. He has been sitting in jail all that time. And that is why there had been no appeal. He had been waiting for legal aid. And this is what they said:

This is to advise you that your application for legal aid dated the 21st of May, 1968, has been refused, by reason of the area committee of Muskoka did not approve your application, on the following grounds: The area committee has carefully considered the application for legal aid, notice of appeal, transcript of evidence, opinion of applicant's counsel, and opinion of counsel to area committee, and the area committee is of the opinion that legal aid should not be granted.

That was the reason. We are refusing legal aid, because we think legal aid should not be granted. What kind of a reason is that? What is the matter with that department? That is the reason they gave.

Well, Douglas Woods' family knew he had been railroaded, and they knew he should not be in jail. They knew he was there improverly; they knew he should be out on bail. They did not know what to do. So they appealed to Andrew Lawson. They wrote to the top man. His mother said, "This must be a mistake; can we get legal aid for Douglas?"

I wrote Mr. Lawson also. I wrote on November 18, 1968, and he replied very courteously to me:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

Re Douglas Woods, thank you for your letter of November 13. I just received a notice of Douglas Woods' appeal against the decision of the Muskoka district area committee, and as soon as I have reviewed all relevant material, I shall advise you and Mr. Woods of my decision.

November 25 I received a letter from Mr. Andrew Lawson, provincial director, Ontario legal aid plan. It is a very lengthy letter, and I shall not take the time of the House to read it all, but it finished off:

With respect, I am of the opinion that there is not sufficient evidence to justify an appeal to the court of appeal under legal aid. I, therefore, refuse to reverse the decision of the Muskoka area committee. A copy of form 18 setting out my decision is enclosed.

Very truly yours,

Andrew Lawson.

Too bad about you, Douglas Woods. You can stay in jail, if you have no money to appeal, too bad.

Again I say to you, this is the justice and the injustice of this province, and of The Attorney General's Department and of the legal aid plan. Again, fortunately, the people up north have wakened up. They have not as yet in eastern Ontario. They are coming. They have not as yet in western Ontario, but they are coming. But up in northern Ontario, they have wakened up, and they know the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, once again I present to you on an apolitical basis, as I always do, I am sure you agree with me, problems in the field of the legal aid, and it is a shame to find the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski), coming in for a few moments, and being completely unwilling, not only to learn—we don't expect that of him—but at least to listen. But in any case, Mr. Speaker, what I want to say to you, and I am sure you will agree with this, is that in a clearcut case like this, where a man has been railroaded to jail—and he was railroaded—there is no question to me from the evidence. He was conned and threatened into committing a crime, then arrested by the men who conned him into it. Then he was sentenced by a judge who knew one of the accusers and admitted in court that his judgment was partially based on his previous knowledge. Then the legal aid people come along and say: "No, you cannot have legal aid."

So if it had not been that the family were aware that there is one party in this province that is willing to fight for the people, that man would have sat in jail more months. He sat there for six whole months while the legal aid plan thought about whether they should give him legal aid. They finally, after all these months, decided: "No, we will not give you legal aid; too bad for you; too bad about you."

So, fortunately, he came to the NDP, he got to an NDP lawyer, a very fine man by the name of Eastman. Mr. Eastman went down to court and the court of appeal heard the whole matter. I sent my secretary to the court and took their judgment down in shorthand and she typed it out for me. They took all of ten minutes to throw this case out. Not only did they say, he should not have another trial, they said that the conviction was wrong. They said release this man, let him out of jail and do not give him another trial.

This is injustice. It was obvious to the court of appeal. So obvious, that even the Attorney General's representative who was there, did not argue against it. If it was so obvious, why was it not obvious to the legal aid?

I will tell you why: Because the men down there do not know their job. If they cannot see an obvious case like this and an obvious case like Rose Szego's, there is something very, very wrong.

How many marginal cases are there that we do not hear of? Where someone is sentenced unjustly, has no money for an appeal, has no family willing to scurry around outside and get in touch with us? How many of those cases are being refused by the legal aid department and who are rotting in jail because of the incompetence of this plan or of the people running this plan?

Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed in the Attorney General. I brought these facts to his attention in both cases. I asked him two things which I thought were very reasonable. I said: "Will you first of all reimburse Douglas Woods for these six months improperly spent in jail?" The answer was a flat "No".

I would have expected better from the Attorney General. I would expect that kind of answer from some of the other Ministers, but I would expect better from the Attorney General. He has a reputation as a kind man and I cannot understand his comments in this case. I hope he will elucidate further, on a proper occasion, why he will not give help to a man who has unjustly spent all these months in jail.

Mrs. M. Renwick: He was criticizing the establishment.

Mr. Shulman: The other thing I asked the Attorney General is of more concern than Douglas Woods. Douglas Woods is a very tragic case but it is only one case. What disturbs me is if the Attorney General does not intervene in the legal aid plan at this time, these mistakes will continue to be made. The legal aid plan must be instructed to either hire more competent lawyers so that you can tell which cases have a chance on appeal, or, if you do not wish to hire more competent lawyers, or if they are not available among the Tory party, lean over backwards if there is any question that a case can be won.

Certainly, there are obvious cases which cannot be won and which should not be given an appeal, but here are two clear-cut obvious injustices which they turned down. How many others are there? We do not know yet, but we are trying to find out.

The Attorney General must intervene to do something, otherwise there are going to be people in jail because of his lack of action.

I have only had a brief time to give to The Department of Health and to the legal aid plan. I wish to spend a few days discussing the courts but it is not the proper time now, so I will pass over that. But before I give up my department—I do not know whether the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs will be pleased or disappointed, but I am sorry to say that I am leaving him. My responsibilities for his department have been removed from me and I thought, before I said goodbye to him, I should make one or two brief comments about his department. I am sure he will be pleased to have me give him a few compliments as, of course, I intend to do.

I found it of great interest, when I took my poll of the departments to find out which was run most inefficiently—and which, you may recall, the Minister of Health won so overwhelmingly — that The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs did not get one vote. In other words, everyone thought it was run quite efficiently in comparison to the other departments.

Actually they are right. It is run very efficiently and it is the most efficiently run department in the whole province and in the whole government. I am delighted to give this compliment to the Minister. There is no question whatsoever that I have never seen such efficiency in any of the other departments. Of course, the reason it is run so efficiently, Mr. Speaker, is because it is run by the insurance companies, and they are very, very efficient companies. I have to give them a great deal of credit. They have many years of experience in managing large sums of money and they have efficiency down to a "T". I must compliment the Minister on using their help in his department.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that last year I made some mild criticism of the department in its lack of management of health insurance and I went into great detail about two cases at that time.

One of them is a Mr. Kaczinsky and I was going to make some brief comments about that case today but unfortunately the Minister is a little slow in answering his mail and our correspondence in that case is still going on. So I will save my comments in that case, perhaps until the estimates. Perhaps, by that time, the Minister will have had a chance to answer the letter which I sent to him some time ago, requesting information on that case, so I will hold that back.

That, you will recall, is the case of where a man developed a "lilebet" of gas in his tummy and, as a result, lost his health insurance plan. He still, as yet, has not been able to collect the money owing to him by that terrible company, the Allstate Insurance Company. I am still trying to find out from the Minister, what is being done about that case. I believe the wheels are turning reasonably rapidly for that department and I trust that by-and-by, he will answer my letter and we will carry on with that case.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have a half a dozen other cases in the field of health insurance which you will find hard to believe. They are just as bad as the Kaczinsky case. I intended to give those today, or perhaps tonight, but I will not bother you with those now. They are quite lengthy and we only have half an hour left, so I think perhaps now will go into another field entirely.

It is in this same department which is equally well run by the insurance companies.

I think you will find this even more frustrating and annoying than the Kaczinsky case and the matter of health insurance.

The department is responsible for used cars under The Used Car Dealers Act. It says: Used Car Dealers Act, 1964, statutes of Ontario, Ontario regulations 365, 1967, and it reads very nicely. The man who drew this up is a very efficient man and knew his business. I have no criticism of that Act whatsoever. There is only one thing wrong, Mr. Speaker, the department for some reason does not follow its own Act.

I am going to tell you about one case that proves this. It is quite an incredible case.

In the regulations of the Act, which I have here in front of me, all used car dealers are requested to put up a bond. The purpose of that bond is, if some fraud occurs in relation to the public, the public will have some way of getting their money back by going to the government. The government sets up this bond and holds the bond themselves. The wording of the Act is very clear. Let me read it to you so there will be no doubt in anyone's mind where the responsibility lies. I am quoting from the regulation, section 12, subsection (b), first of all—section 12, subsection 1:

Any bond mentioned in section 4 (Section 4 is the section which sets up the bond) is forfeit and the amount thereof become due and owing by the person bound thereby. The debt to the Crown in right of Ontario, where judgment is based on a finding of fraud, has been given against a registered used car dealer, including any member of a partnership or salesman in respect of whose conduct the bond is conditioned.

I will read down a little further: Section 14—what section 12 says is if there is a fraud, the bond is forfeit to the province of Ontario.

Now section 14 says:

Where the Crown in right of Ontario becomes a creditor of a person in respect of a debt to the Crown arising from the provisions of section 12, the Registrar may take such proceedings as he sees fit under The Bankruptcy Act, The Judicature Act, The Corporations Act, or The Winding-up Act for the appointment of an interim receiver, custodian, trustee or receiver or liquidator, as the case may be, the Treasurer of Ontario may assign any bond forfeited under section 12 and transfer the collateral security, if any, and pay over any money recovered under the bond.

What this means, Mr. Speaker, is that if there is a fraud the bond becomes defaulted to the province of Ontario, and it then becomes the duty of the Treasurer to pass this bond over to the persons against whom the fraud had been committed.

I will now tell you an incredible story which shows rather well who runs this particular department. I do not have the date, Mr. Speaker, but some three years ago one Charlie Nairn wanted to sell his car and he went to Oakclair Motors—it was approximately three years ago—he went to Oakclair Motors and the registered—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): What was the name of the file?

Mr. Shulman: The name of the file, your file?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The matter—was it Nairn?

Mr. Shulman: Nairn—Charlie Nairn—N-A-I-R-N. Do you want the name of your file, I think I have that? Strangely enough there is no file number on your correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What is the company's name?

Mr. Shulman: The company's name is Oakclair Motors—O-A-K-C-L-A-I-R. Charlie Nairn went to Oakclair Motors and the registered salesman there said, "Sure we will sell your car for you. We do not have a buyer at the moment, but you leave it here with us and we will sell it for you and we will give you the proceeds less a certain percentage which is our commission."

Charlie Nairn got a receipt, and off he went and he was quite happy they were selling his car for him. Some time went by and the car did not get sold, at least he did not hear anything more about it, so back Charlie went to Oakclair Motors. They said, "We are awfully sorry but the salesman you left the car with stole your car." Charlie said, "What do you mean he stole my car?" and the salesman said, "He went off somewhere with the car and we have not seen him since. Too bad. We are not going to do anything about it."

Charlie was a little upset, because this seemed a strange way for a used car dealer to act. He went to see a lawyer and a most incredible series of correspondence then developed between the lawyer and The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs—which finally ended up in the courts and which has gone on for some three years. The final position of the department has been, "We are not going to pay because the insurance company tells us not to," and I am going to read this into the record. If there is an explanation, and God knows how there could be, I would like to hear it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: How long has this case been going on?

Mr. Shulman: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Three years?

Mr. Shulman: The correspondence extends from May 18, 1966. The first letter is addressed to the Attorney General's office because at that time apparently the Attorney General was responsible for the used car dealers. It says:

Attention Mr. W. K. McKinnon.

Dear Sirs:

Re: Mr. Charlie Nairn and Oakclair Motors.

We act on behalf of Charlie Nairn in connection with the above matter and as you are aware we have commenced an action against the above name for the return of our client's vehicle and for any damages caused to it by the said defendants.

We are writing to you to request that you withhold releasing the bond that you have on file for the said company until such time as our action is disposed of by the court. We would appreciate your advising us as to our request and hope to hear from you at your earliest possible convenience.

Yours very truly,

Sol Merrick.

He was the lawyer in the case.

The purpose of this letter was of course that they had to get their judgment of fraud before they could get the money out of the bond. They wanted to make sure that the used car dealer section did not release the money prematurely before poor Charlie Nairn won his case in court.

I have a letter back from The Department of the Attorney General signed by Mr. W. K. McKinnon, regional inspector, Used Car

Dealers Act, and this is dated June 11, 1966, and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

Re: Oakclair Motors.

In reply to your letter of May 18, 1966, I am writing to advise you that in accordance with section 12 of subsection 3—which I quoted earlier—

—of the Ontario regulation, March, 1965, the bond for Oakclair Motors Limited shall remain on deposit with our department until April 1, 1968.

Yours very truly,

W. K. McKinnon.

The next letter is dated November 18, 1966, and this goes to Mr. R. G. MacCormac, who I believe is the man who is still responsible—Mr. R. G. MacCormac, registrar, Used Car Dealers Act—and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

Re: Nairn and Oakclair Motors.

You will recall our recent telephone conversation in connection with the above matter.

We now enclose herewith the writer's affidavit in duplicate, setting out the facts in connection with this matter.

I would be grateful if you could arrange for an appointment for me to discuss the matter with the director and yourself at the earliest possible convenience. I shall look forward to hearing from you.

Yours very truly,

Sol Merrick.

We have a letter back from Mr. MacCormac, registrar of The Used Car Dealers Act, quite promptly; it is dated November 22, 1966, and it reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Merrick:

Re: The Used Car Dealers Act.

Further to our telephone conversation of Monday, November 21, I am enclosing herewith a photo copy of the recent affidavit filed with this department by Jack Abrams, together with a copy of the consolidated edition of The Used Car Dealers Act. You can determine from clause 3 of the affidavit that Jack Abrams has agreed to discharge the liabilities indicated in the list of creditors within a period of three years, and not later than October 15, 1969. Clause 4 of the affidavit refers specifically to the claim of your client Charlie Nairn.

The terminal part of this clause indicates that the account deemed to be owed by Abrams can be determined either by the courts following a civil action, or by the registrar after further investigation.

In other words, they say, "Okay, go to the court; get the court to determine the amount and then we will pay you off by October 15, 1969." To continue the quote:

If the matter is to be resolved by the registrar, then it will have to be considered whether the amount of $2,500 is not excessive, for the statement made by Charlie Nairn and confirmed by the recent affidavit filed by you indicates that Mr. Nairn was willing to accept not less than $1,700 for this vehicle. In addition to this we may have to consider—

I shall not bother to read the rest of this; it is whether he is to get $1,700 or $2,500, which is not too relevant because he got nothing. To continue further down in the letter:

Following the receipt of this information I will determine the amount for which Abrams should be held responsible, and would suggest in the meantime that you proceed to civil action in this matter in order to become more secure, by way of a judgment, provided that this is successfully determined.

Just think of this a moment, Mr. Speaker. He says, "Yes, you are right, we have to decide how much you have to get; yes, we will hold on to the bond; yes, Abrams owns the Oakclair Motors and agrees that he owes the money; but go ahead and get a judgment anyway just to make sure everything is tied down shipshape." Then he goes on in this letter—this is Mr. MacCormac's letter:

In the event that Abrams fails to observe the conditions disclosed in his affidavit, I will reserve the right to suspend his registration, but this will not obtain restitution for your client.

However, if the pressure of his other creditors, together with this added obligation, compel him to make a voluntary assignment in bankruptcy, then we shall proceed to forfeit the $5,000 bond under which Oakclair Motors were previously conditioned, and which we are still holding, and following the normal period disclosed in subsection (c), of section 12 of Ontario Regulation 3(65) it may then be disbursed in accordance with subsection (c) of section 15:

What that all means, if I may translate it from the department, is: "Do not worry, even if he does not pay up we will grab his bond and we will distribute the money." To go on with this letter:

Unless he makes an assignment in bankruptcy, the only other method by which the bond may become forfeit is in accordance with subsection (b) of section 12 of the regulations. I feel that a judgment based on the finding of fraud would be a little more difficult, but may be considered. If you obtain a civil judgment for the amount of your client's claim, you may, if unable to collect within a reasonable time, request a receiving order under The Bankruptcy Act and thereby effect a forfeiture under the aforementioned subsection (c) of section 12.

I have tried to make the issue as clear as possible for you and trust that you will proceed to act in whatever manner you feel is in the best interests of your client.

Yours very truly,
R. G. MacCormac,
Registrar, Used Car Dealers Act.

After receiving that letter, poor Charlie Nairn, who had now moved to England, was written a letter that said, "Do not worry, we are going to win the darn thing, but the department of the used car dealers says you have to come back because we have to sue this fellow and get a judgment. In order to sue and get a judgment you have to come to Canada, because you have to appear in court to give evidence." Charlie Nairn was so upset about them stealing his car and not giving it back to him, that Charlie Nairn flew back from England to Canada to appear in court to get his judgment. Little did he know the way The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs operates. Little did he know how little this piece of paper on which they had written the letter was worth.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But in effect, we did not exist in May of that year.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister is a little embarrassed and I do not blame him. This is written—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am not embarrassed at all.

Mr. Shulman: This is written on the stationery of R. G. MacCormac, registrar, Used Car Dealers Act, 1964, and it is dated November 22, 1966. Perhaps I am in error, and if I am, I would be glad if the Minister would correct me, but I believe that R. G.

MacCormac is still in that department, which is now under the Minister. Surely if you have changed the name at the top of the stationery, you are not going to try to step away from your responsibilities as laid out by R. G. MacCormac then and now, registrar of the Used Car Dealers Act.

If this is the excuse that is given by the Minister and this is what he wishes to say, I shall stop right now because nothing more can be said, but I do not think he wants to say that. No, the Minister does not want to say that. All right, so we will go on.

It existed, they can call it what they want, it existed, it was the same staff, the only difference is they changed the man that the insurance companies put up at the top, that is the only difference since then. Well, to continue: January 16, 1968, a letter now from Mr. Matlow, who is a partner of Mr. Merrick, who had come into the case.

To Mr. R. G. MacCormac,
Registrar, Used Car Dealers Act.

Dear Sir:

Re: Nairn vs. Briggs, Oakclair et al.

Further to our recent correspondence, with respect to the above captioned action, we wish to advise that this action is still pending and that we would be grateful if you would not release any bond under which Oakclair Motors Limited is presently conditioned.

What was happening, they had gone into the courts but the courts are a little slow and they were having trouble getting the case heard and there was a little stalling from the other side so they wrote to make sure somebody in the meantime did not run off with the bond.

So, Mr. R. M. Mason—I wonder if that man still works for this department?—Mr. R. M. Mason, the chief inspector of The Used Car Dealers Act, wrote back, and this one is on the stationery of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, registration and examination branch, Used Car Dealers Act, 1964. It is dated January 18, 1968. Attention Mr. B. G. Matlow, B.C., LL.D., re: Used Car Dealers Act, 1965, Nairn vs. Briggs, et al.

Dear Sirs:

In reply to your letter dated January 16, 1968, we wish to advise you that the bond under which Oakclair Motors Limited was conditioned is still in force until July 27, 1968.

In order to have a claim against this bond, a judgment must be obtained against Oakclair Limited and a claim submitted to this office prior to that date.

Yours very truly,

R. M. Mason,
Chief Inspector.

To translate that for you, Mr. Speaker, what this means is you better hurry up because we can only hold the bond till July 27 and then the whole thing is out the window. So, the lawyer receiving this thing said, "Well, we had better hurry up, and get this judgment by July 27, it should be worth the paper it is written on and I guess then The Department of Commercial and Financial Affairs will pay us off out of the bond as long as we get the judgment."

So, they hurried Charlie Nairn back from England and they rushed the case through and they did get their judgment by July 27; in fact they got their judgment on June 14, 1968. Little did they know it was not going to help them. They could have had their judgment ten years before, because unfortunately somewhere along the line the insurance company stepped in and said, "Do not pay him that bond." But I will come to that by and by, Mr. Speaker.

We come to the judgment, and sure enough Charlie Nairn came back from England, the case was heard, the case was defended. It was not a default judgment; they actually defended the case and the good judge, His Honour Judge Ball, rendered his judgment, which I have here, and I had better read that judgment:

Judgment: In the county court of the county of York. His Honour Judge Ball, Friday, 14th day of June, 1968. Between Charlie Nairn, plaintiff, and Oakclair Motors and William Briggs, defendants.

This action coming on for trial on the 6th and 7th days of May, 1968, at the sittings of this court, holden at Toronto for the trial of action without a jury, in the presence of counsel for the plaintiff and the defendant Oakclair Motors Limited. This action having been discontinued against the defendant William Briggs. Upon hearing, read the pleadings, and hearing the evidence adduced and what was alleged by counsel aforesaid, this court was pleased to direct this action to stand over for judgment, and the same coming on this day for judgment:

1. This court doth order and adjudge that the plaintiff will recover from the defendant Oakclair Motors Limited, the sum of $1,704.95.

2. This court doth further order and adjudge that the defendant Oakclair Motors Limited do pay to the plaintiff his cost of this action forthwith after taxation thereof.

Judgment signed this 24th day of June, 1968.

And it is indecipherable, but I presume it is Judge Ball. It says here, "Certified to be a true copy of the original thereof. Well, Charlie Nairn had his judgment, not that it did him any good, actually all it cost him was the court costs.

Well, I have the reasons for the judgment here. Because it is rather important, I shall read the reasons for the judgment. They are not too long.

This is an action relative to the motorcar of the plaintiff which he allegedly left for sale with the defendant. The action was originally started against the former defendant William Briggs, also, but was discontinued against him by notice dated January 16, 1968.

William Briggs was a former employee of the defendant, and it was with him that the plaintiff had most of his dealings relative to his motorcar about which the plaintiff complained. This car was a 1964 Falcon. It was left by the plaintiff at the used car lot of the defendant in Toronto. It was left by the plaintiff after he had talked over the matter with two men who worked at the lot, and he discussed with them the possibility of a sale of his car.

I may explain, Mr. Speaker, the reason I am reading this judgment is to make it very clear it comes exactly under the terms of the Act. To continue:

They drove the car around the block, and agreed to try to sell it. The plaintiff was unable to leave the car at this time, and returned with it a few days later. At that time, he saw the former defendant Briggs who was alone and in charge of the lot. The defendant was told by Briggs that the man to whom he spoke most of the time on the first occasion was not up there. After some discussion, the plaintiff agreed to accept $1,700 for the car, wrote out the original of what was received as exhibit one, and this was signed by the said William Briggs.

This was a memorandum of the transaction which was the subject matter of their discussion, and pursuant to the memorandum the plaintiff was to secure $1,700 for his car. The memorandum is in the handwriting of the plaintiff, with the exception of the signature of William Briggs. The plaintiff telephoned the defendant several times about his car subsequently thereto, to see if the car had been sold. Briggs was not always there, but whoever answered the phone appeared to know about the car.

The plaintiff returned to the defendant's lot on one or two occasions, and at one time found the car parked near the entrance on the street, unwashed and with a number of cigarette butts in evidence. The plaintiff complained about this to someone on the lot and was told that the butts were obviously those of potential customers.

A later call got the reply that the car was hard to sell with Quebec plates. This information was given by someone other than Briggs. It would be easier to sell if the plates were changed. The plaintiff went on a trip to the West Indies between July 21 and August 5, 1965, and before he left he called the lot—to whom he talked, he cannot say—and as a result of the call, he secured and affixed Ontario plates on the car, and left the car and the ownership card relating to the car at the lot of the defendant.

The plaintiff called the lot on his return, and was told that the car was "not in fact sold". After another call, the plaintiff went to the lot about his car, and cannot remember what he was told. However, it distressed him to find the car was missing, as this had not been told to him over the phone, and in two or three days he went to the police.

I can understand his distress, Mr. Speaker.

The defence called as a witness Mr. Garry Campbell, who at the time was the manager and buyer at the defendant's lot and "pretty well ran the place". This witness confirmed that Briggs was employed as a salesman and said that he—Campbell—would have to approve any sale. As a salesman, Briggs was entitled to the use of cars which were for sale, and apparently used them freely until May or June when he took a car, and was away for a week. Thereafter, Briggs was not entitled to a car on weekends; he was considered unreliable by the corporate defendant.

This witness stated that he was aware the plaintiff had come with his car, and wanted to sell it, and then he talked to him a couple of times on the phone. On one occasion the plaintiff had told him he had seen the car parked near Spadina and Bloor Street in Toronto, and says he thinks he told the plaintiff to "get the car out". This witness also said that he told Briggs to get rid of the car on several occasions.

However, this witness admits that he was there when the plaintiff first arrived with the car. He knew the plaintiff wanted to sell it, and he drove around the block in it, and checked it. The next time he saw it, Briggs had the car, and Briggs told him it had been left to sell. The witness admitted he was suspicious, and told Briggs he did not want the car around with Quebec plates. Briggs told him he was planning on the sale of the car to a relative of his. This, the witness said, he did not believe, but despite this he admits he did not tell Briggs to return the car because Briggs was a "good salesman".

When asked if he did not care if Briggs stole the car, he said he did not think Briggs intended to steal in "the true sense of the word". This witness also said that he told the plaintiff to come and get the car, to come and take it away from Briggs, and says this is the only occasion he spoke to the plaintiff, after the plaintiff brought the car there. This is denied by the plaintiff.

In any event, Briggs disappeared with the car keys and licence, and there is no doubt he in some manner got the licence from where it was usually kept by the defendant. The car was not recovered until the summer of 1966 and was found in Detroit, abandoned on a lot in deplorable condition. It had been driven a great deal, apparently hard and long.

There was considerable difficulty experienced in getting the car to Toronto, where it was repaired and eventually sold. The expenses relative to recovery and repair amounted to $654.95, which is broken down here. It cost $654.95 to repair the car and they then sold the car for $650, so the profit was rather small in that transaction. I am satisfied the price was fair. The plaintiff therefore suffered a net loss of $4.95 plus the amount he says he agreed to take for the car, for a total of $1,704.95. Independent evidence which I accept places a fair value on the car at $1,700.

The question to be decided is whether the defendant is responsible for this sum. By way of defence, the defendant pleads that in fact the salesman Briggs had no authority to deal with the plaintiff as he did, and although it is not contested that Briggs took the car, it is suggested that he was on a frolic of his own, for which the defendant is not liable.

With this, I cannot agree, even if the former defendant Briggs had no authority to make the agreement; relative to the sale and purchase of the car, he had apparent authority. He was the only one present when Exhibit One was prepared and signed, and the plaintiff acted reasonably and honestly throughout.

The good judge then quotes from some previous judgment that had been given, which reinforced his opinion, and he goes on:

Also, the car was left with the company as a bailee and the defendant has made no effort to discharge the onus in this respect. There will therefore be judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,704.95 and costs.

In closing, I would like to comment on the evidence of the plaintiff. He gave what I consider a most reliable evidence, and I accepted it throughout without any reservation whatever.

14th day of June, 1968, Judge Ball.

Mr. Speaker, that being the judgment, one would have thought that would be the end of the problem. Unfortunately, this was not so.

I see that we are almost at the hour so I will save the next chapter of the exciting experiences of Charlie Nairn for 8 o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will continue until the House rises at 6 o'clock.

Mr. Shulman: All right, Mr. Speaker, I will continue.

The next letter, Mr. Speaker, is from Mr. P. T. Matlow, who, of course, is the lawyer acting for Charlie Nairn. He wrote immediately after receiving the summons. Naturally he presumed that they would rush over with the money. But he thought in case the department did not know about it, he should let them know what the facts were, and so, being very polite, he immediately wrote to The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs and he wrote a letter to Mr.

Mason. I will read you that letter, Mr. Speaker, so you can be apprised of the contents:

The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs,
Registration Examination Branch,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 2, Ontario.
Attention Mr. R. M. Mason.

Dear Sirs:

Re: Nairn versus Oakclair Motors Limited, I enclose herewith a certified copy of the judgment of His Honour, Judge Ball, dated the 4th day of June, 1968. I also enclose herewith our statement of claim, the reasons for judgment of Judge Ball and our bill of costs. Would you kindly take whatever steps are required to pay the proceeds of this judgment out of the existing bond?

Thank you for your co-operation.

Yours very truly,

P. T. Matlow.

As I mentioned a little earlier today, this particular department is a little slow with its correspondence, Mr. Speaker—not slow in receiving it, just slow in answering it.

Charlie Nairn had come over from England and he was sort of anxious to get his $1,700 to go back again. He hung around for a while but nothing was forthcoming; no money, no reply, and he waited a week and nothing had occurred. Charlie became a little upset and he went down to the firm of lawyers and said, "I would like to get that money out of those guys. Would you mind writing the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs again and see if something cannot be done to get my money?" Mr. Matlow likes writing letters so he said, "Sure, I will write it."

I have the next letter which he wrote, Mr. Speaker, but I see we are on the hour of 6. Would you like me to begin this letter? This is dated June 20, 1968, Mr. Speaker. It is from Mr. P. T. Matlow and it reads as follows:

Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs,
Registration and Examination Branch,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 2, Ontario.
Attention: Mr. R. M. Mason.

Dear Sirs:

Re: Nairn versus Oakclair Motors Limited, the plaintiff in this action recovered a judgment against Oakclair Motors Limited on June 19, 1968, in the sum of $1,704.95. The formal judgment will be signed and entered within a few days and will be forwarded to you so that a claim may be made against the bond under which Oakclair Motors Limited was conditioned.

Yours very truly,

P. T. Matlow.

Mr. Speaker, it being 6 of the hour, may I move the adjournment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please continue until the House rises.

It now being 6 of the clock, I do now leave the chair and we will resume at 8 p.m.

I would point out to the hon. member that the debates are not adjourned on these occasions and that the hon. member having the floor continues until Mr. Speaker rises, then resumes when the House resumes at 8 o'clock, as it will tonight.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

THRONE DEBATE

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, when I last had the pleasure of speaking to you, I was telling the adventures of Charlie Nairn and his difficulties with The Department of Commercial and Financial Affairs. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, we had come to the point where Charlie Nairn had finally got the judgment the department had asked him to get. Earlier in this comedy they had told him not to worry, they were holding on to the $5,000 bond and he was going to get his money, but just to nail the thing down tight they suggested he get a judgment.

So he went out to get the judgment. He got his judgment in June; before the deadline. He sent a copy of the judgment to The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs; and to his surprise, no money came back. He sent another couple of letters and still no money.

Then finally the blow fell. On July 3, 1968, The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, over the signature of one E. A. Moore, registration officer, informed him it was all a mistake and they were not going to pay him after all.

I will read the letter, Mr. Speaker:

Dear Sir:

We acknowledge receipt on July 2nd of your judgment of His Honour Judge Ball dated June 14, 1968, with statement of claim, the reasons for judgment of Judge Ball and the bill of costs.

Please be advised that in our opinion the judgment by Judge Ball does not show Oakclair Motors Limited committed an offence involving fraud or theft, or conspiracy to commit an offence involving fraud or theft under the Criminal Code, and therefore does not meet the requirements to forfeit the surety bond as described in the Ontario regulations 365, forfeiture of bonds, section 12, subsection (1).

Yours very truly,
E. A. Moore.

Well the lawyer for Charlie Nairn went into a bit of shock. Charlie Nairn was back in England at this time, and inasmuch as they had followed the directions of the department throughout he was a little upset, to put it mildly.

He contacted the department by phone, he could not understand this reasoning. Finally they found out why the bond was not being paid to poor Charlie Nairn.

On August 15, 1968, one R. G. MacCormac spilled the beans. I will read the letter to you, Mr. Speaker, because it is really very sad that this government should be run by the insurance companies.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): The member said that before.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): It is worthy of repeating.

Mr. Shulman: The letter to Mr. Matlow is signed by Mr. MacCormac and what it finally says is:

We have received from the Canadian Surety Company a letter signed by Mr. J. D. Marshall, branch claim superintendent for that company, stating that they were unable to conceive the reason for forfeiture.

In other words, they had gone through all the court proceedings, they had done everything they could, but the insurance company that was responsible for the bond said: "I won't pay".

And what did The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs do at that time? They wrung their hands and said there is nothing we can do, we are terribly sorry. We suggest you sue the insurance company.

Of course the Act is worded very clearly. There is no point in suing the insurance company, because the only one that can recover the bond is the government of Ontario, as written in the Act.

So the situation is in the case of Charlie Nairn—I have the rest of the correspondence here. Ultimately the lawyer for Nairn, in desperation, threatened to get a mandamus against the Treasurer of Ontario, because it is the Treasurer who is supposed to pay out the funds. In fact, the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) said, well go ahead and do it.

But really, this is really a very bad situation for the government, when they set up an Act, set up regulations and advise individuals who are defrauded under those regulations what to do, that when the individual follows the instructions of the department right to the letter; goes to a great deal of expense, goes through a large court case; and then when it is all over the department says: "Gee, we are awfully sorry, but we cannot do what we said we were going to do because the insurance company says they don't like it."

Mr. Speaker, this is the problem in this department. We went through this in the Kascinsky case, where it was a clear case of fraud by the Allstate company; and to this moment the Minister has not been able to persuade Allstate they should pay that claim. And furthermore it has not been willing to hold a hearing, a public hearing, to determine: (a) was Kascinsky defrauded by Allstate; and (b) should Allstate be allowed to continue to sell insurance in this province?

Here we have another area in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs where this same problem has risen again, where it is "the public be damned" because the insurance companies are the ones that rule the roost.

Now this cannot be allowed to continue. This particular Minister is an intelligent man, I think he wants to improve the situation. Through you, sir, to him, I am saying he must step into these cases, he must see the Charlie Nairns and the Zeslaw Kascinskys are paid their just claims; because if he does not, first of all he is throwing disrepute on the legal system in this province and on the laws of this province. And ultimately, in fact, he is hurting the insurance companies, because as people in this province learn that bonds and insurance are not worth any more than the piece of paper they are written on, they are going to cease to buy insurance and they are going to cease to pay attention to bonds, because they do not mean anything.

Mr. Speaker, I know you are looking forward to hearing all the case which I was going to relate to you in the field of health insurance.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The member must be sick or something.

Mr. Shulman: I brought them all along but I greatly regret, I know how badly you are going to feel about this sir, and I apologize to you in advance, but my voice has weakened so much that I am going to have to save these cases for a future date. I give you my personal apology, I know how disappointed you are; and I thank you very much for your attention.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I too have a few brief remarks. I would hope that I might condense them perhaps a little more than the previous speaker.

The substance of the material changes somewhat, sir. I would first of all like to add by best wishes and congratulations to those already conveyed to the new Lieutenant-Governor. I also wish to extend similar greetings to the member for London South (Mr. White) on his appointment as Ontario's first Minister of Revenue. The hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is well qualified for this position.

I want to speak this evening about the Malton airport, a subject that has had some discussion, and the expansion plan that is presently envisaged; and also to make a few remarks about transportation in Peel South and then briefly about regional government.

Interjections by many hon. members.

Mr. Kennedy: The Malton airport plan presents a problem to the residents of Peel South, and other areas in proximity to Malton, that is causing great concern and has been widely publicized. Along with other elected people at municipal, provincial and federal levels, I have been deluged with mail—it might in fact have exceeded some of the mail that the hon. speaker before me claims he gets—in opposition to this scheme.

It is acknowledged that international airports and all forms of air transportation are the responsibility of the federal government. However, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has said, there are at least five provincial departments that would be involved. Namely, Municipal Affairs, Health, Highways, Transport, and Energy and Resources Management. So I think, Mr. Speaker, this subject can be quite properly discussed in this forum.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I have not heard any discussion from that side of the House, the Opposition, in respect of this problem. There have been some brief comments from some of the members, but perhaps we could hear what the official position of the Opposition is on this matter.

An hon. member: What is the official position of the government?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Tell us about the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett).

Mr. Kennedy: I will tell you one matter that involves Energy and Resources Management, and that is services that are provided to the airport; and not only provided to it but history will show, the record will show, that services in fact are contained within the present boundaries of the airport, such as a water-line and so on, and this involves Energy and Resources Management. So that is one point that comes under their jurisdiction.

Regardless of this expansion plan, the impact on people and on property in the vicinity of the airport is of such importance and interest that I feel all levels of government should have the opportunity to participate in discussions. In fact, this is being done, I understand, and I support it 100 per cent, because on this issue it goes beyond just the local region, it is something that involves everyone in the province and I feel everyone should be knowledgeable about it. We should reason together on this one.

There appears to be sufficient evidence that if the proposed massive expansion is carried through, it would adversely change a very large part of the Mississauga we know today. Mr. Speaker, we do not want this to happen. There have been numerous studies and one of these states that expansion is not compatible with the character and development of the surrounding area, and I think it must be agreed that this is so.

At the present time, there are some 500 flights per day at Malton according to an article in the Toronto Telegram of November 23, and the traffic in this current year is 4.6 million people, more than twice the estimated figure of two million that was originally projected for 1968. Further projections indicate, according to the evidence which has come to my attention, that this will rise to 2,000 flights per day, carrying about 20 million people by the year 1985. This number is equivalent to the entire present population of Canada funneling through this one terminal.

Naturally, and I can understand it, people have told me this presents some problems, and I think The Department of Transport certainly agrees and recognizes this. From correspondence it is evident that the first of these is the noise factor. Some say by The Department of Transport's own estimates the noise generated by this development would make much of Mississauga, and adjacent areas, unsuitable for human habitation. As a matter of fact the word "decibel" is becoming a household word in Mississauga—something that was not in our terminology a few short years ago—and it seems a fact that under proposed flight paths, there will be noise in excess of 100 decibels. This, according to medical opinion, can cause psychological problems, headaches, fatigue and hearing loss.

As an illustration, a jackhammer, with which I think we are all familiar, creates 98 decibels and we are told that the airport expansion will place 160,000 people in the over-100-decibel sound range. I understand that 100 decibels means different values to different people, depending on how it is calculated. I do not propose to go into any technical discussion, but I know a jet plane going over the house at low level makes a lot of noise. I will leave for your consideration what the impact of noise, resulting from all these planes, would mean to a densely populated area.

A second major problem is the handling of traffic in and out of the airport. As I said, projections are for about 20 million people by 1985—that is only 16 or 17 years, Mr. Speaker. I simply cannot conceive this volume of people moving in any semblance of order through one location. But I can visualize congestion and traffic jams, even with an expanded terminal building or buildings. If all these people travelled in equal numbers each day over the course of the year, by my mathematics it would mean some 52,000 passengers per day.

And we all know that passenger travel is not spread out evenly throughout the year. It is difficult to see how terminal and highway facilities would handle the volume of traffic which would be generated by this movement of people. Obviously, huge highway expenditures would be required, or some other method would need to be inaugurated to move them. I wish to come back to this matter of traffic later.

Thirdly, a jet plane is said to emit into the air exhaust fumes equivalent to that given off by 10,000 cars. This is a SANA report and I have also read it elsewhere. However, the Financial Post edition of December 7 headlines that pollution is only as bad as 1,000 cars. There is quite a difference and why the scientists do not get together on this, or whether they are using different terms of reference, I do not know. But there is certainly a wide margin of difference. But this article does go on to conclude, I have it here, that there is hope on the horizon because there is greater efficiency, continually, in that new and better jet engines are developed. But if the 10,000-car figure is right, without doubt, in the future, 2,000 flights a day, it would pass all tolerable limits. So I hope the latest information in this article is right.

As well as these three major factors, there are others of no small significance. Some soundproofing of schools has now been done in Etobicoke, and the Society for Aircraft Noise Abatement says it has cost $624,600 to soundproof only three schools.

All these points, Mr. Speaker, I know are being considered by The Department of Transport, but I wish to bring them out here to lay them before the assembly, that this knowledge might be more widely disseminated.

Another factor is the cost of the airport expansion. Figures of $300 million and $400 million have been mentioned. The value of the current installation there, I am told, is $70 million which is the investment to date. Added to this $300 or $400 million would be provincial commitments for highways and so on. Town officials have estimated this could be as much as another $50 million for highways alone. If the development was such that the housing perhaps had to be cut back or the people relocated, financial involvement would be in excess of $1 billion. I heard the figure of $1.5 billion. Presumably this would be the purchase price of all the affected areas and homes that would come under this adverse influence.

So these are some of the reasons why I feel that the matter should be aired in this assembly. This of course leads to the question, is there not a more economical way to achieve what must come; progress must come. To achieve this objective, what are the alternatives?

Mr. Speaker, the people in the vicinity of Malton, Mississauga and Peel South are extremely concerned. There have been a series of protest meetings, and as I mentioned at the outset, from the opinions, literature, editorial comment in the press, the numerous articles and studies and presentations of these aforementioned meetings, it would appear the quality of life in the affected areas, as we know it today, would be destroyed in this location.

Balanced against these gloomy thoughts, we must recognize that the present airport is an excellent facility, that it is well located and it should be maintained. I must emphasize that no one suggests it should be scaled down, phased out, or otherwise discontinued. The airport has played a major role in the development of the area and its economic importance to the district, beyond the limits of the airport, and to the whole province for that matter cannot be overestimated. The main concern that has come to my attention is the concern that new flight paths, which the people did not understand might develop, are now being projected. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, it is completely inconceivable to me that it is feasible or practicable to carry out an expansion of the magnitude proposed by the department. I don't know how it can be done without having extremely adverse effects as I mentioned.

I mentioned some of these studies and reports, and there has been a great maze of them. It comes out that The Department of Transport used figures, geographic material and topographic material based on 1960 plans and maps. These did not show nearly the residential development that presently exists. There are also the contradictions in the degree of pollution. But regardless of these puzzlements, one thing is clear—that the residents are disturbed by this and do not wish to see this proceed and adversely affect their homes.

The other conclusion that I have come to is that there has been a lamentable lack of long-term planning, or at least communication with the municipality or the government authorities or the people about the long-term plans in mind.

I reflected back, Mr. Speaker, to when I was a student. This reminded me of, and it contrasts with, Tennyson's lines from "Locksley Hall" and I quote:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce,
argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Poet Laureate Tennyson's prophesy, made in the 19th century, is being fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would commend these lines to the DOT. Although this country apparently does not have a prophet with such powers of forecasting, we are a modern society with computers and much sophisticated equipment at our disposal. Surely then, with all these resources, we should not only be able to make a forecast but be able to plan and build accordingly, taking into account future needs such as travel and freight traffic, as well as the social and economic results of such programmes. Even this present plan is only supposed to be good until 1985.

It is my recommendation, Mr. Speaker, that a second airport be started now. Department of Transport officials point out that it takes many years to put a new airport into operation. This being so, it should add urgency to the need to get going and complete studies and start perhaps somewhere else.

Many letters have suggested a suitable site should be selected within, say 40 or 50 miles of Metro; the location should have sufficient land for many years ahead, with a buffer zone around the actual tract to be used. The buffer zone could be something along the line of that land acquired by the National Capital Commission which encompasses Ottawa. This could perhaps be a lease-back arrangement which would make unnecessary large capital outlays. Under such an arrangement, this land could continue in its present use indefinitely, and so would not be made sterile. If agricultural, or bush, no change would be needed. I mentioned earlier, traffic congestion at airport terminals.

On a recent trip to England, we landed at Gatwick Airport, Crawley, where disembarking passengers proceed down a corridor, through customs, and step into a train. Within about 45 minutes, having covered 35 miles, we were in the heart of London. My impression at that time, long before the expansion plans at Malton were known to me, was that high-speed rail was the answer for handling future airport traffic. For example, if a new installation was proceeded with at some point outside of Metro, at whatever location is deemed most suitable, rail transportation would permit a swift and easy flow of traffic and could perhaps provide custom service in transit. Also, rail would, without doubt, be more economical than large highway expenditures, with added costs associated therewith.

We must remember that there is unused rail capacity in Ontario and perhaps this could be utilized.

In New York, I understand from listening at one of these aforementioned protest meetings—very knowledgeable speakers, all the speakers were well informed on the subject. Or at least they impressed me as being so, and they were very thoughtful and constructive in dealing with this problem.

This one chap said in New York—and I think it is in effect now, or partly—that the terminal is downtown, you check in there and then you go out and get on the airplane and away you go. But the point they stressed was: Have the terminal downtown in the busy areas; put the people through customs there into the bus, or whatever the conveyance is, and you go right—as I understand it—right to the plane which is waiting on the tarmac and away you go.

So a terminal out at the location of the planes would be unnecessary. We would not have terminals there as we know them today. This thought seemed to have a lot of merit to me.

Mr. Speaker, there have been all kinds of alternative suggestions. There are many technical considerations. I do not intend to dwell further on these; it is a matter for technical and policy-making people.

Mr. Hellyer has said that the federal government is not pledged to the present plan. Mr. Speaker, I urge this government—and I understand there are studies going on—to reaffirm to federal authorities, as Mississauga has done—and I understand they are going to have an audience tomorrow with the Minister on it—willingness to co-operate with them, offering any assistance that may be deemed helpful.

I sincerely hope that the federal government will not be so unsympathetic and rigid that it will ignore the great concern expressed by the people, that has been so broadly publicized, and that it will take another look at the factors involving people of the vicinity and beyond. It involves us all in factors of compatibility, noise, pollution, public safety, and economics.

Now Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue on a little happier note. I would like to make reference to the GO transit system which passes through Peel South, and inform the House of the progress and, in this case, it is a favourable expansion.

Since its inception in May, 1967, the GO system has handled more than 6 million riders and the present position is as follows:

The average number of weekday trips in the first week of November totalled 16,322 compared to 15,012 for the same week last year.

The number of passengers handled this year since Labour Day has been 844,527, an increase of 102,258 or 14 per cent over the same period last year.

The average number of weekday passengers exiting at the Port Credit station in the first week of November this year was 1,283, an increase of 25 per cent over the same period last year. The number of passengers at the Clarkson station in the first week of November this year was 915, an increase of 40 per cent over the same period last year.

While there are no increases in the stations or parking facilities servicing the outer areas in the last year, GO Transit added 14 more cars to its fleet. Included in this is an additional train which operates just before evening rush hour and so relieves traffic when the main movement of people occurs.

This facility must indeed have relieved highway traffic and so, is beneficial to travelers and taxpayers alike. On occasion, I ride the GO system and passengers have expressed their satisfaction with the service; occasionally there is standing room only, in rush hour.

I still regret that the Lorne Park station was not continued at least with partial service, as well as providing the needed service to Clarkson.

However, the GO system is certainly fulfilling a transportation need and I believe this mode of travel has a great future.

I wish to speak now for a few moments on regional government.

In this announcement, the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) stated that Peel and Halton are right up front for regional government. We are all pleased to hear the Minister not only accept but emphasize the recommendation of the select committee and the Smith committee that local participation is to be a prominent part of this process. The Minister further stated the population of regions should be 150,000 to 200,000 minimum, and second tier government 8,000 to 10,000 population minimum. Peel would, therefore, fall into the second-tier system, and with this I agree and so does the county.

It has been indicated that studies will be continued and that perhaps Peel and Halton may be one unit. I do not believe this is a wise or feasible proposal and I would like to quote from the report of the Peel county regional government review committee. This is an excellent summary of the factors involved and the position of the county and I believe there are eight or nine other areas involved in the same situation.

I quote from the report as follows:

Consideration was given by this committee to the possible unification of the local municipalities of the corporation of the county of Halton and the corporation of the county of Peel into one regional two-tier government.

The county of Peel covers an area of 470 square miles and county of Halton embraces 370 square miles. The unification of the two counties would contain a total area of 840 square miles, which is more than 3½ times the size of Metropolitan Toronto with its 242 square miles. The area to be serviced by the Ontario Water Resources Commission in the county of Peel covers an area of 173 square miles. The increase in population from 1957 to 1967 represents an increase of 116 per cent in Peel county and 88 per cent in Halton county with municipal assessments representing a comparable increase.

With the projected general growth patterns of each county, this committee feels that this is too large an area, diverse in its constituent parts, to flexibly and appropriately be accommodated in one regional two tier government for the two counties at this time.

Maybe the future indicates this line. They did not think so at the time and when you consider it is 3½ times the size of Metro, it has a lot to recommend it.

If a regional government was established embracing the county of Peel and it was found after a five-year or ten-year trial period that more centralization consolidation was deemed expedient, it would be reasonably easy to complete such a process.

Mr. Speaker, I go along with this recommendation. It seems to make a lot of sense to me. If both counties were included, the unit would be 3½ times the size of Metro.

We could have a population that is comparable, 3½ times the size of Metro. That would be a pretty large volume of people to be handled by even a two-tier system. So I think, at this time, at least initially, the regional government on the present county boundaries should be the objective.

Another feature I would like to comment on is the method of representation of regional council members. The Minister has come out in favour of representation by population and there can be no argument with that. He said:

They may be directly elected to the regional council, or they may be indirectly elected by becoming elected members of lower tier units and then being designated to sit on the regional council. Members will note that the present county system is a form of indirect election.

I must say, in all frankness, that we do not know at this time which system is superior. Convincing arguments have been advanced for both forms of election. In view of this we hope to experiment with two-tier regional governments embodying both principles in order to see which form does, in fact, work better.

Of course the Lakehead is committed to the single-tier system, and it certainly will be interesting to see how this goes along.

Mr. Speaker, as one who has had some experience in municipal elections, in both ward system and over a broader area, it is a pretty difficult undertaking to go over a broad area, in campaigning for one of these posts, seeking the support of over 100,000 people. I do not believe it is practical to have a candidate to campaign over the entire regional jurisdiction, if this is the plan. It is most difficult for an individual to give the necessary time and have the financial resources to canvass over an area of say 470 square miles, if this indeed is what is proposed, with a population of a couple of hundred thousand people.

So my thought is that perhaps indirect election. Or if it is direct election, for practical reasons the jurisdiction, or the area to be represented, should be something within reason so the voters can make some communication with the candidate. Therefore I think Peel county, as a separate county, as a separate region with a two-tier system of indirect elections of council members, or elections as I just qualified, would be the best.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I like especially to be in the House with the member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith), because I believe we share the same taste in clothing and vests; and I must say it is with pleasure that I see a bit of life on the other side of the House, as I stand up tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend to you, sir, my best wishes and congratulations on the assumption of your duties in the chair, last year and this year.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by saying a few words about the democratic process in our society and the democratic process in this House; the extent to which the rules of the Legislature inhibit the full democratic process from taking place in this House.

I would like first, sir, to recall to your attention and to the attention of the members, the historical significance of the loyal Opposition in a democratic system of government. I think once I have underlined the necessity of having a loyal Opposition in our form of government, my comments about the rules of this House, rules by which we govern—by laws of this province, by criticism of those rules and sir, I regret to say, of the role of the Speaker as defined by the rules of the House—that my criticisms will be much clearer.

I would like first of all to read from a number of authorities on the role of the Opposition in a parliamentary system of government.

The first quotation is from Sir Ivor Jennings, in his little book called "The Queen's Government," and of course, sir, the references are to the government in the United Kingdom from which we find many of our own traditions emanating, Sir Ivor Jennings says this:

The government governs under criticism from the Opposition. The Opposition's functions are almost as important as those of the government. The Opposition agrees that the government must govern and the government agrees that the Opposition must criticize.

Sir Ivor Jennings goes on to say:

The real purpose of parliamentary debate is to bring home to the electorate the major conflicts of policy.

Then we find by J. A. Corry and Henry J. Abraham, in a book called "Elements of Democratic Government", the following quotation:

The good that governments do can be ascribed . . . to the people. The evil they do can be pinned on the ephemeral government of the day. The Opposition which obstructs that government maintains its prestige more easily because it is Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, It [Her Majesty's loyal Opposition] is loyal to the permanent common interest and fundamental aspirations of the . . . people, while opposed to the audacity of a temporary parliamentary majority.

When we turn to other references on the functions of the Opposition in a democratic form of government, we find a number of other interesting opinions expressed—I believe sir, very fundamental opinions—concerning the nature of government in our province.

There is a more recent book by Strathearn Gordon entitled "Our Parliament" and in this book, particularly on pages 80 and 81, there is an excellent summary of the importance of the Opposition in our democratic form of government and I would like to quote to you, sir, and to members of the House, from this book:

Many people are apt to condemn what they call the "incessantly obstructive attitude" [of the Opposition] . . . without perhaps realizing that they are thereby striking at the whole basis of party Parliamentary government. It is as much the duty of an Opposition to criticize as it is of the government to govern.

I find the following statement very interesting, Mr. Speaker:

For once a Minister of the government has decided upon a plan, especially if it has given him a lot of trouble, and he happens to be overworked, human nature ensures that he should easily overlook its deficiencies and continue to swear—and perhaps to believe—that it is the best plan that was ever made. Party solidarity [among the government party] and the doctrine of Cabinet responsibility will also probably cause his colleagues to rally to his support in the House and in the country.

The criticism of a well-organized Opposition is exactly what is required to control this fault. It will be well informed criticism since [many members in the Opposition parties are] . . . in a position to accurately appraise the plan and its probable results: It will be responsible criticism because if it turns out to be sufficiently justified the critics will change places with their victims and themselves shoulder the government.

The Opposition have thus in normal times come to be accepted as a sort of reserve government. . . . The term "His Majesty's Opposition" was first used half jokingly by John Cam Hobhouse early in the last century. It has been said that no government can be long secure without a formidable Opposition, and it was in recognition of the value of these arrangements that the "leader of the Opposition", and therefore alternative Prime Minister, was, in 1937 in the U.K., granted an official salary of two thousand pounds a year.

Hopefully it has risen since then in the U.K.

It must be another strange experience for the foreign observers to discover that the British government pays its principal critic handsomely for his criticism. Further proof of the importance and respect accorded to the post of "leader of the Opposition" was recently given when, on the sudden and premature death of Mr. Hugh Gaitskell in January 1963, the House of Commons created a precedent by adjourning for 24 hours after paying generous tributes to his achievements. Mr. John Strachy, writing in the Sunday Times on January 20, 1963, claimed that Mr. Gaitskell's work on the Opposition front bench was no less important than that of a Minister of the Crown, in the democratic process.

The quotation continues, Mr. Speaker, by saying:

It is in this clash of criticism, Opposition versus government, resulting eventually in an exchange of places, that the success of our parliamentary institution chiefly depends. Even in this country [of course the U.K.] a single party or coalition continuing for very long in office might become as hard to dislodge as a continental dictatorship.

Well, that concludes the quotation, Mr. Speaker, from the book by Mr. Gordon, underlining a couple of key points on the role of the Opposition. I would also like to give members the benefit of the opinion of Professor Ronald Butt, in his book "The Power of Government"; There are a few additional insights into the responsibilities of the Opposition in our democratic process. Parliament is primarily a forum of publicity whose real functions are those of alerting and informing the public on matters relevant to the decision on the way in which—or, in fact, whether or not—to vote.

For only an Opposition can pursue a government with sustained criticism and keep before the voters, between general elections, the options that will eventually confront them.

The author continues—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): This is the kind of lecture the kids are protesting about.

Mr. T. Reid: Talk to the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis).

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: I have never given a lecture at nine o'clock at night in my life.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: If you kids do not keep quiet, you will get a strapping.

Mr. Speaker, the author continues—I think these are very interesting quotations, I have selected them very judiciously. I am not reading the entire book—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It just sounds like it.

Mr. T. Reid: If the hon. Minister would listen:

However long an Opposition is obliged to remain out of office and regardless of whether it achieves power at the next election, it is of vital importance to the political health of the nation that there should, at every moment, be seen to be a credible alternative government, ready and waiting to take over.

An hon. member: That is us.

Mr. T. Reid: Another interesting quotation, Mr. Speaker, is this:

An Opposition suffers in the struggle to command the respect of the electorate, from being in Opposition, regardless of the merits or demerits of its case. It is particularly difficult for it to reconcile the need to be both critical and responsible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that last quotation of particular interest because what it is saying is that if the rules of this Legislature, for example, are heavily stacked against the Opposition, it is stacking the cards against someone that is already holding a weak hand in terms of criticism.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Talk to Trudeau about that.

Mr. T. Reid: I think we must return to that issue. And I also, of course, agree with some of the views of the government members, and with views of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) who said:

It is difficult for an Opposition party to reconcile the need to be both critical, as we are in the official Opposition, and responsible as we are in the official Opposition.

I think we have maintained the balance in that respect.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well said!

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Yes, but who said it?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Is the hon. member just finding out what his role is?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, it is very interesting to find out what one's role is in a democratic government.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the author says:

Even if a government is grossly mishandling the nation's affairs—

And in our case provincial affairs—

—an Opposition stands no chance of taking over unless it looks like an attractive alternative, and can only present that appearance (of being an attractive alternative) inside the House of Commons.

Mr. Nixon: Particularly when somebody else pays their bills, particularly when they get all their money from a rich uncle.

Mr. T. Reid: Now we often hear our critics say that the bantering that goes on in this House, the roughness of some of the debates in this House, is useless theatrical exercise. Well, some of it is. But let me point this out, according to this good professor. He says:

The crude clash of government and Opposition in Parliament expresses a kind of truth about both parties.

Of course, the author is assuming two major parties.

And it performs much the same function as the clash of counsel for the defence and for the prosecution, does in a court of law.

Of course, in our courts of law, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary that the rules of the court be objective, that they not be loaded for or against the defence counsel or for the prosecutor. In that sense, it is a valid comparison.

I am turning to another aspect which I think the government members will be pleased to know is recorded in the books of certain people. It is this: All that I have said thus far and all that I have quoted thus far, might be seen in terms of the continuous election campaign of the whole life of a Parliament. But if it is that, it is also more:

The Opposition itself participates in the process of governing because it helps to condition the contemporary climate of opinion through which the government of the day is itself influenced in the production of its policies.

A Cabinet will——modify its policies in the light of what it expects the Opposition case to be. If it (the Cabinet) suspects that the Opposition will have an attractive case, it will do its best, within broad limits, to make that case less attractive—or to steal and adapt the Opposition's clothes. In this broad sense, therefore, the voice of Opposition contributes to the policy-making of government in any given Parliament and is not simply a factor in deciding what the composition of the next Parliament should be.

My comments on those quotations, Mr. Speaker, are that what these people are writing is in terms of what should happen, what should take place, in a democratic society operating this democratic institution in a party parliamentary type of government. But the point is that these are the functions of the Opposition and if the Opposition is not allowed to have the degrees of freedom necessary to actively fulfill these functions in a democratic form of government, then we have all lost something in the democratic process.

Finally I would like to quote from a person that I very rarely quote, but he has said something quite apt on the question of the Opposition's function in a democratic form of government. It was Mr. Mackenzie King.

An hon. member: Are you looking in your crystal ball for that one?

Mr. T. Reid: Well he might have been looking in his crystal ball.

Mr. Nixon: He lasted better than R. B. Bennett.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, Mr. Mackenzie King was Prime Minister for so long he saw things from the other side of the House—but he was talking about the obligations of a Prime Minister and of course in this province it is the Premier, and Mr. Mackenzie King said this—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is "Prime Minister" in this province too.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you, then the quotation applies directly:

The Prime Minister is obliged to keep constantly in mind two vital objectives: The one, to seek to provide opportunity for the fullest and frankest discussion of matters of public interest; the other, to see that sufficient time is provided for the full and proper discussion of the important business of government. It is a difficult and delicate task to hold the balance between the urgent demands of the government upon the time of parliament and a proper regard for the privileges, so essential to the sound functioning of a free community, of the private members of parliament.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): That was the time he introduced the 20-minute limitation on speeches.

Mr. T. Reid: Well that was before he did a lot of bad things.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We got that on the record.

Mr. T. Reid: Well I have written a book review on some of them. Now the key conclusion from this, Mr. Speaker, are three-fold at least.

The first lesson to be learned and which we all in this House must constantly keep in mind, is that the Opposition's functions are almost as important as those of a government in a democratic form of government.

Secondly, Her Majesty's loyal Opposition is loyal to the permanent common interests and fundamental aspirations of the people. It is not subversive.

Thirdly, the loyal Opposition lies at the whole basis of party parliamentary government.

Well, Mr. Speaker, with these points firmly embedded in the minds of some of the members, I would like to say that, in my opinion, in this Legislature the functions of the Opposition which I have outlined, have been thwarted and perverted by the rules of this Legislature by the way in which this government, this Legislature, arrives at decisions; by the way in which the rules of government, the traditions of government in this province have made it very, very difficult for the Opposition—in this case two parties—to provide the responsible type of criticism that is necessary for good government in this province.

So I would like to point to a few recommendations which are based on the need to utterly change the ways of this Legislature, to change the functions of the Speaker, sir, and to change the rules of this Legislature.

For example, it is absolutely ridiculous in my opinion that time is taken up in this Legislature with three prayers, with formal requests for petitions, with the empty formality of the introduction of bills for first reading, on which three people in a form of ritual mumble formulistic statements. In my opinion, it is time-consuming, it is unnecessary, and it can be done away with.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about those 48 urgent questions?

Mr. T. Reid: I will get to the question period. Just let me build up to the question period; that is the pinnacle I want to reach.

Mr. Speaker, it is also ridiculous to prohibit Opposition members from introducing bills which will involve the expenditure of public funds.

An hon. member: There is nothing we can do about that.

Mr. Reid: This rule amounts to a basic undercutting of the responsibilities of a loyal Opposition's responsibilities in a democratic form of government. The key issues, Mr. Speaker, in this province—and indeed the Premier (Mr. Robarts) of this province has said it to the federal government—the key issues in social, political and economic policies in this province have to do with the priorities of expenditures. They have to do with expenditures. To prevent the Opposition, by rules of the Legislature, from proposing legislation which provides alternative policies to the ones currently being followed by the government, amounts to stifling of fundamental criticism.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How do you do that after you have passed the estimates?

Mr. T. Reid: We are talking about private bills. We are talking about the rights of members such as the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), such as members elsewhere in this House—indeed, even government members, backbenchers that is—to produce bills which involve expenditure of money. That is a ridiculous, ritualistic type of regulation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Teacher, may I ask a question? Would the hon. member explain to us how it would be possible after, for example, the estimates for the government have been passed, for a member of the Opposition, or anyone for that matter, to present a bill for the expenditure—which would cost, say, an expenditure of $10 million—if it were passed by the House, where would you get the money?

Many interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take note of the hon. Minister's question and table it for a reply in the future. I would suggest in all seriousness, sir, that this is exactly the type of question that should be debated fully in a legislative committee which should be instructed by this Legislature to come up with a completely revamped form of decision-making.

I would like to turn to another example of what I consider to be a completely outdated practice and it is this. The present private members' hours make a mockery of the attempt to criticize government policies and to effectively promote alternative policies.

The allocation of an hour, or two hours a week, towards debate on resolutions or private bills on which the government imposes a condition that they will be talked out, only confirms, in my opinion, the public's opinion, that what happens in this Legislature is almost completely irrelevant to the society in which we operate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That phrase belongs to the NDP; "irrelevant" belongs to them.

Mr. T. Reid: I thought it was a fairly good one. I thought it up.

Mr. Speaker, another point to underline the fact that I believe this House is sadly out of date, is this. The exercise of Opposition members constructively drafting bills in consultation with citizens of the province and introducing these bills for first reading in the Legislature on the imposed understanding that they will go no further, exposes again a type of technique which prohibits the Opposition from fulfilling its function in a democratic form of government.

Surely the demands and needs of the people of Ontario require rules of the Legislature which enable the members whom they have elected to the Legislature, to make their Opposition to the government much more effective.

I think that the time is running out. The people of this province want their views made known effectively to this government between elections and not just on election day every four or five years.

The committees of the Legislature for example, Mr. Speaker, must become more than a replica of the often futile debate in this Legislature. The bills, such as the ones that I have introduced regarding universities, should be fully discussed by the education committee. Right now, they cannot even be referred by myself or any other private member to the education committee of this Legislature after first reading.

The standing committees must be made more effective and I believe, sir, that they must be staffed by persons other than departmental officials to ensure non-partisan servicing to the committees. The committees must have the power of investigation and the power of calling witnesses on the request of any member of that committee and not just, as it is at present, by the government majority on those committees.

The reason I feel quite strongly, sir, that they should be staffed by persons from the Clerk's office rather than, in the particular case of the education committee, by members of The Department of Education, is to ensure non-partisanship of the secretarial functions which should be strengthened in the proposals that I have made here.

It is not enough that the departmental official actually be non-partisan, he must give the appearance to the public and to members of the Opposition on those committees of being non-partisan. The only way to do that, sir, is to institutionalize it under the Clerk's office.

This would mean that if the responsible Minister does not come to meetings of the committee, then he should read the minutes of the meetings, properly recorded as approved by members of that committee, and not talk to his civil servants from his department who really serve as a go-between—an information link—between the functions of the committee and the Minister himself.

I would like to give the members a specific example of the problem here, the need to make these committees effective, to restore to the Opposition, a system whereby they can make their fundamental criticisms much more effective, rather than being forced increasingly to make their Opposition criticism of government policies on the front steps of the Legislature or indeed by going down to Peterborough en masse in order to have some sort of impact on public opinion.

The specific case I refer to, Mr. Speaker, is from the carbon copy, the rough draft of Hansard for yesterday, on pages 331-4. I asked the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker, the following question about the second report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. That report, of course, sir, being entirely I believe, on the question of education. I asked the Minister this, sir:

A supplementary question: Will the Minister refer the report to the education committee of the Legislature so that we might look into some of the questions that I have raised at this time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to comment whether I will refer the report to the standing committee of education. . . . I cannot say at this point where the most appropriate place will be for the discussion of that.

I submit, sir, that the right of discussion of a fundamental document, of a fundamental report on a subject such as education, which is a provincial concern primarily, should not lie in the discretionary power of a Minister of the Crown. If we are to have effective Opposition in this Legislature, that type of arbitrary discussionary power must not lie in the hands of a Minister of the Crown. We must establish—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, will the member for Scarborough East complete the reply from the Minister of Education to his question?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if the member would like me to give the entire reply, I shall.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well perhaps on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I got the impression from what the member for Scarborough East said that he was intending to leave the impression that the Minister of Education in some way was not only saying that he would not necessarily refer it to the standing committee on education, but that he might not refer it to anybody.

My recollection of what the Minister of Education said was, it may well be that the proper place for it to be dealt with was in the course of his estimates and I would not want to leave the impression the Minister of Education is being arbitrary about what he had to say.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for making his comment. I certainly did not intend—particularly with the Minister not here—to make a statement that inferred that. I will read the—

Mr. J. Renwick: It is not often I defend a Tory Minister.

Mr. T. Reid: I know, it is very funny because Stephen Lewis did the same thing yesterday. I would like to, in that case, give the entire reply because of the point the member has raised—

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): It is not necessary now.

Mr. T. Reid: The Minister of Education replied:

Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to comment whether I will refer the report to the standing committee on education. Certainly I think it is a report that we can discuss either there or perhaps during the debates on the estimates of The Department of Education. I think certainly some opportunity will be given to discuss this in some detail. I cannot say at this point where the most appropriate place will be.

The point, sir, was not to condemn the Minister for saying "we would not discuss this report". The point I was making is that it should automatically go to the committee on education, the standing committee on education of this body, so that it could be discussed.

I do not believe that that type of decision should be left up to the discretion of a Minister of the government. I would like to see reports like that go automatically to the committee on education, as well, as many other reports which the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) and myself have repeatedly asked the Minister to refer to the committee.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, on another point of order, if I may.

It seems to me that this is within the power of the standing committee on education to call for that report and discuss it without asking the Minister about it at all.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, one can get into great detail on this if one examines the politics of a committee of this Legislature. I am not sure whether this would be a fruitful thing to do or not.

Certainly a committee can request these reports and can discuss them, but the point I am trying to make here is that a report like this should, as part of the Parliamentary procedures of this body, automatically go to a standing committee such as this; whether it is the report on transportation, education, pollution, etc.

It should automatically go—a report as substantial as this should definitely go. We should not have to request a Minister of the government to refer it to a committee, to have this body refer it to the committee for study.

It should be part of the formal structure, the formal system of criticism of this government and I simply point out the hard facts of politics of these committees that, if the Conservatives are on their toes, they can of course govern what the committees do because they have a majority in each committee.

That is the way a party system works. I do not refute that. But I do think there are some things in this system of government that should not rely on a party vote in a committee or a party vote in this Legislature. I am talking about the rules of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I go somewhat further in my criticisms of some of the rules of this House. I would say that I, for one, seriously question the ritual of a Throne Speech and the ritual of speeches in reply to the Speech from the Throne, including my own this evening.

The Throne Speech introduced by the government this session is a vacuous collection of words and phrases. How much better it would be to have more advanced notice of government bills and bills by members of the Opposition so that constructive and searching criticism can be made of the future laws of this province. The current Expropriation Act is an outstanding example of a bill that should have been made available to this Legislature and to the public last Spring instead of being introduced late and being jammed through without searching criticism and public scrutiny.

An hon. member: What about Bill 44?

Mr. T. Reid: Bill 44 is the same type of thing as the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) has pointed out. The point—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): This is a year in advance of next year.

Mr. T. Reid: The point, sir, is—and if the Minister had only been in the House earlier today he would have heard the discussion—that tomorrow the relevant committee is meeting while this House is in session to discuss that bill.

I suggest, sir, that we must have the opportunity in order to be effective—to mount effective Opposition without being open to charges of obstruction by the government—that we must have more advance notice on fundamental bills like this. They must be reviewed extensively in committee, not a rushed meeting to get it through as a Christmas present.

But if we want to have effective Opposition, we must examine ourselves in this House. I suggest the time to start is now.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn briefly to the question period which concerns us all. I have some reservations, sir, about the system that the questions must go to you, sir, before they go to the government.

But I think that that is a subsidiary question. I think it is a safeguard that has been put in to ensure that there be more semblance of order than would otherwise be the case.

I think the government members should ask themselves as many of us as private members are asking ourselves, why the question period is so long. I don't intend to give a detailed analysis of this. I simply wish to throw out, sir, some thoughts on it. Hopefully the opinions that I have expressed today, and the opinions of other members, might become part of a searching revision of the rules of this House, the procedures of this House, the rules that govern the conduct of yourself, sir, the rules which lay down the framework by which this government comes to decisions.

I believe that it is the whole system that has basically corrupted the question period. The system which in effect—no matter how good the opposition members are—the system as now practised in this province, has hammered the Opposition into a very tight box.

I think it is very hard to make fundamental criticisms of this government on a continuous basis, in a constructive way under the present system. And here, I have no doubt, I will be getting some heckling from the government members, but I do believe what I am about to say represents a basic problem of democracy, if you like, in this province.

The management of news is a very subtle art as practised by the present government. It is skillfully geared to media deadlines. Government statements, the tabling of controversial reports in this Legislature, all show a very sophisticated approach by the government members on the question of publicity and the news media.

The House, sir, starts at 2.30 which I think fairly significant. It might just be by tradition that it begins at 2.30 rather than 1.30. The fact is, the House sits, begins to sit at 2.30 in the afternoon and by 4.00 or 4.30, the 6.00 o'clock TV news, the radio news is basically determined. But what is said in this House between 2.30 and 4.00 or 4.15 or the latest 4.30, sir, becomes the news that is reported to the public at 6.00 o'clock, particularly over television, a very powerful media.

And so it then becomes a question of who can dominate that period between 2.30 and 4.15. The government, the House leader, can set the order for the day of course, which is quite proper; he can skillfully, with members of the government, decide which reports to bring out and lay in front of the press, such as the pollution reports, to put it right at 2.30 on the desk, and it captures the news. It is a very skillful art of trying to capture the press.

Well, leaving that aside, even though I think it is a very important issue, in a democratic society, it puts the members of the Opposition in a very difficult position. It puts me, for example, Mr. Speaker, into a position—as a member of the Opposition, who believes himself to be 90 per cent of the time fairly responsible—in the position of trying to use the question period, sir, to make my criticism known to the public, because speaking at 9.30 at night, with the press gallery tired, and most of them gone, it is very difficult to get my views about the government across to the public.

And so, the temptation is for Opposition members and indeed, it is part of party strategy, to use that question period to criticize the government—sort of a pea-shooter technique to combat the skillfully geared government propaganda machine. In a democratic society with an alleged democratic system of government, the rules of the Legislature should be designed to allow the Opposition to mount an effective opposition within the Legislature. I suggest, sir, that we must all, and I would suspect the government members might be interested in this because at some point they will find themselves on this side of the House, look into this type of question.

Finally, sir, I would, with due respect, mention that I really do believe that the system of questions—if we are to have a question period, and I would even suggest we should question whether we ought to have a question period—I do not think that the Speaker should be placed in the impossible position, sir, of having to decide in his own conscience whether a question is urgent, or whether it is a relevant question or how that question should be worded.

I think that it is the right of the individual private member to decide on the urgency of the matter in question. It is not the right of the Speaker, sir, to make such a judgment.

It is further not the right of the Speaker to rewrite questions. I firmly believe, sir, that if we are to have a question period—I think we should seriously consider not having it and explore alternative possibilities for enabling members of the Opposition to make their criticisms when they have them in this House and in effect—that the question period be more spontaneous. We should probably try to test the mettle of the Minister by asking the questions in this House spontaneously. Obviously we will work them out beforehand, and then you, sir, will rule them out of order on behalf of the members of this House, or rule them in order. The Minister would be responsible for answering the question if he can, for tabling it for future reference or putting it on the order paper. But I think it is up to the private members to decide what is urgent; it is up to the Ministers to decide whether or not they should reply.

That would bring me to another recommendation, sir. We should consider, I think, whether or not we should have a permanent Speaker. I think there is merit in the idea. I think that a permanent Speaker would ensure the appearance of objectivity, as well as objectivity in fact. I believe that you are tough in your decisions under the rules of this House; you cannot make the rules, you interpret the rules. But I think that most of the time you are equally tough to members on both sides of the House.

This is not personal criticism, sir, but I do feel that we should seriously consider having a permanent Speaker. For example—and we went to this yesterday—when there were 31 members of the Opposition parties in this House, and 21 members of the government party in this House, we had a voice vote when it was obvious by anyone sitting up there at least that there were more Opposition members, then I think the Speaker ought to have said that there were more “nays” than “ayes” on the vote. If we have a permanent Speaker, then I think objectivity would be reinforced. I think a permanent Speaker could protect the rights of the Opposition members, could protect their function to criticize the government much more effectively than can a temporary Speaker who has many close friends, sir, as many members of the House, but particularly with the government side. It is a difficult job, and I do not mean this in a personal sense.

The final suggestion I would like to throw out to a standing committee—hopefully the other side of the Legislature would look into revising rules—to bring this Legislature into the 21st century, would be that some Ministers, not all of them of course, and this is a personal opinion, might well have a parliamentary secretary. Take the Minister of Education who is also the Minister of University Affairs, sir. This is a man who has tremendous responsibilities. He is responsible for I believe up to 45 or 50 per cent of the operating expenditures of this government. There are many changes taking place in education and he should be knowledgeable, he should lead the way. And so when he comes to this House, he knows he is leaving a desk full of work; he is generally in a good humour, but I can see in his face, you know: “I have to come into this House, to answer these questions by the member for Peterborough, by the member for Scarborough East, the Opposition critics and other members, and I will try to answer their questions as fairly as I can.” But he is plainly pained, I believe, at having to come here, not because he does not believe in the democratic process but because of the amount of work he has. Now if that Minister had a parliamentary secretary, such as the former chairman of the education committee last year, he would be able to answer many of our questions; he would be able to get into the guts of the civil service and The Department of Education and University Affairs and dig up the answers and be here all the time to answer questions from the Opposition on a department which is so essential to the government of this province.

I have two more points on the question of the House. Since I went into one of them, or tried to go into one of them during the question period yesterday on a point of privilege, which I agree was not the time to do it but which I felt I had to do to try to bring the abuse of our parliamentary system to the attention of the members opposite, to the Minister in particular, and to the press and the public, was the fact of the power of the senior civil servants in this province. As a politician with friends in the civil service in Ontario and in Ottawa, at senior levels, I appreciate many of the problems in the work they are trying to do. But as I tried to say on a point of personal privilege yesterday, sir, I feel that statements of major public policy ought to be made by the Ministers in this House either in response to questions or on their own initiative by statements. I do not think, sir, that it is part of our system of government to have a Deputy Minister or assistant Deputy Minister making major political speeches.

And I use “political” in the best sense of the word—statements about fundamental policy in this province either down in the United States or this province, or to reporters. Of course, the case I referred to yesterday on the basis of a news report—which may well have been incorrect in fact and the Minister corrected me on this—was the question of the Deputy Minister of Education commenting to reporters, according to the news report, about the second report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

But that was just one example, a current example, and was by no means the only example, sir. I shall, over the next few months, go through the newspapers for the last couple of years to find further examples of senior civil servants making public policy statements to audiences in California, to audiences in New York city, in the case of The Department of Trade and Development; and to the Minister of Education’s own department, where he has a very talkative Deputy Minister who tends to make policy statements.

I say, sir, that if the government, if the decision-making of the laws of this province goes over to that big building over there in its corridors, then we have lost something in the democratic process.

I would like to support this fear I have about the senior civil servants in this government pre-empting the rights of members of this House, the rights of party politics, the rights of the Opposition members, by quoting indeed, from the Minister of Education himself. This is a quotation in the Toronto Daily Star, Wednesday, December 11, and it is entitled: "Watch Bureaucrats, Davis Warns Trustees". The statement was made in Brampton. The quotation is as follows:

Education Minister William Davis last night warned school trustees in the new, larger school boards that take office Jan. 1 that they should guard against bureaucracy.

There mustn't be too many supervisors, administrators or surplus fat in the system, Davis said at the inaugural meeting of the Peel County Board of Education last night.

Well, I think what he is talking about is the power of the members of the boards of education over the school trustees. And I suggest, sir, that the Minister himself and other Ministers must make sure that their Deputy Ministers remain responsible to them and that they not make public policy statements because it infringes upon the ability, the opportunity of members of the Opposition to criticize government policy.

It takes government out of here and into the big building over there. And if this government allows that to happen, then this government must be prepared for members of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, both parties, to take their case directly to the people; to leave this Legislature at times if they judge it to be necessary, to go into the community and make their case directly to the people of the province, or to make their case directly on the steps of the legislative building, instead of in this Chamber.

And finally, sir, on this subject, I would like to say that I think the Premier's remarks about the possibility of television being introduced into this chamber is an excellent idea. I think television would expose the archaic procedures and practices and rules of this House. I think that when the public saw it, they just would not stand for it. It would be a fantastic waste of money and they would not like it.

Now, I think too, sir, speaking a bit critically here of some members of my own party perhaps, and the NDP, and indeed members of the government party who make long statements, that the exposing of what happens in this Legislature to the people of Ontario through television would bring responsible criticism back to this Legislature.

I think we would all still have parliamentary privilege in what we say, which means to say that we cannot be taken to court for what we say in this Chamber or in the committees, that it would nevertheless create an atmosphere because members would not be identified with stupid, irresponsible statements which they are not now prepared to make on television, but which they do make in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another area and it has to do with community development and the policies or lack of policies of the present government. It is about getting the poor, the disadvantaged in our society, involved in the decision-making process, particularly in those decisions which affect them directly.

Now, I think I would be right in saying, sir, that everyone agrees that people should participate more in government, the advising on policy, and assisting in the administration of government programmes. Participation is most needed where it now happens least, from low income and disadvantaged groups who are directly affected by poverty and social welfare programmes of this government.

In one such field, sir—urban renewal planning—the Ontario government has already taken a step forward, however halting, by requiring resident participation in the detailed preparation of renewal plans. Experience in areas like Toronto's Kensington and Don Vale, suggests that residents can make an important contribution in insuring that government programmes are administered more efficiently, more effectively, and to better achieve their goals of benefitting people than when government administrators are forced to operate on their own.

Much of the same kind of participation, offering people a real say in how policies are arrived at and administered, could exist elsewhere, in welfare, in public housing, legal aid, workmen's compensation and so on.

Citizen planning and "watchdog groups" whose members are people immediately affected by these programmes, could perform valuable functions, initially in concerning themselves with how they are being administered. And they would probably move themselves to produce detailed proposals for how they could be formally involved in administration and policy development. This would provide them with an opportunity to make use of their special advantage, sir, not shared by administrators, not shared by politicians or outsiders. And that special advantage, sir, is of knowing how government programmes are administered in practice.

The uniqueness of the few instances like Don Vale and Kensington where this kind of participation is now happening raises the crucial question: "How can this kind of activity be positively encouraged?"

Evidently, exhortation on its own is not enough. People have been talking about participation in the urban renewal context for several years. But, sir, there is still not one single example of what residents themselves and outsiders, not the administrators, would describe as a project completed with real resident participation from beginning to end.

The problem is even more difficult when, as is usually the case, there is very little background of political and voluntary association experience of any kind among the people whose participation is most desired.

However, the Kensington and Don Vale experience, sir, suggests what might be the key factor in creating successful examples of participation. Both resident groups have had available to them the skills of professionals in relevant fields who were prepared to devote considerable amounts of time to work for the area associations.

These include lawyers, planners and social scientists. They have not been volunteers doing what little they could manage in odd moments of spare time; they have been people who happened to live in the areas affected; who have devoted a major amount of time to the groups concerned.

There is good reason to think, sir, that in the present circumstances skilled professional help is the critical factor. When it is available in sufficient quantity and is employed by a group of citizens who have been elected by a democratically structured organization, things begin to happen.

If—and I repeat this—if the Ontario government wants citizen participation in government and in government work, the best, cheapest, most effective thing it could do, is to make this critical factor of skilled professional help available to citizen groups.

This would have to be done by providing these organizations with the funds they would need to hire their own staff; their own advocates; their own experts. And, sir, I submit it could be done simply. Provide $15,000 a year for staff expenses and office space to eligible organizations, enough to set up one well qualified full-time employee.

Requirements for the groups themselves would have to be simple and just restrictive enough to rule out people who do not need this kind of assistance; they should have say, at least, 200 members after six months; have a written constitution and democratic procedures and be made up mostly of people directly affected by the social welfare policy matters which would be the group's main concern.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): The member's urban Toronto members do not seem to think much of that idea.

Mr. T. Reid: I am glad the Minister is here.

An hon. member: They approve.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): They read the speech this morning.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is why they stayed away, they didn't want to hear it.

An hon. member: Good speech.

Mr. T. Reid: I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food that there are many rural communities and farmers' groups that could do with this type of help to protect themselves from your policies.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The only people in the member's party listening to him are the rural members of his party's caucus.

An hon. member: We always listen.

Mr. T. Reid: To ensure that no one felt that this was a way of making these organizations the tools of the government, as the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food would like, no doubt, the programme could be administered by an independent corporation; a majority of whose members would be elected by the association themselves. To give the programme a fair trial run with sufficient guarantees of support, the government could make an initial grant to the corporation of $2 million. A small amount in terms of the huge sums spent on government programmes involved but enough to support 65 to 70 such groups for two years.

A measure of this kind, sir, would probably succeed in getting citizen participation well off the ground. It would make clear the fact that the government means business when it talks about getting people involved. It would provide the opportunity for people who are not being heard now, to get their messages across to their government.

I would like to quote, at this point, Lionel Trilling, from his book, "The Liberal Imagination", and I think we should all bear this quotation in mind:

Some paradox of our nature leads us, when once we have made our fellow men the objects of our enlightened interest, to go on to make them with objects of our pity, then of our wisdom and ultimately of our coercion.

I firmly believe, sir, that the type of citizen participation that I have recommended, as an instrument of public policy in this province, would forestall the ultimate steps.

It is easy to go through those three steps of interest, pity and wisdom to coercion—to coercing the poor into a type of welfare programme that seals them further into the box. I suggest, sir, that we must make sure our government programmes do not take that final step. One measure of preventing that from occurring is to involve the poor themselves in the decisions that affect their lives.

And just to throw some more immediate light on to this question of involving the poor in the administrative structures and programmes that affect them, I would like to let you know about some of the conversations I have had with members in the Ontario Housing Corporation and to citizens groups, particularly, those in which Ontario Housing is involved.

For example, I would like the government members to know, because some of them might not know, that under the Canada Assistance Plan there is a clause which allows funds to be made available to community development programmes designed to help people in need. The interpretation placed on that clause by The Department of Health and Welfare in Ottawa includes any person living in public housing or any group of people who are residents of public housing and that, of course, includes the Ontario Housing Corporation residents.

Now if these people are in need—and they are in need by definition by a very generous definition by the federal government—then the federal government will provide 50 per cent of the funds towards community development programmes.

Sir, The Ontario Department of Social and Family Services has not used these funds at all, to my knowledge. The relevant department of the government of Manitoba has taken the federal government up on this type of offer for community development projects in the poorer areas of Winnipeg.

There are several of these programmes in the city of Winnipeg, under the administration of their Social and Family Services Department; they are paying first class salaries to community development workers. That is the same thing I was proposing; that in order to strengthen the hands of the poor to fight against the government, one must provide them with middle class professional skills.

I have wondered why, in Scarborough, including my own riding, it has not been possible for the resident tenant associations out there to get their hands on some of this federal money, a matching grant to provincial money.

My understanding is that the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services has not used these funds. I do not even know if they have considered using these funds. If the Minister has any comments to make on this specific question I would appreciate knowing what his comments are.

So there are funds available for the type of programme I was talking about and this government has not used them. I would propose either these funds be used—the federal offer be taken up—or that a new initiative be taken to involve the poor and the disadvantaged in community programmes that affect them.

To expect that a tenant relations officer of the Ontario Housing Corporation can provide these highly professional community development skills, skills which are often in the wardchest of a social animator, a skilled community development worker, is very much wishful thinking. The tenant relations officers who are responsible now, I understand, for any community programmes, and recreational programmes of Ontario Housing Corporation tenants, are not skilled enough. They do not have the skills, they are not hired to do that type of work. As a result, when a community development programme—when tenants of the Ontario Housing want a community development programme to take off—they just do not have the resources available.

The problem is fairly complicated, because the tenant relations officers report to the regional supervisors who, in turn, report to the director of operations of Ontario Housing. You cannot expect a skilled community development worker to report to a management supervisor, a person concerned with the operation of the programme. A tenant relations officer, if he or she is to be helpful to community development, both in the Ontario Housing complexes and also in the community around the Ontario Housing complexes, must be able to fight for the views of the local tenants' association or the local ratepayers' association. He must not, in my opinion, be dependent on the direct supervision of a regional supervisor, whose job is to ensure efficiency; whose job it is to ensure that the funds are well administered.

So I am not, I believe, sir, talking about some mythical type of generality of simply getting the poor involved in programmes that affect them, simply because I think it is a good principle on democratic grounds. I firmly believe that if you get people involved, no matter whether they are the poor or even members of this Legislature, you can create great opportunities for the poor people to take part in the decisions that affect their lives. You can make those programmes more relative to their needs. You can cut out the waste. You can cut out the bureaucracy. You can counteract the vested interests of the social workers in many cases, and in that way provide better programmes at much less cost.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the question of housing, specifically. I would like to offer to the government some ideas that I have developed over the last three or four months on the question of housing. I think there might be some new ideas in my remarks.

I believe, sir, that fundamental changes in the municipal structure are long overdue and no amount of tinkering with the existing system will solve current or future problems in the fast-growing urban centres in Ontario. The present municipal structure has imposed all kinds of restrictions and artificial economic conditions on housing which have little to do with housing or with the provision of essential shelter for our people. The municipalities, particularly at the fringe of the metropolis, are actively resisting housing development or imposing impossible criteria on that development by reason of this outmoded structure. They are attempting to adjust to these conditions, they are attempting to adjust to the financial strait-jacket they find themselves in by applying these restrictions.

Present housing requirements and the cost of housing in the larger centres of Ontario have made further adjustments to the system, ludicrous. I suggest that the housing crisis in this province, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, revolves around the following factors: (a) The cost of land and municipal services; (b) The cost of schools and education; (c) The cost and supply of mortgage money and financing; (d) Subsidized and public housing; (e) The cost of construction; (f) Transportation and regional development.

I shall intentionally discuss transportation and industrial development apart from other municipal services, because I feel these must be given special treatment and considered in the direct context of regional planning and development and growth in the Ontario economy, and indeed, of course, in the national economy.

I would like to deal with those six areas in that order. First of all, the cost of land and municipal services: It becomes apparent even to the casual observer that there is no shortage of land for housing even in a city area like Metropolitan Toronto. The cost of land, however, has risen so sharply in recent years that a modest home is no longer possible. While speculation accounts for some of the price hike, it seems that this was made possible by reason of a shortage of serviced land available for development. Municipalities have found it difficult to finance the cost of services such as sewer and water mains. They have also resisted too rapid a growth in housing until sufficient industrial development was attained to offset the cost of future services such as education.

The solution, sir, must be to reduce land costs by making adequate land available for housing and by removing some of the causes which have prompted municipal governments to impose artificial criteria on housing development. To this end I propose the following measures:

1. Change the present practice of assessing land at approximately 20 per cent of the value of a residential property and 80 per cent on the dwelling, to a 50-50 basis. A similar adjustment could be extended to land used for other purposes, scaled according to zoning use. Such a policy would, I believe, achieve the following goals:

- (a) It would induce speculators to develop already serviced land because taxes would be relatively higher than under the present formula.

(b) It would result in higher assessments in an undeveloped zone, thereby providing more revenue for the provision of sewer and water services; the assessment could be reduced or scaled according to zones, thereby ensuring orderly development at the option of the municipality or regional government in those areas where immediate development would be undesirable.

(c) If the present agricultural purposes assessment and tax rate remains intact—perhaps at the option of the owner—a recapture provision should be applied by the municipality when the land is sold for non-agricultural use. The recapture could go back three to five years on the tax concessions granted. A similar scheme is now in operation, as many of the Ministers know, for golf courses in this province.

(d) The policy would also provide incentives for redevelopment and would discourage slum tenements and substandard housing. Land would become too valuable, in the assessors' eyes, to be used in this way. A homeowner would also be more inclined to improve his property if he were not so thoroughly discouraged to do so by present assessment practices.

The second proposal I have in this area would also encourage municipalities or the regional governments to act as developers on their own land by land acquisition:

2. The government of Ontario should discuss with the federal government the granting of federal loans by CMHC for this at favourable interest rates, on condition that the serviced lots were leased or turned over at cost after the services had been installed.

One bottleneck is the attitude of the present Conservative government. The present HOME programme is much too concerned with maintaining present real estate values rather than being used as an agency to drive land costs down. Also, the experience in Scarborough with the Malvern project, which is in the riding I represent, would not suggest that involving the provincial government leads to quick solutions. The government of Ontario must change this negative attitude before this second proposal would have much chance of becoming operative.

3. The Ontario government can make more land attractive for housing by providing rapid transit to the perimeter of the city and to satellite communities. The law of supply and demand should be used to drive land costs down.

The second area, sir, has to do with the costs of schools and education. In the opinion of my leader and myself, probably the most restricting single factor in the present housing crisis is the cost of education and its method of financing in this province.

The municipalities are imposing any number of restricting criteria to housing development because of the present financial structure assessment requirements, which have made a low-cost home impossible. In fact, Scarborough now requires a $30,000 home; that this home be built so that the taxes generated from assessment will sustain future costs of education and other services.

A two-car garage, sir, is no longer simply a status symbol in Scarborough; it has become mandatory even if you live on the GO line or subway line.

Similarly, industrial assessment is a prerequisite to housing development in the neighbouring township of Pickering. These criteria have little to do with providing homes for people. These criteria are rather the product of an antiquated municipal structure badly in need of overhaul and financial reform. This resistance and the causes for its existence must be removed if we are to provide sufficient housing and land to contain the present speculative market.

I, therefore, recommend as my leader has, that the present practice of financing up to 65 per cent of suburban school costs by real estate levies be changed. We believe that an 80 per cent/20 per cent formula, with the province assuming the major share, is much more realistic, equitable and indeed, necessary.

To finance the costs at the provincial level, Mr. Treasurer, the present government might even consider abandoning its ill-begotten basic shelter exemption in favour of such a change—the balance to be collected by corporation and personal income.

Mr. Nixon: And the rest of your ridiculous municipal grant structure has got to be made over.

Hon. T. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): Including the basic shelter exemption grant?

Mr. T. Reid: The basic shelter exemption has already been discounted for by the tenant, by rent increases and in fact, it appears to have been a contributing factor in the recent upward trend in rents in the city.

Many, many tenants, sir, including university students, are on a month-to-month lease basis and the problem of ensuring the grant to the proper recipient is an extremely difficult one.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Is the member saying all the people in Scarborough East are opposed to the grant.

Mr. T. Reid: The next time the Minister comes down to Scarborough East—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): They are in favour of rent control.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to reiterate, at this time, the position that my leader has stated concerning the federal-provincial negotiations.

I just briefly draw this to the Treasurer's memory that my leader has said that, with the readjusting of open-end programmes, with the shifting of some of these programmes to the province, that by 1970-1971, Ontario might well be receiving back 50 per cent of the total amount of the personal income tax collected.

That, sir, gives this province—gives this government—the right to negotiate the income tax base, and to have a say in what is included in that tax base. And my leader will be coming out, I know, in the—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Nothing very new about that.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, my understanding, sir, is that this government has not tried to negotiate a restructuring of the income tax base—not a separate income tax base, but a base that would be applicable to the taxes collected provincially and also federally.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Send him down to Ottawa.

An hon. member: The member has them worried there.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): What about that social development?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, as my leader has stated on occasion, he has made it quite clear that in his opinion the two per cent additional tax imposed by the federal government, called a social development tax, I believe, ought to be shared with the province.

Mr. Speaker, the cost and supply of mortgage money and financing is the next area which I think is key in any examination, sir, any responsible examination of the housing crisis in this province. It is not a responsible position of criticism to say ban the speculators, tax the mining companies out of existence and that will solve the housing crisis. The problem, sir, is complex and I wish to give my analysis to the members of this House.

In order to achieve the necessary increase in new housing across Canada, from the levels of 180,000 in 1968 to 220,000 by 1970, in accordance with the needs as projected by the Economic Council of Canada, we will require an additional $1 billion each year in residential mortgage funds.

The needs of the people of Ontario take up the greatest share of the Canadian total. Substantial new sums of money will also be required for public housing; to assist families with low and moderate incomes; for the retired and students. Therefore, much of the additional funds for residential mortgages will have to come from the private sector.

Here are some of the ways by which these funds could be generated. I daresay, sir, that these ways are within the traditions of the Liberal Party as opposed to the traditions of Conservatism or the traditions of the New Democratic Party, though I had hoped there would be some overlapping.

I would like to deal first of all with the private sector funds. Under this heading are the trust and loan companies.

Trust and loan companies could supply a substantially larger volume of funds to finance housing than they do at present if the regulating legislation were amended to permit them to borrow for terms exceeding the present limit of five years.

The present requirement of borrowing for periods of five years or less renders these lending institutions vulnerable—under certain market conditions—to loss of deposits in rising costs of money while they have been made or should be in the position to make long-term commitments on mortgages at fixed rates.

Borrowing short term and lending long term puts these lenders at the disadvantage. Further, the chartered banks, under recent changes in The Bank Act, are permitted to borrow in the capital market or subordinated long-term debentures.

I would propose that the trust and loan companies be placed in the same position as the chartered banks who have, as a result, begun to expand their supply of money into residential mortgages. This would require amending legislation at the provincial government level for those companies incorporated under Ontario statutes and, of course, at the federal level in other cases.

Another proposal for the trust and loan companies is this, sir. All trust and loan companies registered under the federal deposit insurance plan, individual depositors insured against loss of the first $20,000, should be permitted to increase their borrowing ratio from the present level of fifteen times paid up capital and reserves to 20 times those reserves.

This would represent an increase in borrowing capacity in the deposit market by 33 per cent and enable them to significantly increase lending on residential mortgages. And I believe, sir, the province of Ontario should pressure the federal government in this area.

Under the trust and loan companies still, sir—the Ontario government should suggest to the federal government and firmly suggest, that study be given to the possibility of further adjusting the debt-to-equity ratio of such companies by relating the proposition of the NHA-insured mortgages held to the total investment portfolio. Such a step would not only strengthen the quality of portfolios as debt-to-equity—

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Correctional Services for his courteous gesture just now of passing me an apple. I shall probably get to him later on. I refuse to be intimidated by a rosy apple.

An hon. member: Bribing the hon. member, eh?

Mr. T. Reid: If it is, I will have it now. My voice is giving out. I will have to watch the razor blades.

Mr. Speaker, to recapitulate before I was so pleasantly interrupted, the Ontario government should suggest to the federal government that study be given to the possibility of further adjusting the debt-to-equity ratio of such companies by relating the proportion of NHA mortgages held to the total investment portfolio. Such a step would not only strengthen the quality of portfolios as debt-to-equity ratios increased, but would also encourage an increased flow of funds to NHA-insured mortgages.

These three measures, sir, should result in increasing the capability of trust and loan companies to supply mortgage funds for housing by at least 25 per cent, quite in keeping with the 25 per cent increase required in the annual level of new housing over the next decade. These steps can be undertaken almost immediately, and entirely within sound financial considerations. Because of their high and established credit rating, their acknowledged skills in originating and administering mortgage portfolios, and their extensive branch system established throughout the country, these trust and loan companies could compete successfully in the capital market for long-term funds and play a much larger role in placing and administering housing mortgages.

They could also attract long-term foreign capital, I believe, to increase their mortgage operations in Ontario. I, sir, would have absolutely no objection to American capital coming into this country if it is in the form of a debt type of capital, instead of an ownership type of capital, and particularly if it would increase the private mortgage funds available in Canada to finance new housing.

The second aspect of the measures in the private sector to generate more private sector funds has to do, of course, with the pension and superannuation funds. I am very pleased, sir, that the hon. Provincial Treasurer is here this evening to listen to some of these suggestions and I appreciate the courtesy, although he is probably here for other reasons.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am beginning to doubt it.

Mr. T. Reid: Pension funds are the most rapidly growing form of savings flow in Canada and have the greatest potential to contribute to the financing of new housing. With few exceptions they have not participated in any significant way in the residential mortgage market. For example, in 1967, as the Treasurer knows, only nine per cent of $8 billion in trusted pension funds was in mortgages. I believe that pension funds could increase by at least fourfold the proportion of their assets invested in residential mortgages, and even then they would only equal the mortgage proportion in the portfolios of many life insurance companies.

If there are technical reasons why pension funds hold such few mortgages I would urge immediate correction of such defects. There may, for example, be certain public or private funds which operate under rigid and often archaic legislative requirements, and they deem themselves unable to purchase NHA-insured mortgages on grounds that such mortgages are not guaranteed by the government of Canada as is a government bond.

I urge study and removal of all technical and legislative impediments by action at the provincial and the federal levels, and I would draw to the attention of Ministers who are here tonight, sir, that they have a direct responsibility at the provincial level. It is an area of shared concern with the federal government. I also urge a promotional programme by this government and the federal government among pension fund managers, to encourage mortgage investment.

Thirdly, sir, still in the area of private sector funds, I would like to say a few words about the secondary mortgage market. This, of course, is a difficult area because we are getting into a very fuzzy area as to what is the provincial responsibility and what is the federal responsibility. I suggest, sir, and I know many of the Ministers agree and many members of this House agree, that when it comes to housing we must try to cut out the red tape, we must try to work together with all levels of government to solve this housing crisis, and therefore I would like to talk about the secondary mortgage market.

A trading market is important in expanding and stabilizing the total flows of mortgage financing, by enabling some holders to adjust their portfolios from time to time in accordance with investment opportunities. Some investors may wish to dispose of mortgages that are approaching maturity to others who wish to hold short-term mortgage investments, while others may trade mortgages to diversify their portfolios. Limited marketability has undoubtedly been a factor in limiting mortgage investment.

Sir, when you have a thin market, you have an uncertain market, you have an increase in uncertainty, and that actually limits the amount of funds pouring into that market. It will continue to be a limiting factor as managers of investment funds and pension funds aggressively seek maximum performance, which depends to some extent on the availability to trade securities as investment opportunities occur.

The beginnings of a secondary market in NHA now exists because of the promotional efforts of CMHC over the past five years, and I believe this is what the hon. member for Windsor West was referring to, Mr. Speaker. Mortgage auctions have been held on at least 13 occasions during which competitive bids were solicited for blocks of mortgages held by the corporation. Although these auctions have been discontinued during the past two years, a number of new investors were introduced to mortgages by way of this trading activity, which was simply a way of educating potential investors into the opportunities of a market which had up to that time been a very thin market, sir.

I believe that new efforts should be made to reactivate this market and I believe the Ontario government has a responsibility to press for these changes. It is unlikely that a secondary market of adequate dimensions would develop unless CMHC was prepared to enter the market as a buyer as well as a seller. I therefore recommend that CMHC be authorized to purchase mortgages in the secondary market and that it adopt a policy of doing so within reasonable guidelines. I do not expect CMHC to guarantee the purchase of blocks of mortgages in the market in the absence of other buyers, any more than the Bank of Canada is obliged to support the Canada bond market under all conditions. I do, however, recommend a developmental approach on the part of CMHC which would require it to demonstrate a willingness to act as a seller or buyer in the interest of stabilizing prices. This is a traditional concept, sir. In the Bank of Canada operation, it becomes seller or buyer in a last resort to stabilize a given market.

This would encourage the holding of larger mortgage portfolios by both small private investors and institutional investors concerned with liquidity. A secondary market would also tend to justify even further the recommendation to amend provincial, and of course federal, legislation to permit trust and loan companies to extend borrowing in order to lend more on NHA-insured mortgages. And it would tend to encourage pension funds to accelerate their entry into the mortgage market.

So I believe that we can do a great deal more, through incentive and through legislation—not necessarily fundamental legislation, but adjusting legislation—to get more private money into the mortgage market. I think that we should do this through the incentive system, through a penalty type of system, through making it more possible for private investors to get into the mortgage market. I think this is the area where we can move ahead quickly, through the market system, to ensure that more money enters the housing and shelter market.

I would like to turn to the fourth aspect of the programme, having to deal with solutions to the housing crisis, and this is of course in the subsidized and public housing field. In the previous section I made several proposals to increase the flow of private funds into the housing field. I would like now to comment on the needs and the volume of funds for public housing for families with low and moderate incomes. And I would like to emphasize at this point, Mr. Speaker, that although the constitutional responsibilities through public housing lie largely with the provincial government, on the whole they have failed to respond adequately to the present housing crisis.

In 1967, Ontario Housing Corporation provided 2,025 units in Metro. But it had a waiting list of at least 10,000 and although it has been argued by this government that the growth of public housing in Ontario is greater than in U.S. cities, it should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that urbanization in this province is proceeding at a 50 per cent faster rate than in the U.S. and our relative problem is much more acute.

Furthermore, judging by what is happening in the major U.S. cities of late, I do not judge this as a suitable yardstick in any case.

Now, I am aware that the federal government supplies the bulk of the capital funds for public housing up to 90 per cent; and for land assembly up to 75 per cent; and 50 per cent of the funds through subsidized rents in accordance to some of the incomes. The province of Ontario must create a really active housing authority to make utilization of these programmes.

Moreover, since housing developments must be co-ordinated with rapid transit, inter-city transit, urban services, pollution control and reasonable planning, it is imperative that the provincial government take a strong lead in planning, in creating the proper conditions, so that, with the support of federal resources, we are able to meet the needs of our urban population.

I stress the role of the provincial authorities for financial as well as constitutional reasons. The provinces collectively draw down annually from the Canada Pension Plan some $600 million. In Ontario it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the government has not carried its weight in supplying funds for new housing in relation to pension funds available, and in response to the present housing crisis in this province. In Ontario, in 1968, Mr. Speaker, the province will provide approximately $60 million out of the $400 million to be spent on Ontario housing, by Ontario Housing Corporation. I believe Ontario could utilize the Canada Pension Fund to a much greater extent to alleviate the present housing shortage in this province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? Is he aware or is he not, that the Canada Pension Funds are fully employed in loans to school boards for capital construction of the schools of this province? And to universities, through the University Capital Aid Corporation, for their construction programme? The fund is fully utilized for this purpose. If we take it away from there, for housing—

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the Minister's remarks I would like to have a detailed answer from the Minister on the actual use of the pension funds available. I would like to have a detailed breakdown on where it is going, the repayment rates from the universities—this type of thing. Now, that fund is generating returns through the operating grants from The Department of University Affairs, so it is not a fund that is just used up each year. It is a fund you know that through a trick of the hand—because of other government grants—refurbishes itself.

I think it is a question of fact that I am debating with the Minister, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see a much more detailed statement of the use of those funds than I have thus far been able to get from this government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now or later?

Mr. T. Reid: The sooner the better. On the question of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think we must have the same documents to refer to, and perhaps later on in the budget debate, the Minister and I can discuss this. But I am not satisfied that the inflow of funds, and repayments to the operating grants to the university, would not allow a substantial amount of funds to be reallocated from this. It is impossible to discuss this until one has the facts.

I would also recommend to the government, foreign borrowing in the U.S. and in Europe, to supplement Canadian funds in view of the urgent and exceptional demand for capital funds for housing in the next five to ten years. The Canadian and Ontario capital markets are already under heavy pressures from corporations, and may be unable to respond.

The quantity of public housing units immediately required is a paramount concern. We must be careful not to overlook the human aspect of this problem. I discussed some of these in my earlier remarks.

If we continue to create apartment ghettos through the so-called province of opportunity; without providing recreational facilities; or the skills necessary to mount a proper community development programme; or an appropriate dispersion throughout the somewhat mixed social, economic neighbourhood; or if we continue to treat public housing tenants as second-class citizens, subject to harassment, or in some cases without the basic right to form associations to air their grievances; we can expect to find in a few years' time that this great expenditure of public funds would have created serious social problems which will have a high cost equivalent.

I simply refer to the current series of articles in the Toronto Daily Star, on Regent Park South, which to me represents the forecast of what is going to happen to many congested Ontario housing projects throughout this city, and indeed throughout other cities. I speak with knowledge, sir. I believe that in the borough of Scarborough, there is a high concentration of Ontario Housing Corporation tenants who lack the resources to provide for themselves or to help themselves in the area of community development.

I therefore urge that the human and social aspect of public housing be given much greater consideration by this government. In particular, I recommend the following six steps:

First, more single family, and semi-detached units with fewer apartments. Second, adequate recreation and park facilities, particularly in the highly congested areas. And I would add, as I have in my earlier remarks, the need for a whole new approach to social animation or community development in these projects. The need is for these people to have access to professional skills in order to mount their own self-help programme.

Third, it has been discussed by members of this party and by members of the New Democratic Party, revision of the tenants' lease forms, to provide a basic bill of rights for tenants.

Fourth, and this is a complex area; the establishment of a down payment incentive plan. This would provide the tenant with a rising income, the option of applying part of his increasing rent to a fund to be used in purchasing his own home or shelter.

Fifth, in Metropolitan Toronto, 20,000 out of the 32,600 OHC tenants are children, and 32 per cent are single parent families: mostly single parent families, with a female at its head.

In this party we feel that at this point the most serious need is for day care centres in public housing complexes.

I was delighted to find out when I was discussing with an Ontario Housing official this morning, that in one of the new buildings they are actually building-in facilities for day care centres. I would hope that this would become part of a standard policy and that funds would be made available.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member know why that occurred? I wonder if the hon. member knows that the former—

Mr. Speaker: If the member wishes to ask a question of the member who has the floor he is entitled to do so but not to make a speech of his own.

Mr. Peacock: No, I was just indicating a question to the hon. member, if he would be kind enough to permit me to ask it.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just say to the hon. member who knows much more than I do about various aspects of public housing, that in this case the Edgely village complex south of York university has provisions for day care centres in it.

I have the feeling, Mr. Speaker, it has a lot to do with Irving Grossman who is designing it.

Finally, sir, the sixth point on public housing is that there must be, and I underline this, there must be effective tenant participation in the local administration of Ontario Housing Corporation units in order to create a sense of community.

Now the question of limited dividend housing is a thorny one. I would say this, that while limited dividend housing has been subject to severe criticism and not the least, in Scarborough particularly, east of Markham Road, I suggest that this programme given a sufficient supply of funds could generate a major expansion fairly quickly. Not the least consideration is a fact that though publicly assisted, this housing is self sustaining and particularly geared for families of moderate income as opposed to lower incomes.

I would, therefore, urge the close study of the many abuses of limited dividend housing be made and that measures be taken to correct such things as the poor quality of maintenance, the resistance to families with children in order to decrease wear and tear, the cost of maintenance and the quality of construction.

Of course, there is a built-in incentive, sir, under present regulations pertaining to limited dividend housing which encourages the owner to let the area run down, which encourages the owner to do everything he can to make sure that the maintenance costs are lower. Of course, one way of doing this is to kick the kids out.

I would like to elaborate, sir, with your blessing, on this point that I raised about the establishment of a down payment incentive plan through legislation of this body.

I think it is important to realize the following fact about Ontario Housing Corporation tenants and what happens to them. The question I would pose, sir, is this. What happens to a married man with three children living in Ontario Housing premises in Metro who increases his annual income by $100 from, say, $4,900?

The picture is this. A married man living with his wife in Ontario Housing with three children is earning $4,900. That man goes out and earns another $100. Okay, what happens? $50 of the $100 increase is taken away from him by the Ontario Housing Corporation in accelerating rent increases and, to a much smaller degree, by income tax increases. He is, in effect, sir, being taxed at a marginal rate of 50 per cent.

So, I would suggest that it is nonsense to think that only the rich in our society get hit by, what amounts to, high marginal tax rates.

The increase—about $38 of that $50—is taken away by Ontario Housing in accelerated rent increases. I agree with the hon. member that a man with that low income should not have to pay any personal income tax.

It seems to me, sir, that the policy of the Ontario Housing Corporation must be designed to offer encouragement to tenants; to seek advancement in their jobs and greater family income in order to be able to save and to buy their own homes.

This would mean, sir, the establishment of some type of down payment incentive plan which would provide the tenant, who had the opportunity of earning a greater income, the option of applying part of his increase in rent to a fund to be used in purchasing a home.

I think that is a very important provision because when you take away $50 out of an additional increase in a man's salary, at that low level in family income, you really knock all the incentive out of him.

The fifth aspect of the housing crisis lies, of course, in the cost of construction. While several attempts have been made and the objective is still being actively pursued, the lack of standardization of all building codes must remain as an important source of delay and red tape which amounts to added costs of housing.

The present building codes are too rigid and restrictive, particularly in their response to new technology. I urge the province and CMHC to take a much stronger lead in standardizing regulations in the province.

Perhaps, sir, the best course of action for the province of Ontario is to work out an agreement with the federal government, that CMHC be empowered to set up research and testing facilities. Failing this, sir, the provincial government should proceed on its own.

There are three proposals in this. To encourage the use of new and cheaper materials and to promote their acceptance by local authorities and building codes, we could do a number of things. To use one example, I point out that plastic piping, although successfully used for several years, has not found ready acceptance in many jurisdictions in this province.

Secondly, I think the re-vamped CMHC, or the separate policies of the provincial government, should be used to promote provincial standards in dimensioning such as windows, doors and cupboards.

Thirdly, function would be to test and to promote the use of prefabricated modular units such as bathrooms, kitchen units and complete homes. Although some attempts have been made by private industry such as Alcan, local building codes and resistance have prevented any major utilization. I note that the National House Builders Association is constructing an experimental home in Kitchener. I would suggest that CHMC could play a major role in winning acceptance of adequate testing products of this kind. For if CMHC would not do this, sir, I think the provincial government has a direct responsibility to do so. Local authorities do not have the facilities to undertake testing nor should this be their function. I believe the building industry would welcome such an initiative by government.

The final area has to do, sir, with transportation and regional development.

I think that this area is perhaps the most important. It requires very specific policies and a great deal of planning—forward planning and active implementation.

Rapid transit could play a major role in making additional land and satellite communities attractive for low-cost housing and private low-cost housing. Adequate land for housing, with convenient access to the city would tend to stabilize prices, rents and excessive speculation.

Mr. Nixon: The next extension about 1970, does the Treasurer figure?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, do not be concerned about that.

Mr. Reid: I would suggest, sir, to the government that I believe that federal grants for rapid transit construction would be a continuation on the part of the federal government of a long tradition of involvement in transportation. For those who would argue that these grants would be of special benefit to a few major centres in Canada, and Ontario, I would point out that they would be as defensible on economic grounds as the Pine Point railway, fishing wharves in Newfoundland or an airport in some isolated northern community and certainly no more parochial or of sectional benefit.

I believe, sir, and suggest to the hon. Treasurer, that subway and commuter rail services can no longer be considered of sectional interest.

Mr. Young: Tell that to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. T. Reid: The present practice of putting subsidized or public housing at the periphery of the city for underprivileged families is largely self-defeating when they are immediately faced with added transportation costs and great inconvenience. It is no wonder that urban renewal schemes are so difficult to get off the ground when the displaced families are expected in most cases to accept these burdens as a private burden.

It is obvious, sir, that rapid transit facilities must be built around regional planning in the use and development of land for housing. It is not likely that municipal governments would ever achieve the degree of co-operation needed to undertake rapid transit beyond their own boundaries and into satellite communities. Therefore I believe that the planning and establishment of the necessary transportation facilities will have to be undertaken by a more senior level of government, presumably the provincial government or its regional planning authority. With the removal of the causes of municipal resistance to housing, this regional planning should be politically much less difficult than at present.

Effective regional development policies, formulated and pursued vigorously by the province of Ontario, would result in more effective land use, pollution control, transportation facilities and location of industry throughout the entire province, especially the northern part of this great province. This could result in a significant decrease in the rate of housing demand within Metro, as services are extended to the outlying areas, and this would tend to stabilize prices and rents. I also believe that increased province-wide industrial growth would result, with better efficiency and productivity, if growth were dispersed a few miles out from the largest cities. The cost—in manhours in travelling on congested streets, in the provision of expressways, in damage to health by air pollution, and in the present housing crisis itself—can be roughly assessed, and it is a terrible cost.

Uncontrolled development is not inevitable in this province, it is not economically desirable and not socially desirable. In fact, if allowed by default, it could well perpetuate the present housing crisis in Metro as well as create serious social and health problems. Corrective action is necessary and overdue, and I urge the government of the province of Ontario to control development and land use, to provide transportation facilities and combat pollution, and to meet the housing needs of our people.

I would like to reiterate, sir, as my leader has stated, that we believe the crisis is so bad in certain urban areas in this province, in Ottawa, in this city, and in Scarborough, that this government should allow any municipality which requests it, the power to impose a rent control review board as a short-term measure. We are absolutely convinced that there are too many people who have been victims of the freely fluctuating prices in a market that is not really a free market, and rent control by municipalities that request it is definitely in order.

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other issues I would like to discuss at this time and my next remarks have to do with education. I have a number of things to discuss within the area of education, sir. I would like to discuss the question of student and pupil rights; I would like to discuss the question of teacher training in this province; I would like to discuss the question of the superannuation of superannuated teachers; I would like to make comments on student protest and dissent, comments on the press, comments by a former Premier of this province about students in the society; I would like to say a number of things about the student award system in this province, and I would like to discuss two private bills that I have submitted. If the House leader would like me to continue—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I think we should go on until 11 o'clock; that was our intention.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks on the theme of the civil rights of captive teenagers in the Ontario school system. And I would like to discuss three abuses. One has to do with student records. The second has to do with corporal punishment in the schools. The third has to do with the state getting involved in the bedrooms of this province, that is to say, how children dress before they go to school and how they comb their hair. And the fourth has to do with the basic fact that by the Minister of Education in this province taking effective action in these areas there would not be any necessary undercutting of the authority of the teachers in the classrooms of this province, which has often been alleged to be the case.

The first thing then, sir, in this area, has to do with student records. I would like to put it into a broad context. I think we can start by setting the framework, by looking at the Ontario Human Rights Code. This code, which is a statute of this Legislature, states that one of its two aims is to make secure in law the inalienable rights of every citizen. We all know that the Premier of this province likes that statements very much and quotes it very often. However, the statements in this House of his Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), and of his Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) concerning school records and the use of those records, must make the Premier realize how empty his fine words are of any real meaning.

The human rights code, Mr. Speaker, also states:

Recognition of the inherent dignity and equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of human freedom, justice and peace.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General and the Minister of Education of this province, through lack of leadership and policy, and lack of knowledge of what is meant by "the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of individuals," have not only allowed a fundamental right of individual teenagers in this province to be transgressed, but have refused to take decisive action to prevent their rights from being transgressed in the future.

I maintain, sir, that the spirit of the code of human rights in Ontario has been transgressed in the matter of school records—if not in the letter of the code, certainly in the spirit. I state this in an absolute sense, as well as in the relative sense that the pupils of our schools have been discriminated against on the basis of age and station. What reasons do I have for saying this, sir? Well, the teenagers in our schools are captive within the school system. Their actions and behaviour are observed and recorded. Unlike their elders they are compelled by law to be captive; they cannot protect themselves from such systematic scrutiny.

The lack of action in the statements by the Attorney General and the Minister of Education concerning school records in this House is to be condemned. Philosophically, and as a Liberal, I condemn them absolutely for putting a system over the rights of the individual. I urge the Prime Minister of this province to acknowledge that Ontario should lead the way in the national acceptance of a Canadian charter of human rights as part of a revised Canadian constitution, so that individuals, such as our young people in school, can have their inalienable rights, including the right to privacy and liberty, protected under our Constitution, as opposed to being dependent on the whim of any particular government, controlled at any particular time by a particular political party. A constitutionally entrenched bill of rights, sir, would guarantee the fundamental freedom of the individual from government interference, federal or provincial.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I wonder if the hon. member would move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. T. Reid moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, I understand the Whips have arranged a private members' hour from 12 to 1 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1968

The House met at 10.00 o'clock a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: In the east gallery, from Emery Junior High School, Weston; and in the west gallery now and later students from Etobicoke Collegiate Institute, Etobicoke; from Woodbine Junior High School, Don Mills, and Prince of Wales School, Barrie.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Henderson from the standing orders and printing committee presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petition and finds the notices, as published sufficient:

Of the Board of Education of the city of Windsor praying that an Act may pass approving completion and equipment of Centennial Secondary School and authorizing the issue of the necessary debentures by the city of Windsor.

Your committee further recommends that the unanimous consent of the House be given to waive Rule 78 (a) so that the bill may appear before the private bills committee without the necessity of five days' clear notice of the sitting of the private bills committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

CITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has a statement.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 2 I announced that a review of regional government for the Sudbury area would be undertaken. At that time I also had the pleasure of informing this House that the chairman of The Ontario Municipal Board, Mr. J. A. Kennedy, QC, would direct this study and report his findings to me in from six to eight months. I am now in a position to read to the hon. members the terms of reference under which the Sudbury regional government study will be made.

Acting under section 10 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, the chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board, Mr. J. A. Kennedy, QC, is requested to inquire into and to report to the Minister of Municipal Affairs upon:

(a) The structure, organization and method of operation of the municipalities of: the city of Sudbury; the towns of Capreol; Chelmsford; Coniston; Copper Cliff; Levack; and Lively; the townships of Balfour; Blezard; Capreol and Hanmer; Casimir, Jennings and Appleby; Cosby, Mason and Maitland; Dowling; Drury, Denison and Graham; Falconbridge; Hagar; Neelon and Garson; Ratter and Dunnet; Rayside; and Waters; and the improvement district of Onaping; and of the local boards of all said municipalities;

(b) The possible structure, organization and method of operation for local government purposes in the geographic townships of: Allen; Attlee; Awry; Bevin; Bigwood; Bowell; Broder; Burwash; Caen; Cartier; Cascaden; Cherriman; Cleland; Cox; Creighton; Davis; Delamere; Dieppe; Dill; Dryden; Eden; Fairbank; Foy; Goschen; Haddo; Halifax; Harty; Hawley; Hendrie; Henry; Hess; Hoskin; Janes; Kelly; Kilpatrick; Laura; Levack; Lorne; Lougaurin; Louise; Lumsden; Maclellan; McNish; Morgan; Norman; Rathbun; Roosevelt; Sale; Servos; Scadding; Scolard; Secord; Snider; Stalin; Street; Struthers; Tilton; Travers; Trill; Truman; Waldie; Wisner;

(c) All aspects of the functions and responsibilities of local government institutions within the said area, with particular reference to planning and the future development thereof;

(d) The re-organization or revision of the existing system of local government in the area required by the anticipated future development of the area;

(e) The effect of policies and operations of the national and provincial governments upon the responsibilities and resources of local government therein;

(f) Any other related matters, including an examination of boundaries, affecting the local government structure within the area.

By way of explanation, Mr. Speaker, I should note that the initial area we propose for study runs east from Sudbury to the Sudbury-Nipissing district border, north from Sudbury for three tiers of geographic townships, south from Sudbury to the Sudbury-Manitoulin, Sudbury-Parry Sound district border, and west from Sudbury for four sets of these townships. This is a larger area than that covered by the recent Nickel Basin planning study, since our examination of this study and other material has convinced us that the Sudbury sphere of immediate interest is probably considerably wider. This definition of the regional government study area is, of course, open to amendment as Mr. Kennedy's work progresses.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most serious questions posed in any regional government study is the financial base of local government. In this case I am referring particularly to the issue of assessment and taxation of mining properties and the related subject of mining revenue payments to designated municipalities.

This has been the subject of considerable study over the last few years. Hon. members will recall that a special committee study on mining revenue payments led to a substantial increase in these two years ago, although this was viewed purely as an interim measure. Subsequently, the Ontario committee on taxation recommended wide-ranging changes in revenue payments and the method of taxing mining companies.

The recent select committee also proposed a revised scheme coupling the assessment and taxation of certain mining properties and a reformed mining revenue grant. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I have received more views, advice, briefs and representations on this subject than on any other comparable topic since assuming this portfolio.

In order to clarify the picture for the study of regional government in Sudbury and area, I wish to state our intention of broadening the tax base in the study area. To this end I will, in the near future, introduce an amendment to The Assessment Act to provide that the processing assets of mining companies will be assessable in 1969 for taxation in 1970.

During 1969 the existing mining revenue payment system will continue. After processing assets of mining companies become taxable, changes will be necessary in our mining revenue payment formula. Before these changes are made we will, of course, re-examine the entire concept of mining revenue payments including those changes proposed by the select committee, the Association of Mining Municipalities of Northern Ontario, and others.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of clarification only. I wonder if the Minister would tell the House if the appointment of Mr. Kennedy will curtail his responsibilities at the municipal board?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs is as follows:

Can the Minister inform the House as to the date when regional government is scheduled to be implemented in the Windsor and Essex county areas?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, as I stated in the House last week, our regional government system will be implemented on a staged priority basis. The city of Windsor was recently expanded to include large areas of suburban and potential urban development. Digesting the effects of this will occupy the city for some time to come. In addition, the county of Essex continues to be a prosperous and financially viable county.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, regional government will come to the Windsor-Essex area but we are now concentrating our attentions in regions where the problems are greater. However, if the hon. member has views on regional government in his area or if he is aware of any moves in this direction I would be glad to discuss the subject with him at any time.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, may I specifically ask the Minister for a date so that he can mention some day as to when the area can expect regional government to be implemented by his department.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If the hon. member would refer to Design for Development, phase two, he would find that there is no date and I cannot give him one.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I may again. This just carries on indefinitely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is entitled to ask questions but not to comment on answers. He has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have and it is this: does the Minister intend to amend The Highway Traffic Act governing the use of flashing lights in speed zones under 35-miles-an-hour? This was brought about as a result of a recent death in the Harwich township area around Chatham.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, proposals for amendments to The Highway Traffic Act are now being considered.

The wide ranging report on school bus construction, equipment and operation prepared for and approved in principle by our recent Ministers conference, is now being considered by the officials in the various provinces with a view to obtaining as much uniformity as possible in our school bus laws.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question of the Minister of Mines.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister.

Having had an opportunity to read the Ontario Water Resources Commission analysis of the Fecunis Mill drinking water problem, will the Minister advise the House what action he will take to ensure that the recommendations contained in the report are carried out?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I have read, with interest, the letter dated December 6 addressed to the hon. member which he was good enough to send over to me, relating to some samples submitted to the water resources commission by him and we have been in contact with the commission, both before and since the receipt of that letter and the raising of the matter in the House.

The commission has informed us, as they have informed the member, that the district staff of the commission is doing an inspection tour and they will be inspecting the water in the mill at that time and they will be providing us, and presumably also providing the hon. member, with the results of that inspection and that analysis. At that time, we will assess what pressures we have to bring on the water resources commission or others as a result of that inspection and that analysis.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Prime Minister, I wonder if I might redirect it to the Attorney General?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to redirect it to the Attorney General, he may do so through Mr. Speaker's office.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE DEBATE

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, there are two things that I would like to note before continuing with my remarks about the theme of civil rights of captive teenagers in the Ontario school system. The first has to do with the lengthy remarks I made yesterday concerning the need for reform of the procedures of this House.

I simply state that this House is vastly different from the federal House. I think that in the federal House, the Opposition parties have too long dominated the debate whereas in this House, the exact opposite is true. So I think we must be careful in trying to draw analogies between the federal House and reform there and this House.

The second question, sir, has to do with a matter of much more urgent importance. It has to do with high school students; it has to do with the arbitrary decision of the Minister of Education to extend the examination dates of the high school students in this province. This has to do with the theme of civil rights and decision making and I would like to deal with it directly now.

The vast majority of the high school students in Metro are beginning to squirm. They are agitated; they are up-tight by an arbitrary decision to extend to school year in the current year. The students are in anger.

The provincial Department of Education announced earlier this week that high school examinations next June will not start until June 16, compared with June 3 in the past. Students maintain that the extension will damage their chances of getting summer jobs and this, of course, Mr. Speaker, will damage their opportunities of going to university because of the present Ontario student awards programme which demands summer earnings from students going on to post-secondary education in this province.

Some students, sir, have started to gather petitions; other student leaders urge that letters protesting the badly planned change be sent to the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis); and there have been rumours of high school strikes to protest the plan going into effect in the current year.

For example sir, Douglas Bonesteel, a 17-year-old student council president at Royal York Collegiate in Etobicoke says that while his council has not authorized to strike, but as he put it, "things might soon be popping".

Paul McCourt 16, a student at Winston Churchill Collegiate in Scarborough says he already has 904 signatures on a petition, as of this morning, and in North York the president of the intercollegiate student council, William Michie, 17, says he hopes that the education Minister will soon face 5,000 envelopes on his desk, protesting both against the arbitrary nature of the decision and its badly planned implementation for this year.

The study of this particular decision by the Minister throws light on a number of aspects of The Department of Education and I would like to deal with those now.

The first—I hope the Minister will be able to reply to these—were the senior officials of the boards of education across Ontario consulted as to the timing of such notification? Were they canvassed as to their opinions?

I think, sir, that an extension in the school year must come. There is no question of that but the point is, how that decision is made, how it is implemented and whether co-ordinated steps in other areas such as the Ontario student awards programme—OSAP—are adjusted with this particular decision.

There is also the cost factor involved. This is very important, sir. The Department of Education and the local boards of education across this province have invested millions of dollars, millions of the taxpayers' dollars in very sophisticated data processing operations and it is my understanding that one of the prime usages of the computers is to produce the report cards. Furthermore, it is my understanding that with the increased school term, in the current year, being announced at such a late date, the report cards will not be able to be done on the computers. This, sir, is just plain lousy planning—high cost planning.

Another point concerning this case study, if you like, is that we all know that last summer, the lack of job opportunities for secondary school students was of an extreme concern. Now because of the timing involved with the announcement of the extension of the school term, by the Minister of Education, students who have positions waiting for them are concerned that these positions will be filled by students from the universities and from the CAATS, a sort of student "scabbing" if you like created by the decision of The Department of Education.

One way that fair play can be granted in this instance is to bring about an immediate change in the OSAP provisions that require a student to have summer earnings, particularly students graduating out of Grade 13 looking for places in our post secondary institutions.

Another point, sir, in this regard is that The Department of Education should certainly realize that the curriculum in the high schools across this province is set up at the beginning of the year and spread equally into the school year. Now with the proposed change coming in mid year this will cause tremendous problems of rescheduling by the staffs of secondary schools throughout the province. This, sir, is not only expensive, it lowers the quality of education in our schools—if this particular decision is put into effect in the current school year.

Another aspect of the problem, sir, is this. It would certainly be interesting to know from the Minister of Education how the local school administrators will be able to cope with the problem of students in Grade 13 who are aware that they have earned entrance into university by June 10—give or take a few days. In other words, on June 10, a great many Grade 13 students will be made aware that they are successful in making their year and that they have been accepted by a university in this province. Then they would be obliged by this extension which applies to the current year to remain in school for another approximately two weeks, and this I suggest would cause problems far beyond any expectations that the Minister's mandarins might have had.

It is another example of the unco-ordinated non-planning that the Minister's department engages in. It would appear once again that the administration of the local school board and the senior staff were not consulted prior to The Department of Education releasing the memo extending the school year. I shall try to get in touch with the Minister to ask him whether or not it will be possible for myself and the critic from the New Democratic Party, the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman), to receive copies of briefs that we understand are being presented to the Minister from local student councils and principals' associations throughout the province, after they have been presented to the Minister.

To underline the key points at issue, sir, I would like to state that this type of decision making, where all of a sudden some bright guy has an idea to extend the school year—the lack of planning, lack of an examination of the implications, the ramifications of that particular decision on the people involved by the decision—is a type of government decision making which I hoped had long gone out of date in the type of government that we practice in this province and in this country. If decisions are to be made, the people affected must be consulted, their views must be canvassed and in that way government decisions can be better decisions, can be more meaningful to the people that are affected by them, and perhaps equally important, such decisions will be much less costly.

The question I brought up about the use of computers is a basic question. That will necessitate additional costs in the school boards' expenditures this year if the Minister's arbitrary decision to extend the school year goes into effect this year. I would like to underline, sir, that I am not saying that the school year should not be extended; but I am saying that it requires examination, it requires consultation with school trustees, with the directors of the boards, and perhaps, indeed, with the students, to canvass their ideas.

We may well be getting to the point in our educational system where we will have to go to a full year's system. But to try to implement a decision like that in the way in which the Minister has tried to implement his decision to extend the school year this year, is to fly in the face of reality and the modern planning that is demanded by modern government.

I would like to continue my remarks concerning the civil rights of captive teenagers in the Ontario school system. Last night when I introduced this subject I noted that the Ontario Human Rights Code, in my opinion, had been infringed upon by the actions of this government, in spirit, if not in the letter of the law. I noted that the Premier of this province likes to talk about the Ontario Human Rights Code and feels it is a very good measure. But then I will point out that the Minister of Education of this province and, indeed, the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), probably because of a lack of awareness of what is meant by human rights, have infringed upon that code, or rather certainly on the spirit of that code.

This question of the rights of certain groups in our society—in this case teenagers, who are required by law to be in the school system—must be seen as part and parcel of the whole question of human rights and civil rights in our country. Therefore, I, as my leader has done, urge the Premier (Mr. Robarts) of this province to acknowledge that Ontario should lead the way in the national acceptance of a Canadian charter of human rights as part of a revised Canadian constitution. So that individuals, such as our young people in schools, can have their inalienable rights, including the right to privacy and liberty, protected under our constitution, as opposed to being dependent on the whim of any particular government, controlled at any particular time by any particular political party. A constitutionally entrenched bill of rights would guarantee the fundamental freedom of the individual from government interference—federal or provincial.

Individual rights ought not to be submitted to a vote. They ought not to depend on the outcome of elections.

In the proposal for a Canadian charter of human rights, prepared by the then Justice Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the following statement is included, and I quote directly:

Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. The exercise of this freedom, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to conditions and restrictions as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society for the protection of the reputation or rights of others or and I underline this, Mr. Speaker, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence.

In the specific context of individual rights and pupils' records, what I have quoted can be put this way. Teachers, school officials and Department of Education officials have access to pupils in school. They write down information and views about these young people and build up a file on each individual. This information is both of an academic nature, which is much more objective, and also other types of information that is also highly subjective. A great deal of this information is collected without, of course, the consent of the individual pupil. They are required by law to be in the school, they have given no one the consent to record their opinion on their personal behaviour.

I can think of no better example in our society today of information received in confidence. Where are the laws of the Conservative government of Ontario preventing the disclosure, outside of the educational field, of this information received in confidence? Instead, here is the policy of the Conservative government, as expressed by the Attorney General of June 28, 1968, in this Legislature:

There is no privilege accorded for this type of information.

The Minister was referring to the pupils' accumulative school files. He continues:

I can think of situations where it would be most cogent and most valuable as evidence.

The Minister of Education, sir, commented in this House on July 4, 1968:

The question of information and the law is a very complicated one.

And listen to this, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education of this province said:

—and I do not think I am qualified to get into that aspect of the question of school records.

What does this amount to? It amounts to this, in my opinion. The education Minister of this province says he is inept in giving leadership in this area. The Attorney General comes very close to saying that there should be no privilege accorded for this type of information; and the Prime Minister of this province has the sheer gall to go around saying that our laws, the laws of this province, the laws of the Conservative government over the past 25 years and the statutes of this province, should make secure the inalienable rights of every citizen.

Sir, that is nonsense! If the disclosure of information, received in confidence on pupils in our schools, is not a transgression of the young persons' inalienable rights to privacy, then I would like to know a better example.

I wonder if the Attorney General and the Minister of Education have read a recent publication entitled "Living and Learning". It is the report prepared at the request of the government. On page 170 of this report in a chapter entitled "Fundamental Issues in Education":

An important issue emerges in connection with new methods of data processing and information retrieval. Facts about a pupil, measurements of his performance, and even judgments regarding his character and potentialities may be recorded and stored. Such records should be treated as confidential, so that private information is not released or used without consent of the individual concerned. The possibility that information about a person may prove damaging is not to be treated lightly.

I submit that both the Attorney General and the Minister of Education of this province have treated this matter very lightly indeed.

The Hall-Dennis report also deals with the broader question, sir, of what can be called the access of the law courts to this information—that is, access to student records outside of the school system. The Hall-Dennis report states:

Who knows what category of people might be segregated for special attention in an unforeseeable future, merely on the basis of the cards spewed out by an electronic sorter.

Sir, I feel very strongly on this issue, as many members know. The official Opposition—and indeed my leader—have repeatedly brought to the attention of this government a fundamental issue on which the government of this province must have a clearcut stand and policy. Where is that policy?

I would remind the citizens of this province, sir, that what this government does or does not do is in the name of each and every citizen of this province. The questions that must be answered with regard to student records are complex questions; they demand complex responses and complex regulations. I will not go into all the questions, sir, but some of the questions are these: What type of information should not be recorded on the student's record at all? For example, should there be recorded on the student's record that the student dresses in a way that is unbecoming to a business man, to mention a recent example? Or should that type of information not be allowed to be accumulated on the student history over a period of 11 or 12 or 13 years in the school system?

Secondly, who should make these judgments about the students? Should it be an 18-year-old or a 17-year-old in her first year of teaching in a primary school, who sits down and writes about a ten-year-old or nine-year-old in her class that little Johnny is uncouth, little Johnny does not co-operate in class and it really looks as though little Johnny is a rather useless citizen. Should that person have the right to write down on a pupil's record—on a young person's record, a person who is captive within an observation system—this type of comment, sir? That is the second fundamental question.

The third type of question: Who should have access to the total pupil file? Should it be any teacher in the school? Should it be all the school trustees? Should it be the local MPP, the local MP, the police, the juvenile court, the welfare agency? Who should not have the right to look at that information? Who decides on what type of information is available to whom—the principal, the guidance teacher, the vice-principal, or who is it? Is it the trustee? Who makes this type of decision, and what type of person ought to, and what regulations must we have to prevent the information that is accumulated on a young person in a very formative stage of his life from being recorded?

And finally, sir, the question which arises in addition, because of the computerization of this type of information, is: What safeguards should be taken concerning the storage of the computerized information, information which is both academic and information, which is highly subjective, and is often made by people who are untrained in any sense except that they are teachers? They are not trained psychologists, they are not trained psychiatrists at all.

So if you have a computer, and if each of the boards of education in this province has a computer—each of the new boards of education, the bigger boards of education, has this type of information stored on computers, perhaps stored on the Minister's regional computer centres, which are mentioned in the university presidents' report—who should have access to those computer files and what safeguards must be set up to make sure that only the people legally entitled to have access to that information can actually see that information?

The fundamental problem here—and I predict this before leaving the subject of school records and teenagers' civil rights—is this: It is much easier to protect this type of what I call privileged information if the institution has its own computer and no other person or no other organization uses that computer. The problem of protecting privileged information becomes acute when you have a regional computer centre where universities, businesses, research centres and other community agencies have access to that computer, because you get into a problem of people being able to get at information that they might not be legally entitled to get at. It becomes very easy; it is a question of propinquity, if you like.

These are the fundamental questions we must look at. I suggest, sir, that they are urgent questions. The leader of the Opposition and myself, and I am sure the education critic for the New Democratic Party, believe that this is a fundamental issue the Minister of Education must live up to and face very squarely.

The second aspect of what I call the civil liberties and civil rights of teenagers captive in our education system has to do, sir, with corporal punishment. We have had in this House questions and responses concerning corporal punishment in the school system, and to some extent the position of the government has been clarified.

But I would like to deal with this question to judge whether or not the Minister has adequately responded to this issue, to judge, sir, indirectly, as I noted last night, whether the question period, whether the system of debate and discussion in this House, and in the committees of this House, is sufficient to enable the Opposition to make its voice known effectively to the government and to the people of this province.

I do not want to call it a strapping debate because it was not a debate I could participate in, except through questions and interruptions which were quite outside the rules of this House. It was not a debate because the Opposition is perverted in a sense, in that it is forced to use pea-shooters on fundamental issues, and the government has all the cards, all the mass media, it can manage the news, and manage the order of business of this House.

Let me go through the case history of strapping because it brings to light both the issue and the other side of the question of civil liberties of teenagers captive in our education system, and it also brings to light, I think, the very interesting question of the extent to which we in the Opposition cannot, by the rules of this House, perform the function that we are supposed to perform in a democratic system. I would like to take the members back to the question I asked the Minister on December 2, in this House, page 269 of Hansard. I asked the Minister at that time, Mr. Speaker, this: "How many straps have been purchased by Ontario schools so far in 1968?" The hon. Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I guess I will not provoke any sort of discussion, I will just say to the hon. member that this information is not available to the department. Our grant regulations do not incorporate within the operating or capital grant structure any amount for the purchase of straps within the school system. We do not know.

My comment on that, sir, is this, and this is the only chance I have to debate with the Minister on his statements because I cannot get up and debate with him in the question period. So I am carrying on a debate with him now.

I find it an incredible reason for not having information about the school system. Think of what the Minister replied. He said:

I do not know about this aspect of education in Ontario because we do not make specific grants in that particular area.

Sir, that, as a principle of administration of education in this province, is utterly unbelievable.

Then I asked the Minister—which has a much wider application to all aspects—in other words, does the Minister mean that I should not ask him questions? I should not try to get him into a debate on an aspect of education in this province, unless the Minister has a specific grant tied to that aspect of education, for the material goods?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): That is what the estimates are for.

Mr. T. Reid: I will carry on my debate today, if you do not mind.

Mr. Shulman: Go ahead, debate with yourself.

Mr. T. Reid: I think that is a question, sir, that must be faced up to. I suppose, to answer the hon. member for High Park, and I ask him to think about this seriously, that if I did, in the estimates, try to bring up a question, as a number of us in the Opposition benches did, questions that did not relate to expenditures in that budget, we would be ruled out of order.

An hon. member: That is right!

Mr. Shulman: And it would be out of order.

Mr. T. Reid: So this is the only time that one has an opportunity of discussing questions that do not relate to direct expenditures by this government. I would point out to the member for High Park—I only wish he had been here for the first 20 minutes of my remarks last night—how I feel. The Opposition in this party cannot perform its valid functions because of the rules and regulations of this Legislature.

I would suggest to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker—I know he was very tired after his own monumental effort—that he read Hansard for last night and perhaps we could have lunch and discuss it.

So I suggest that the principle the education Minister evoked for not having information in this regard is an invalid principle of administration.

Then I asked the Minister, as a supplementary question, does the Minister believe in corporal punishment?

Well, the Minister did not want to get into this, but he did reply. This is on page 269, so every member has a chance to read the entire text. I cannot quote it entirely. The Minister said: "Obviously it cannot be answered".

And I said:

Do I understand correctly from the Minister's remarks that he accepts no responsibility for schools of Ontario purchasing straps?

Then the Minister said:

Sir—Mr. Speaker, I would make it abundantly clear that the department does not provide finances whereby straps may or may not be purchased by the schools. I thought that even for the hon. member my answer was relatively clear and I have said nothing more or nothing less.

Well let me come to the next day—page 305 in Hansard, December 3. I had submitted to you, sir, a number of questions relating to corporal punishment in the schools. Then the Minister, as is his right under the present rules of this House, stood up and made a statement—which again was not outside the rules of this House—relating directly to the questions of corporal punishment in the schools. I will not get into the issue I raised on a point of personal privilege later on.

Let me just take the issues that the Minister discussed. The Minister began his statement with the following remarks. He acknowledges sir:

Corporal punishment was condoned under section 40, subsection 1(b) of Ontario Regulation 339-66.

What this means, sir, is that the Minister of Education has condoned corporal punishment ever since he became Minister of Education in this province.

And then he has the sheer gall to think that because he simply re-interprets this subsection and recommends, to use the Minister's own term; "that principals and teachers refrain from its—that is, corporal punishment—use" that henceforth and evermore his wishes will be carried out by the principals and teachers in our schools.

Beside being another example of the Minister's gall, it reflects the way the Minister believes the system of education ought to work, should work in this province. That theory is that the Minister need only speak—there is no need to make any laws and everyone falls in line throughout the education system in this province.

Now this may, of course, be a completely unfair interpretation. The real interpretation may be that the principals and teachers of Ontario do not give a damn what the Minister says unless, of course, he changes the laws and regulations.

If this is the correct interpretation, then the Minister of Education is just kidding, not only himself, but us and the news media, when he issues recommendations. If the Minister is really serious in wanting corporal punishment removed from the schools of this province, then all he has to do is re-write section 40, subsection 1(b) of Ontario Regulation 339-66 to read perhaps, "a pupil shall submit to discipline other than corporal punishment".

But he does not provide such leadership, apparently on the grounds that his grant regulations do not incorporate any allowance for the purchase of straps within the school system. I cannot understand the Minister's logic. I cannot understand how the Minister can switch his position from day to day in this very inconsistent way.

To state the Minister's position in the fairest way I can, I believe he personally does not believe in corporal punishment. I certainly accept that, sir. I am not questioning that and that he is trying to do something about it. He is recommending to the principals and teachers that corporal punishment is not a valid way of disciplining students in our school system.

The point, and just leave this in your mind, sir, is this; one can place two interpretations on this. A ministerial recommendation means either one or two things.

One, it means that the Minister thinks he can make these recommendations and everyone will fall in line throughout the whole education system in this province.

If that interpretation is correct, sir, then I again suggest it is an invalid principle of administration of The Department of Education in this province.

The other interpretation is that what the Minister says and what the Minister recommends—what the Minister says in public speeches and what the Minister makes a law—are two different things.

In any case, sir, in terms of corporal punishment in the schools, either of those two positions is completely out of touch with the way our system of education ought to operate.

Let me continue this case study. December 3 again, on page 306, after the Minister made a statement, I got my questions in. The second question I asked him on that day was:

How many strappings were administered in the 1967-68 school year to children attending schools which receive financial assistance from the Minister's department? How many children received these strappings? How many were girls? How many of these children received medical treatment as a consequence of such strappings?

Again, the Minister replied, sir:

Mr. Speaker, The Department of Education does require a substantial amount of information from the local school boards relating to their day-to-day operations. Their economic problems, questions of quality—I will return to that—etc. I must say to the hon. member that we do not require from each school in the province of Ontario, the number of young people who have been disciplined by a particular teacher; how many of them happen to be young men or young ladies and quite frankly, I am just not in a position to give that information to the hon. member. We do not have it.

I submit, sir, that surely on an issue such as corporal punishment, a policy by the Minister that amounts to "see no evil, hear no evil" is unbelievable.

To put it in an extreme form, he probably knows how many pencils there are in the school system, but he does not know how many beatings have been recorded in the log books of the schools of this province.

And I suggest, sir, that the schools do keep log books. I suggest they do, because the Minister requires them to keep log books on corporal punishment in the school. And I suggest that he ought to be able to get this information. He cannot hide his head in the sand.

For that reason, I placed that question on the order paper. I asked the Minister:

Does the Minister of Education of Ontario agree with city of Toronto schools trustee William T.

Ross, that corporal punishment in the city schools smacks of class distinction? That is that the incidence of strapping is higher for children from low-income homes than for children from higher-income homes.

The Minister replied:

I think, with great respect, that for the hon. member to ask me whether I agree or disagree with a trustee of the Toronto school board who may, or may not, have facts that are not available to me, really is asking a great deal. I just do not have the information upon which trustee Ross based his opinion. So obviously I am in not in a position to give one of my own.

Mr. Speaker, that is a fair question, but it raises to my mind the question about the ability of the Minister's officials to supply him with relevant documents from the various schools boards, from the various educational groups in this province.

Surely, when a report commissioned by the school board of the city of Toronto comes out, the Minister's executive assistant, if he is an active assistant, should get the Minister a copy and write a summary of the copy for him.

And this, sir, was a report that came out a good four days before I asked the Minister that particular question. It was a report, sir, that said last year in Toronto the total strappings recorded in the log books of the schools were 2,155. I suggest that if the Minister does not know about these reports four days after they have come out, there is something wrong in the administration of his department in keeping the Minister of Education of this province informed. Mr. Speaker, we are quite willing to accept the question, and form a clarification.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to hear them, because the member makes very valuable comments on the odd occasion.

Mr. E. Dunlop (York-Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, I simply said that his question referred to the opinion of the Minister referring to a question of class distinction, not numbers of strappings.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct, and perhaps I have had tried to make too much out of my case on insufficient evidence. It seems to be the habit of some people in this House, and I am honoured that the member took the trouble to correct me.

But I would like to say that I did ask the Minister about the number of strappings in Ontario, if not specifically in the city of Toronto. The Minister said he did not know, and that he could not get this information.

I would make the general point on this particular example, sir, that the Minister should have these reports. Perhaps he did have that report and I would have appreciated in his answer a statement that he had read the summary of it, or was aware of the report, or perhaps had seen just the newspaper report of it, and that he was considering it.

The final aspect of this type of debate, sir, that I am forced into as member of the Opposition, brings me to refer the hon. member to my remarks last night. I do not wish to worry those members with us last night, concerning the way the Opposition is muzzled by the rules and regulations of this House.

An hon. member: How many hours is it now?

Mr. T. Reid: This is why I have to talk. I do not want to talk, Mr. Speaker, I really do not want to have to stand up here and talk for six hours.

An hon. member: Why is he doing it?

Mr. T. Reid: Because there are so few opportunities of being able to speak in this House, being able to carry on effective debate. I am trying to make you people believe this, because you are going to sit over here four years from now.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat the concept that I have about democracy in this House for the hon. member who is very much concerned with these problems, I know. I simply think this: The official Opposition is just as important to the operation of government as a government party. I quote at length on this subject. I would assume, of course, the member for High Park would not know much about it.

The point simply is that the Opposition has functions to fulfill in a democratic society, a society which has a democratic form of party parliamentary government, and unless the Opposition is provided with meaningful opportunities to debate as opposed to standing up and making monologues, like the one I am making, like Ministers make, then the quality of government in this province suffers. I just state that, in terms of the wisdom of the people I read last night, including Ivor Jennings and J. Corry, who is a man for whom I have great respect.

So I would just like to reply that I do not like this technique of making my views known. I think it is a very bad method of debating; it is not a debate at all but we in the Opposition party are forced into this. And, therefore, when the opportunity comes, I intend to make my views known and to record it for what it is worth in answering.

To continue with the question of corporal punishment, of strapping teenagers in the school system, I would like to refer to page 388 of Hansard for Dec. 5. I asked the Minister:

Would the Minister consider establishing specifications concerning the length, width, thickness, weight, substance and flexibility of straps that are currently being purchased by schools. If so, would the Minister consider varying such specifications depending on the sex, age and size of the children who expect to be strapped?

Sir, I would not have asked this question if the Minister had rewritten section 40, subsection 1b, of Ontario Regulation 339-66, instead of speaking or shouting pious statements. But the sad fact is that school straps are still being sold by the company that produces them. And they are being sold to school principals and the Minister has no regulation apparently, on the basis of his answer to my question, concerning the size of these straps.

I will not bother recording these answers here, short of saying that he ended up with words to the effect that obviously I believe in corporal punishment in the schools. I wish to clarify the records, sir, because I had no opportunity at that time to debate with the Minister; I just sat here and listened to his answer. The only way I could debate with him was in a perverted form of supplementary question:

No I do not think there is any need; I think the matter has been stated very clearly, Mr. Speaker.

If I do not have an opportunity in a perverted question period to debate the Minister on an issue like this, an issue that I think is important as an elected representative of some people in this province, then I must take an opportunity like this to debate with what the Minister said. If I do not, then the record stands incorrect.

It is not a question of privilege, it is a question of debate, it is a question of clarifying the issue, a question of showing this government that some of its laws and regulations are out of date and that they should be changed. I suggest, sir, that that question was fundamental—I have placed that question on the order paper—because if this Minister, if this Department of Education, does not have regulations concerning the width, the length, the weight, the size, the flexibility of straps, then it means the principal can go and buy what amounts to a bull whip and really whack a kid.

If there are regulations, why did the Minister not reply and say, "Mr. Speaker, I object to the question because I have made my moral position on this question known to the people of the province that I do not condone corporal punishment in schools, but nevertheless the member is right, the straps are still being purchased by school principals and because they are still being purchased, because we have not changed that regulation, we must have regulations concerning size and length, and so forth, of those straps." I suggest, sir, that the Minister did not face up to the reality of what is happening in this province concerning corporal punishment and teenagers.

I shall leave the question of corporal punishment and teenagers' rights, sir, with the statement that I firmly believe—and I know there are many people, professional people in the secondary-primary school systems, who believe—that you cannot make people reasonable by beating them; that in our education system that just does not work. The point is that the abolition of corporal punishment in our schools by a law, by regulation, would not in my opinion undercut the ability of a teacher to teach within the school system.

A number of people have phoned me, saying, "If you take the last resort of strapping away from us we cannot maintain control over our classes." I submit, sir, that the problem of a real learning class situation has very little to do with the question of corporal punishment. The problem of a teacher being able to participate in the learning process of pupils in the school system has to do with things such as the quality of the teacher, the ability of the teacher to teach, to draw the students out, to involve them in the learning process, the size of the classroom, the structure of the classroom and the extent to which teachers are overworked.

To argue that corporal punishment is necessary as a measure of last resort to ensure that discipline is maintained in the classroom situation, is to attack the problem of what is happening in our education system from the wrong point of view.

To conclude that I would like to quote from a letter to the editor in the Toronto Daily Star, December 10, 1968. This is a letter by Eleanor Silver, Heathview Avenue, in Toronto:

When an educator stands over a child with a strap he only teaches the child that he, the teacher, is bigger and stronger. That is hardly the way to gain a child's respect. Children must be able to explore, investigate and discover for themselves the wondrous world around them. Only then can learning in school be a joyous experience. Undoubtedly, their frustrations because of the archaic educational system typifies the response by another person, about the devilish pupil behaviour that this other person had experienced.

Well, sir, I just conclude, if the Minister really does want corporal punishment abolished from the school system, he must not assume that just because he speaks everyone will fall into line and all the straps will be burned in a big bonfire and no new straps will be purchased. If he really wants to do something, he will bring in the regulation, he will offer the leadership this province requires in education, and will cut out corporal punishment.

The third aspect of the theme here of civil rights and captive teenagers in the Ontario school system has to do with their personal dress and personal behaviour. Of course, this is related to student records and indeed even to strapping.

I would like to point out that I think students' records and strapping are of an entirely different magnitude from personal dress. I think for schools to be involved with personal dress is a perversion of the education system, by the people who make this type of decision, but I do not feel that it is as harmful to the learning process in our schools as the abuse open to student records, or as the abuse open to corporal punishment in our schools.

I say, sir, that the question of student records, which really amounts to saying to students: "Do not rebel against the school system; do not try to get changes in the school system because it will ruin your school record", is a type of intimidation that should not be allowed, and it is being used to intimidate students. It is being used as a method of maintaining discipline in the schools at the expense of quality of learning in schools. The same argument applies to strapping.

To a much, much lesser extent, the same argument applies to personal dress in the schools. So I say the state has no business in the bedrooms of the province, where students dress and comb their hair. On December 11, I asked the Minister a question pertaining to this. It was a long question and I will not repeat it in full but it was basically this:

Can a young Canadian, living in Ontario, who is required by the laws of the provincial government of Ontario to register and attend school, be denied access to a school which receives financial support from the provincial government? Can this person be denied access by the principal of that school on the grounds that that young person does not dress in a manner that would be acceptable to most businesses? For example, a male student wearing brightly coloured clothing, or a female student wearing a miniskirt.

For the record I would like to refer to two cases specifically in this regard. One is referred to in the Globe and Mail on Wednesday, December 11, on the front page. The story was entitled "Clothes called gaudy, school sends boy home" and the story reads as follows:

A student was sent home from Martingrove collegiate institute in Etobicoke yesterday because of his brightly coloured clothing. Vice-principal John Young said that 17-year-old David Budgell's clothing, although clean, was too loud and distracting.

and then the Globe gives the quotation:

The boy is a troublemaker and an exhibitionist. He is just trying to attract attention to himself.

Can you see that on the school records, sir? Those are my comments about those remarks of the principal, going in the boy's school record, to be regurgitated up to some business corporation at a later date.

The Globe quoted the vice-principal:

He is immature and has been dressing this way for quite a while. We expect our students to dress in a manner that would be acceptable to most businesses.

The story continues in the Globe:

Mr. Young said that the boy had been in no serious trouble this year and that his dress was the only reason for him being sent home. David is angry but will return to class today in different dress. He says "My marks are not all that good, and I regret missing even one day".

Well then we find out in the photograph, that David Budgell is back, this time in black, and the caption under the photograph says this:

High school student, David Budgell, 17, sent home from Etobicoke's Martingrove collegiate yesterday by Vice-principal, John Young, because his striped, bell-bottom trousers and ascot were too gaudy, went back to classes today in sombre, more respectable black pants.

Well I suggest that is the state getting in the bedrooms of the nation.

Let me refer to the question of miniskirts, because it represents an attitude, on the part of some of our educators, towards education, that I had hoped would be completely out of date in this province in this day and age. This is a report concerning the Sutton District high school and it is reported in the Toronto Daily Star dated October 10, 1968. The article is entitled: "Hair Cut, Longer Skirt Edict Stirs Up Students at Sutton." The story reads:

Shorten your hair, lengthen your skirts, or get out. That is the edict from Sutton district high school principal McQuarrie and the students have mixed reactions to it. Some of them complied outright, others have refused outright and have found themselves right out of school. None of the male students have carried McQuarrie's short hair order to the other extreme and cleanly shaved their head, but several girls reacted to the rule requiring longer skirts and last Friday lowered their hemlines right to the ankle. McQuarrie issued the regulation requiring skirts to be no shorter than two inches above the knees on Thursday over the school's public address system. "This is too much", 16-year-old Karen Dickey said yesterday, "first the boys are made to get their long hair cut off and shave their beards and sideburns, now this." A few students are predicting a protest over the principal's strict disciplinary measures, but the efforts in a sit-in last year—

Many hon. members will recall this.

—but their efforts in the sit-in last year, over what they claimed was the school's discrimination against an Indian student, produced little success.

The story continues:

The Education Department investigated the situation at Sutton high school but students said yesterday that McQuarrie still hands out suspensions regularly. Wayne Court, 16, the Indian who was suspended for two weeks last year, after fighting with a white student, is again out on the outside. He was suspended again last Friday and faces permanent expulsion following a fracas at a school dance. Robert Rafferty, 17, said he quit high school last year after he had had enough of McQuarrie's childish punishments. When he realized he could not get a job with only Grade 9 behind him, he returned ready to buckle down. Then McQuarrie spotted the one-time drop-out's long hair and suspend Rafferty for three days.

Rafferty was given another three-day ousting when caught sneaking back into the school with his hair still reaching down to his shoulders. Rafferty had his hair trimmed twice before it met McQuarrie's approval and now he is back in class.

Student council president, Rick Narr, 17, said of McQuarrie's reign at Sutton High and the grumbling among students, "It is mainly the new kids from the lower grades who are complaining, they are just getting their first taste of Mr. McQuarrie's regulations and discipline".

Well, sir, I think this is significant mainly because there is a long and involved history at Sutton district high school involving this particular principal and I for one am not satisfied the Minister has done enough to sort out that learning process.

But with regard to this type of attitude on the part of some principals and some teachers, I simply say this, there is an old cliché now among the teenagers "a principal who is concerned with the length of your hair cannot be very concerned with what is in your head", and they feel this way and there you have it.

I suggest, sir, that this is not of the order and magnitude of school records and corporal punishment, but it does reflect an attitude in our school system, an attitude that shows, I think, that something has become grossly wrong within our education system.

The Minister, of course, replied that the regulations of the department make it clear that this type of responsibility is strictly in the hands of the principal. He also noted that it is possible for students and their parents to appeal and I believe he said they can appeal to the local school board. So I submit, sir, that in my opinion something must be wrong with the teacher education in this province when the type of people we are getting as principals and so forth must resort to this type of childish, very childish action.

The only case where I can see a principal being concerned with dress and hair is when it actually would result or create potential danger for that student, for example, long hair in a shop, loose clothing in a shop, and this type of thing. In that case, of course, the principal would have the responsibility to take action, but to do it simply because—to use it in effect as a disciplinary measure for students whom the principal thinks are trouble-makers, is, I suggest, sir, trying to beat reasonableness into people on a question of taste and you cannot do that.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to leave the discussion of education and move into another type of case history which I think is important. This has to do with the economic planning and the economic policies of this government, it has to do with the efficiency of this government, its ability to cope with the complex economic issues in Ontario.

I would like to say right at the beginning of my remarks on this particular case history, that the subject of my remarks is relevant to economic planning in this province. I will use the subject of these remarks and the statistics behind them to try to make a case that this government is not able to cope with the type of economic forecasting, the type of economic planning, the type of contingency planning for future economic events that may take place, to adequately provide for the needs of members of the labour force and their families in this province.

So, in turning to this economic issue, I would like to start by quoting the Economic Council of Canada. The Economic Council of Canada says in its 1967 annual review that:

The buoyancy of economic conditions in the United States has been the most important single factor contributing to the strength and duration of the Canadian expansion.

This statement is within the context of the expansion of the Canadian economy which, of course, sir, includes the Ontario economy for the 1960's and 1970's.

Over the last three years a main feature of the economic growth in the United States has been in the area of armaments and particularly in the U.S. war effort in Vietnam. The growth in the United States government demand for war goods and of course associated goods is having a direct impact on the economy of Ontario, especially through exports of war goods to the United States. To a much, much lesser extent, of course, Mr. Speaker, defence expenditures in Ontario by foreign countries other than the U.S. have been growing as well.

In addition to this foreign demand for war goods and associated goods produced in Ontario, there is the Canadian federal government expenditures, which are substantial sums, expenditures on war and defence goods.

An important difference, however, between Canada's war expenditures and similar expenditures by the U.S. and other foreign governments in the last few years is that the foreign expenditures are escalating while the Canadian expenditures are flattening out.

Now, the total impact of war and defence expenditures and output of employment in a particular industry in Ontario or in a particular community, involves not only the direct effect of defence contracts going to firms in that industry, but also the many indirect repercussions of subcontracts, orders from subcontractors, orders from those supplying subcontractors and so forth.

There are a number of industries, Mr. Speaker, such as smelting, refining, mining and logging, where there are no direct defence expenditures but in which the indirect defence content is substantial. In others, such as agriculture, crude petroleum, paper products, primary iron and steel and non-ferrous metal products, the direct defence content is much smaller than the indirect.

The point, sir, is this: the total of direct and indirect defence output is largest in transportation equipment and electrical apparatus industries in Ontario and in transportation, trade and storage. These industrial classifications are followed by iron and steel and their products, petroleum and coal and their products, construction, and of course, the service industries.

It has been estimated by Professor Gideon Rosenbluth, in his recent book "The Canadian Economy and Disarmament" that domestic and foreign defence expenditures in Canada are in excess of $2 billion—the 1966 figure—which is more than 4 per cent of the total Canadian GNP and meant, in 1966, almost 300,000 jobs.

I have here a table which I have taken from Professor Rosenbluth's book which I would like to attach as an appendix to the relevant Hansard [See Appendix A, p. 681].

The table sir shows the estimated domestic and foreign defence expenditures in Canada, it is expressed in millions of Canadian dollars. The years involved are 1962, '63, '64, '65 and '66 and the following information is necessary in order to understand the critique of government economic policy that I am making.

In 1965, defence expenditures—this is total for Canada, by the Canadian government was $1,562,000,000. U.S. military expenditures in Canada were $421 million and overseas defence expenditures in Canada were $70 million. That sir amounted to a total of over $2 billion.

In 1966, we find the Canadian defence expenditures increased to $1,713,000,000, U.S. military expenditures in Canada increased to $505 million, that is a 12 per cent increase over 1965, and overseas defence expenditures increased by about $5 million. Bringing the total for 1966 to approximately $2.3 billion, a substantial increase over the previous year.

Our rough estimates for 1967, Mr. Speaker, indicate a continuing growth rate especially for U.S. military expenditures in Canada.

It is important to note that Mr. Rosenbluth says that in the latter part of 1966 the rising U.S. demand resulting from the war in Vietnam was being reflected, to a considerable extent, in Canadian war goods export to the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, with this general setting of the impact of defence or war expenditures on the Canadian economy, and before examining the loss of demand for Ontario goods and services that would have to be replaced in the event of peace in Vietnam and in the event of general disarmament, in order to avoid higher unemployment rates across Ontario, I want to make quite clear the essential purpose in discussing this issue at this time. The two questions I am concerned with in this section of my remarks are the following:

First, does the present government of Ontario know the extent to which the Ontario economy is geared to present defence expenditures in general and to the U.S. war effort in particular? I doubt it very very much, but I shall attempt to fill in this gap for the government's economic policy advisers. I shall do this by documenting certain key sectors of the Ontario economy in certain communities in Ontario which are greatly affected by defence expenditures.

The second question, sir, is united to the first. That is, has the present government of Ontario done any studies on the impact on the Ontario economy of comprehensive world disarmament in general, and of more immediate importance, the impact of de-escalation in a subsequent negotiated peace in Vietnam which could have a profound effect on the U.S. government's expenditures on war goods and defence? And if this government has done such studies, which are essential surely to any projections of economic development growth and economic activity in Ontario, why have they not been made public?

I am certain, sir, that I speak for all members of this Legislature in stating that both the end of hostilities in Vietnam and general world disarmament are goals which ought to be sought. As Professor Rosenbluth states:

The economic problems of disarmament must be studied because disarmament is definitely on the agenda.

A substantial reduction in armament expenditures represents to many people, an unknown condition and a potential threat to their livelihood. Investigation and discussion of the economic problems will allay fears based on misconceptions regarding the nature and dimensions of these problems.

Such research should also lead to planning and preparation, and thus render all fears groundless. In these ways, obstacles to the achievement of disarmament are removed.

Mr. Speaker, many economists in the United States are very concerned with the impact on the U.S. economy of de-escalation and peace in Vietnam. Some of the best minds in the U.S. are being applied to the problem of what is called a post-Vietnam economy in the U.S. The concern is with the tremendous capital investment which has taken place and which is still taking place in the war sectors of the U.S. economy, and what will happen to these sectors in terms of output and unemployment when the hostilities in Vietnam cease.

Let me quote from one U.S. expert, Walter Heller, who was recently in Toronto and who is the former chairman of the Council of Economic advisors under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. Walter Heller says:

To be realistic we should expect a post-Vietnam interlude of difficult and delicate economic decisions. Policies may be required to expand demand, production and jobs, yet they may be inhibited by price crawl and cost push, which are largely in legacy of Vietnam pressures. We will need to be on guard against the policy trap of the late 1950s when the battle against inflation was pressed at heavy cost in income, employment and growth.

It has been estimated, for example, that large parts of Texas and California will be hit so hard by cessation of American involvement in the Vietnam war that the unemployment rates will go well beyond 15 per cent in those areas.

Let me give some idea of the extent to which the Ontario economy is dependent on production of war goods and associated goods. Professor Rosenbluth's statistics relate to the fiscal year of 1962-63—that is, before the escalation of the U.S. war effort. This means that they give an inadequate description of the degree to which Canada and Ontario are dependent on defence contracts. So the statistics under-estimate the case rather than over-estimate the case I am making.

It should also be noted that the statistics do not give complete information since the limited information available outside government sources is limited. This means that the full impact of general disarmament, and particularly of the de-escalation of the U.S. involvement in Vietnam, would be greater than indicated by the available statistics.

Mr. Speaker, the figures relate to direct expenditures in the following industries: aircraft, electronics, shipbuilding, fleet shipbuilding, construction, products of petroleum and coal, other miscellaneous industries, and of course, pay and allowances of employees of defence departments including members of the armed services.

The following statistics, sir, pinpoint the economic problems that a number of Ontario communities will face when war and defence expenditures by the Canadian federal government and by foreign governments are reduced.

I would like also to attach to Hansard, for the members' perusal, a second table which I will not read, of course, but which I would like to have attached to Hansard. This second table is entitled "Estimated Geographic Distribution of Major Defence Expenditures, 1962-63". This is the instance of defence expenditures among the various regions of Ontario. [See Appendix B, p. 681].

Sir, the total for Ontario was $443.1 million, which was about one third of total defence expenditures in Canada. This is the normal type of distribution, and Ontario usually has one third to one half of the manufacturing sector, and so forth. In this case, the defence expenditures are roughly one third of the total defence expenditures in Canada.

A better idea of the significance of these expenditures can be seen by dividing total expenditures in a given area by the number of members of the labour force in that area. This is a measure of the incidence of the impact of defence expenditures. For Ontario alone, sir, $199 was spent for a member of the Ontario labour force, and I believe this referred to both the unemployed and employed labour force in 1962-63. This figure for Ontario of $199 compares to $190 in the province of Quebec; $94 in Newfoundland; $87 in Saskatchewan and $153 in British Columbia. The average for Canada was $205, so Ontario is just slightly below the average.

But the important question for provincial economic policy formation and planning is with the expenditure per member of the labour force in various specific areas of Ontario. For example, while the figure for Ontario as a whole is $199 per member of the labour force in 1962-63, in Huron county it is $1,045 per member of the labour force. This means that Huron county could be hit very, very severely by the de-escalation of Canadian defence expenditures, consequent on the dramatic downward shift in the U.S. demand for war goods generally, and particularly in any general worldwide disarmament.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): We are an ingenious lot, we could find other things to do.

Mr. T. Reid: I am sure that the hon. member for Huron county would do his best to offset this drastic reduction in employment. He would do much better, of course, probably if he was a Minister of the government in a Liberal administration. Other communities in Ontario—

Mr. Shulman: Anyone would be an improvement on the present Minister.

Mr. T. Reid: Other communities in Ontario that could be severely hit by disarmament are Kingston, which has the dollar figure of $859 per member of the labour force; Renfrew county, which has a figure of $787 per member of the labour force; Simcoe county at $729; Hastings county at $655; and Nipissing county at $471. Ottawa itself, of course, would be hit severely with a figure of $647.

The conclusion for Ontario economic policy formulators on this type of analysis, is that, while the greatest difficulty in reducing defence expenditures may be experienced in the Maritimes as a whole, certain communities in Ontario would be hit ever harder. For example, the Nova Scotia figure is only $520 compared to Huron county in Ontario, which is double the Nova Scotia figure. Mr. Rosenbluth asks the following question:

What are the major economic problems that would arise in the event of disarmament?

He answers the question himself by saying:

They are of two kinds. The first are problems of aggregate demand; defence expenditures are part of the economy's total demand for goods and services and when the expenditures are reduced, demand falls unless compensating measures are taken by the governments involved. A fall in aggregate demand leads to reduction and output on employment, compensating measures to prevent such reduction cause an expansion of public demand for goods and services in the non-military sphere.

So the first question has to do with the cost of traditional analysis of economic theory. If aggregate demand falls and you want to maintain aggregate demand, the government must have offsetting policies, or compensating policies to generate more funds into the area.

I suggest, sir, that while the primary responsibility in the particular area lies with the federal government, the provincial government has a direct responsibility to vary some of its expenditures according to a defence expenditure type of cycle.

Secondly, says Professor Rosenbluth:

There are problems of mobility. Even if compensating measures are taken at the aggregate level, the industries, regions and occupational groups that will suffer a decline in demand due to disarmament are not the same as those that could experience an expansion of demand by well-planned compensating measures at the aggregate demand level.

It is this last point, sir, that is essential to Ontario government planning of compensating measures.

There are three key questions the present government of Ontario must consider now. We are, I hope and I think realistically, perhaps, reaching a point of de-escalation of U.S. involvement in Vietnam and these questions must be considered now before certain communities in Ontario are adversely affected by a fall in demand for those war goods and associated goods. These three questions are:

First, what compensatory public policies should be considered?

Secondly, to what extent can compensatory measures be designed to reduce to a minimum the need for mobility?

Thirdly, what about cases in certain areas of Ontario where adequate regional and occupational mobility cannot be achieved? I refer particularly, sir, to Huron county, Kingston, Renfrew county, Simcoe county and Hastings county.

I have dealt at length with this issue to focus attention of the myth that the present government of Ontario is a government of foresight. It is not.

This case study is specific evidence that this government is a government of afterthought. The present Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. MacNaughton) had the sheer audacity, sir, to say in his budget last year, that his budget reflected "an economic as well as a financial plan of action for the province".

Nonsense. The present Treasurer also stated last year: "I bring to the members of this Legislature a preview of the profound changes which lie ahead of us in the Ontario of tomorrow". Nonsense, sir.

The present Treasurer often refers now to policy planning and that too, sir, is nonsense.

The present Treasurer stated that the first part of his budget last year contained "a comprehensive review of economic developments in 1967 and the prospects for '68" and he called this one-year preview comprehensive policy planning. He should send his mandarins back to school.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close this section of my remarks by saying that disarmament is a desirable goal and although we in this province, in this Legislature, cannot have a disarmament policy, we should examine the consequences of a disarmament policy becoming effective—the economic consequences on various communities in this province.

So I believe that this government has a responsibility to design policies, to remove the fear that some people have in this province, that disarmament threatens their industries and their jobs. I believe that this government has a responsibility to plan ahead, to avoid adverse economic effects of such measures.

Mr. Speaker, I found it easier to build up a case study on a question like disarmament because there is a very good book on the question by Professor Rosenbluth. But the same type of approach is one that we, in the official Opposition, are taking to many issues.

We shall try to isolate certain areas of policy formation. We shall take a look at what the government has done in the past; we shall see if anything has been done on some of these issues. We shall provide this government with, what we consider to be, informed criticism of areas where they have not acted. We should try to back it up with hard facts instead of vague generalizations or subjective evaluations, and we hope that the government might listen to some of these things.

We are delighted when the government accepts some of our recommendations that improve the laws of this province. But if the government does not accept these recommendations, we will continue to press for them. We will continue to try to make the people of the province realize that there is a responsible and effective Opposition ready to take over from this government at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another aspect of public policy and it is related to the remarks I made last night concerning the participation of the poor in programmes that affect them directly in areas of welfare and so forth.

In other words, if you get people involved in the decisions that affect their lives, I think you not only have better programmes, but you have a better type of society. You have people who see this society as something more than just their family. Their family is very important, but as someone once said, if people feel they are forced back to the family as the only area of stability, that nothing else around them—the neighbourhood or the community—matters, then that is when you get revolvers coming into homes and people are fearful of their neighbours.

So, in the same sort of theme, sir, about the involvement of people in our social process, about the socialization, if you like, of people in their own society, I would like to draw to the members' attention that I recently polled members of the Liberal association of Scarborough East and other interested citizens, for their views on a number of issues.

I would like to let the members of the House know what these views are. I feel that this is one of the jobs of a private member—that he has a responsibility to represent the views of his constituents to the government through his own caucus, whether or not he agrees with all those views. He should represent those views to the government, tell the government what the people in his riding feel about certain public issues, and then, of course, offer to dissent from the majority view of the people he has polled in his own riding.

So I would like to take this opportunity of reporting to this Legislature, sir, on behalf of the people who replied to this poll on certain key issues that relate to a number of government departments. Seventy-six people replied to the 116 detailed questionnaires that were sent out. Generally speaking, the respondents came out in favour of individual liberties and freedoms. The questionnaire covered four topics—education, law reform, housing and youth—and here are some of the significant results.

The majority vote was for more student freedom from prying eyes, and greater emphasis on early admission to school. Those who answered the questionnaire voted against the teachers committing confidential information, about a student's attitude, to a file card, and the majority voted against such information being transferred to computer storage.

Respondents said that the only people who should be allowed to see a student's file are the school principal—who ran second to the school guidance officer—and the school nurse or doctor. I find that quite interesting because these people, who represented all age groups—they were not a disproportionately young, or disproportionately old, group—felt that the person who had more of an obligation or right to look at the student's detailed record, was the guidance officer, rather than the principal. I think the Minister of Education should consider that thought of the majority of the people who replied.

The questionnaire was overwhelmingly against allowing such information to fall into the hands of a credit bureau, chartered bank, finance company, magistrate, police detective, or probation officer.

Of the 76 people who answered the questionnaire, 57 were in favour of changing the law—that is to make a student's file privileged information. They agreed with the Hall-Dennis report on that question, and by privileged information, of course, here we mean the information can only be given to personnel outside of the high school education system or the primary education system, only with the consent of the individual student.

More than half of the people who answered the questionnaire were in favour of a head-start programme of early childhood education for all children, but on a voluntary basis. Head-start programmes, as you know, sir, are programmes usually designed before kindergarten, before children, who have not had the advantages of learning classroom English, for example, before they get into the school system. It is usually the type of programme applied for culturally disadvantaged children. Well, the people out in my area, more than half of them, feel this type of programme is necessary, but it should not be made compulsory. It should be made on a voluntary basis.

They also noted that tremendous effort must be made to make this type of programme known to the parents, or the single family parent who really should know about this type of programme, and try to convince that parent to let her children, in most cases at the age of four, attend such an operation head-start, or boot-strap education programme.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of the respondents in my constituency also said they did not feel children were active enough in school situations, nor were they involved enough in the learning process by the teacher. That is an interesting observation to make. Somehow they feel that there is something fundamentally wrong in the educational system as they see it, either as pupils themselves or as parents of pupils; that somehow we must create a new type of learning experience, also along the lines of the Hall-Dennis report, to really create the interest to make the students active in the learning process as opposed to the type of monologue from the teacher to the student.

More people were in favour of individual liberty, regarding it as more important than peace and quiet. They were willing to take a chance on some rabble-rousing, rather than see the stifling of individual liberties. I suspect that one of the reasons for that heavy preference was because a lot of the people who answered were members of the local Liberal association.

But the thing that I must report to the members is the following view about the Christian church. I will report their views as they expressed them, although I dissent from some of the views myself. This is what they said about the Christian church and other places of worship. The Christian church took a beating, with the majority saying they did not think the church still spoke for most Ontario residents in religious teaching or attitude to life. They voted to tax all churches and places of worship but leave charitable institutions tax free.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): They are all Liberals then?

Mr. T. Reid: I am reporting, as is my obligation, the views of my constituents. The questionnaire results stated no landlord should be free to choose his tenant without facing charges of discrimination under the human rights legislation and no employer should enjoy similar freedom in hiring. This would be of interest to some of the Ministers opposite. Slightly more than half were in favour of wire tapping with controls—the Supreme Court judge being the favourite choice of control. A wider law, compensating from the public purse, all victims of crime, was approved, as an entrenched Bill of Rights in a new Canadian constitution, and a provincial Tenants' Bill of Rights.

In closing this section of my remarks, before returning to education in more detail, I would offer the opinion that it is about time this government listened to the ordinary people of this province even though it might not listen to the ordinary members of the Opposition very much.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps at an appropriate time the hon. member would adjourn the debate.

Mr. T. Reid moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): In this private members' hour we will deal with and call Resolution No. 11, standing in the name of Mr. Hodgson (York North).

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: Notice of Resolution No. 11 by Mr. Hodgson (York North).

RESOLUTION: That the Government of Ontario GO Transit commuter service be expanded to serve communities north of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I move Resolution No. 11 standing in my name, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Speaker, be it hereby resolved that the government GO Transit commuter service be expanded to serve communities north of Metropolitan Toronto. And before I continue, I would like to take a minute and extend my thanks and appreciation to a committee, in my riding, to the members of the GO North committee, the chairman of which is Mr. Robert Sillocks.

In support of this resolution, I would like to explain to the members some of the facts and backgrounds why this GO service should be expanded to the north of Metro Toronto. In doing so I will discuss four main topics. Namely: The area that could be served; the public support to this project; the feasibility and cost of the project; and the benefits. I intend to deal with the area first of all, Mr. Speaker, that takes in north-central Metro Toronto, generally bordered by Keele Street and Dufferin Street, and York county, north of Metro. Besides Metro Toronto, this area includes the townships of Vaughan, Markham, the villages of Woodbridge, Thornhill, Markham, Kleinburg, Maple, Richmond Hill, Stouffville, Nobleton, King City, Oak Ridges, Schomberg, Aurora, Ballantrae, Newmarket, Bradford, Holland Landing and Mount Albert.

This area that I have spelled out harbours 140,000 people; and that's excluding Metro Toronto. With Metro, the population figure jumps to about 250,000 people. In fact, one-third of the total population in this area north of Metro resides in the three towns of Newmarket, Aurora and Richmond Hill—including Maple—as shown in the York county planning office population statistics for 1967.

No question about it, Mr. Speaker, that is a lot of people—people who are crying out for some sort of commuter service into the city of Toronto.

To go on, the amount of zoned, industrial land in York county north of Metro Toronto, partially serviced and still available for occupancy, is 5,716 acres. The amount of unoccupied serviced land remaining in the towns of Newmarket, Aurora, and Richmond Hill, and Maple is 1,407 acres, as described in the correspondence from the York county planning office dated November 25, 1968.

There is in existence a rail line which serves this area between Toronto and Newmarket. It is commonly known as the CNR Newmarket subdivision and serves the following points: Union Station and therefore the Yonge Street subway, Canadian National Exhibition and North Parkdale station; Bloor Street subway at Lansdowne station, University of Toronto connection; St. Clair Avenue station; Eglinton Avenue west at Caledonia Road; Yorkdale shopping area; Downsview Airport and area; York University—with obvious advantages of a rail connection with the Bloor subway and the University of Toronto; Concord—the CN railyards and Vaughan acres industry; Maple and Richmond Hill is two miles east by a good road; King City, including Oak Ridges and Nobleton and Bolton is close by; Aurora; Newmarket including Holland Landing, Schomberg and Bradford.

In 1964, the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study completed a report which clearly shows there is a definite household travel potential to the central part of the city of Toronto, as well as “trip desire lines” to the centre from the north of Metro on a line stretching from Barrie to Toronto city hall.

These trends are graphically illustrated in figures 49 to 51 of the report. The 1964 graphs clearly show the demand for transportation facilities to handle the north-south travel demands of the public. Now—a full four years later—this demand has become more acute.

The ease and low cost of implementing a full rail commuter service to the north of Metro to service this demand for good transportation is well documented in the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study entitled, “Study of Existing Railway Lines”. This report was completed in 1963 by one of the world's best railway consultant firms, De Leuw, Cather and Company, for the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study.

The report consists of 39 pages, plus seven maps and charts as well as two appendices. The first appendix contains 98 pages. I shall now draw your attention to that part of the report which deals with the CNR Newmarket subdivision, which says:

This line serves Concord, Maple, King, Aurora and Newmarket. It has been determined that an improved limited commuter service providing four trains in the peak direction—during peak periods—could be operated without additional facilities. It is considered this service would meet the need of communities north of Steeles Avenue for some considerable time. Requirements were not being investigated for service beyond that which can be provided by four trains operated in the peak direction during peak periods. This service could handle a maximum of 4,000 passengers in each direction.

To put it in very simple and plain terms, Mr. Speaker, the only financial outlay required is the money that would have to be spent to purchase railway commuter cars—the railroad is already there. And indications were at that time, as a result of the study, that as many as 8,000 people would use the commuter service during peak periods. That is peak periods—and does not include the remainder of the day and evening when there would be a lesser load on the lines.

I would say that these two reasons alone—the economics and speculated usage—warrant immediate introduction of the commuter service to areas north of Metro Toronto.

However, there is more—and that is the land and concentrated public support for extension of GO rail commuter service to the north of Metro. Every elected municipal council north of Metropolitan Toronto has voiced its views in favour of this project. So strong is their support that numerous councils have passed official resolutions to this effect. Those councils are: the county of York, Vaughan township, Markham township, King township, East Gwillimbury township, the city of Barrie, the town of Bradford, the town of Newmarket, the town of Aurora, and the town of Richmond Hill.

Typical of the resolutions passed is the following by York county council, which reads in part as follows:

Therefore, be it resolved by the council of the corporation of the county of York that this council does hereby agree, support and endorse the efforts and principles of the GO-north committee, regarding its endeavour to obtain a rail commuter service for the area north of Metropolitan Toronto.

Public interest has become so strong that one petition has in excess of 5,000 supporters, including even the automobile dealers association of my district whose dealers could suffer losses in sales.

I have a list of 16 which I am not going to read, I am just going to read a couple—Brad Walker Motors, Newmarket; Slessor Motors, Newmarket; Leslie Motors, King City; International Harvester Co., Newmarket.

During recent months, most members have probably been aware of editorial support for GO-north in the Toronto press. One editorial appearing in the May 24 edition of the Globe and Mail closes by saying:

Highways Minister George Gomme should continue to press for an early start on GO-ing north.

Other editorials appearing in the March 7 and 16 editions of the Toronto Daily Star read in part as follows:

The CNR line between Union Station and Newmarket is an obvious choice as a commuter route.

And

The government should know by now that the enthusiastic response of the public to the present line is the best index of its success. Why does it remain reluctant, therefore, to extent GO service northward where the need is at least as great as along the lakeshore?

Perhaps one of the most startling newspaper reports in this respect is printed in the Aurora Banner, December 4.

This report is headlined: "Hellyer Promises Aid for GO." It deals with a so-called lengthy brief presented to the Hon. Paul Hellyer, Transport Minister, by federal members of Parliament John Roberts of York Simcoe and Barnett Danson of York North. The brief dealt with commuter rail service north of Metro Toronto.

The Transportation Minister, upon receiving the report, advised the two members:

Equipment and train crews of the Canadian National Railways will be made available for the project as soon as Queen's Park announces its willingness to provide GO service.

Even Ottawa, Mr. Speaker—yes, even Ottawa—has promised federal co-operation, recognizing the obvious pressing need for this commuter service. But Ottawa will not act until we, the government of Ontario, announce our willingness to go ahead.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the arguments in favour of establishing a GO Transit commuter system to the north of Metropolitan Toronto—and I could find no sensible or reasonable argument against.

It is a logical move, and a great many benefits will be derived from this unbelievably economical project.

First, it will provide economical transportation for the people served; ease traffic congestion on the present north-south roads; safety of rail transportation, especially during bad winter driving conditions; lower amount of air pollution from auto traffic; rail service is economical for students using York University and University of Toronto and encourages them to live at home—this service would also be economical for most as compared to automobile transportation; the encouragement of an orderly planned growth of population centres near GO commuter stations rather than uneconomic patchwork growth which has caused much of the present spiral in taxes; Newmarket, Aurora, King City, Maple line services most people's needs living north of Metro Toronto and at the present time parking is available at the unused stations.

This is a rapidly growing area, Mr. Speaker—and an area crying out for this service—an area that gives universal public support. When coupled with the great benefits to be gained and the unprecedented low cost of implementation possibilities, I can see no alternative but to ask for a unanimous endorsement and support of this resolution to expand the government of Ontario GO Transit commuter service to north of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Regarding the resolution presented by the hon. member for York North, that the government of Ontario commuter service be expanded to serve the commuters north of Toronto has my full support.

For the past year I have listened with some interest to the various reasons given by not only the hon. Minister of Highways but also his advisors on the whole situation regarding the provision of commuter service to this area, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that no matter what is said, the reluctance of the Minister to proceed is based upon three main fears that he has at the present time.

First of all, he sees the losses in the present system and he does not like to see further budget losses having to be provided for. The second thing he sees is the problem of servicing the northern areas with water and sewers, that the building of GO north and extending which service there, will encourage development in that area that the province sees difficulty in servicing with water and sewers. And the third point that I think he sees is the problem in the present capacity of the Union station itself and the rail lines that go through that area of the city.

I have studied this matter in co-operation with a group that has been advising me and includes people who are working with the railroads and with the TTC and with planning authorities, and I am convinced that not one of these reasons is a good one, one that we cannot deal with adequately.

The first one is in connection with the present losses of the system. Last year I took the opportunity to present to the House the situation with regard to the provision of commuter service in the Chicago area. I mentioned that in that area the cost of the commuter fare works out to about  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cents per passenger mile. We pay about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  cents a passenger mile. It is a privately owned operation, the one I mentioned last year, the Chicago and Northwestern. I noted it made a good profit after taxes and after depreciation on rolling stock as well as maintenance of the rail line. Another railway operating and servicing the Chicago area is the Chicago-Burlington and Quincy railroad, which had a profit before taxes last year of \$1.3 million. The taxes on that line are such that they actually showed a loss after taxes on the service. But taxes are something that we in the Toronto area do not have to pay.

Take the Montreal area, which is served by CNR and CPR commuter, where they provide the rail cars as well, and there is no subsidy paid by the province. Why does the CNR insist on this province paying an amount in the operating agreement which results in our having to cover a deficit? I am sure that the hon. Minister in his negotiations with the CNR could bring these points home forcibly and if we cannot get a proper agreement by straight negotiation with them then we should go right to Ottawa and get as good a deal for Toronto as Montreal is getting.

The second matter is that of development to the north of the city and the problem of encouraging development in the north, to say nothing of the problem faced by the people now living there. The 140,000 that the hon. member for York North has pointed out living north of Metro now have to face congested highways and cause pollution by the use of private automobiles to reach their destination.

The fact of the matter is that the MTARTS study, which has been so loudly hailed as a great document in transportation study is really a study in provision of water and sewage services. You will read on page 50 of the MTARTS study entitled "Choices for a Growing Region," that the area north of Toronto was delegated as No. 3 in the order of priority for this reason:

Goals Plan No. 3 has not been elaborated to the detail of the first two plans because it is apparent, even at this generalized level, that it raises certain difficulties which make it as a concept highly problematic. The first difficulty arises out of the fact that the greater part of this system of the city is beyond the presently planned lake centred sewage disposal system.

In other words, the province is considering a transportation study on the basis of where they are going to put sewage disposal systems and they are providing according to the basis of this plan for the development of the province entirely on the lake. What about the city of London? What about the cities of Kitchener-Waterloo? What about other cities that are not on the lake? Do you mean to say we have to restrict the development in these areas because they are not on Lake Ontario? Surely to goodness we have the knowledge in our Ontario Water Resources Commission to find means of providing adequate pollution control without having to have a plant right on the lake.

We have plenty of up-to-date knowledge that shows that water can be piped at very low cost and in the case of London it cost 16 cents or 16½ cents a thousand gallons to move the water from Lake Huron, 45 miles to the city of London, beautiful pumping, beautiful filtration and that is the cost. Within a matter of 16 miles north of Lake Ontario, services would open up tremendous areas of land suitable for residential development and not necessarily, in many cases, prime agricultural land. The reason it needs to be opened up, Mr. Speaker, is that in the past ten years in this Metro Toronto area, between 42 and 43 per cent of all the development has been in the northern sector.

The figure is about 22 per cent to the east and about 30-some-odd per cent to the west but 42 to 43 per cent has occurred in the north sector and what we are doing is—by adopting and approving this type of policy and having it carried through to our transportation plans, we are restricting almost half the area that is open and available for residential growth and we are further aggravating the shortage that already exists. The terrible shortage, the criminal shortage of building lots that we have in the Metro Toronto and greater Toronto region.

What are the economies of it all? I point out to you that it costs about $500 a lot to provide the basic sewage treatment plans and we have sewage treatment upstream plants in this province that are putting out an effluent—that is, for all intents and purposes, better and purer than the water that went into the mains to begin with. There is no reason for us not to continue this if we put it under the control of a water resources commission determined to provide adequate pollution control.

If it even costs 25 per cent more for a treatment plant or an upstream plant to take extra precautions against the pollution of streams in which the effluent would flow, that would only mean an extra $125 per lot.

Compare that with the $15,000 per lot we are paying for land because of this shortage we are now facing in this area around Toronto. It is a straight case of speculation, caused by a shortage that we, as a government here in Ontario, are permitting to continue. It is time we got busy on this and recognized the need to bring supply in excess of demand.

By implementing GO transit, we can bring within a 50-minute commuting ride of Toronto, tens of thousands of acres of land. And we can do it quickly. We cannot do it in a more economic way than making use of these rail lines and rail facilities that have been described, that are already there and waiting to be used.

The third point is Union Station and its capacity. If you go down to Union Station at 8 o'clock in the morning and watch the train coming in from Scarborough, you will find that the train has standing-room-only.

It takes those people an average of eight to nine minutes to get off the train and the platform. This restricts the number of trains they can put through that platform. The reason it takes so long is because of the narrow passageways the people are forced to go through to get out of the station.

If the station is modified by the construction of platforms at either end so that you can get direct access to Front Street, you can greatly increase the capacity. Remember that it takes about 15 seconds for a TTC subway train to unload because it is level loading. Remember that it takes a very short time for them to clear their platform because they have ample width of passageways.

Union Station was not designed for commuter service, but with some relatively moderate structural changes, we can make it so it can handle a much greater capacity very soon.

Mr. Speaker: I would not like to curtail the hon. member's speech, but the time allocated to him has expired and there are several other speakers.

Mr. Deacon: Perhaps, just to finish, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the rail lines in the centre of the city: the reason for the difficulty in putting on more trains is, according to my friends in the road, that they are using longer and longer freights which are harder to fit in between the existing GO transit trains.

We can handle a great many more trains on those tracks if shorter freight trains are used, and this can actually provide better service to the rail customers.

So there is no reason for delay in implementing GO north service. We can alleviate the shortage of housing; we can operate our trains I am sure, at a profit, and I am sure we can do it with a very minimum of capital expense.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it again seems a shame that one must rise in this House to bring to the government's attention something which is so obvious.

The presentation of the member who introduced the resolution laid out, quite clearly, many of the statistical reasons why it is not only desirable but necessary to extend GO transit to northern parts of Toronto and those portions beyond.

In the planning of public transportation it is very necessary to take into consideration the economic growth of the area. And before anyone could begin to determine whether or not any particular phase of GO transit ought to go in any particular area, I would have hoped that the government would have made clear its policy on which of the three recommendations of the MTARTS study, it was prepared to implement.

It is necessary that we understand, as members of the Opposition—and I am sure it will be of benefit for the Minister of Highways to understand too—exactly what is expected and what the government intends to do in relationship to the MTARTS proposals.

I would like, for a bit of comic relief, to read a little article that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star earlier in the year. It says: "Must Go wait for Gomme?" and it goes as follows:

The Highways Minister, George Gomme of Ontario, is a man who has moved this week, with the dazzling speed of a tortoise. The Minister was visited by a delegation from areas immediately north of Metro which urged that the GO commuter system be extended to their communities.

Mr. Gomme replied, apparently in all seriousness, that the government is conducting a study of the present GO train operations along the Lakeshore and that it may be three years before it knows whether a northbound extension is warranted.

I suggest to the member who introduced the resolution that the choice of three years is not one just plucked out of the air. It has a very clear meaning to anyone who looks at it, because three years from that time would be on the eve of another election.

Now if we, in Ontario had elections on a yearly basis of course, we would be deriving benefits from an excellent transportation system.

Because each year on the eve of an election, it is announced by the government that we are going to expand or improve or in some way, facilitate the need for public transportation. So, I suggest to the member, that if he hopes for anything before the three-year period, I doubt very much if his hopes will be realized.

If we are going to increase—and we, in this party, believe we ought to—the role of public transportation in Ontario, it must be done with the understanding of what types of community development have been recommended. In terms of a satellite city, in terms of development on the Lakeshore, or development on a sporadic basis, this part of southern Ontario must come first.

I would ask the Minister if he would take into consideration the fact that the present system that exists between Barrie and Hamilton does not yet adequately meet the needs, because what is available in the city of Hamilton is absolutely useless.

There is very little point in putting two trains on at times in the day when people do not need them and that is exactly what we have. The two members of this party who represent the northern regions of the city believe that it is necessary to extend public transportation to points north of Toronto.

We are in accord with what has been said. We urge the government to take whatever action is necessary to do so, but we urge it upon them now—not in a few years' time. We urge that they do it in conjunction with the study that was completed; a study that indicates quite clearly the need for economic planning. We urge them to pay heed to their own members and to take this action.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, in speaking in support of the resolution proposed by the member for York North, I would like to add to the remarks of my colleague, about the great interest taken by the Liberal members in the federal House, Mr. Roberts, from York Simcoe, and the member for York North, Mr. Danson, also the remarks of Transport Minister, Hon. Paul Hellyer, in last week's weekly paper in my area.

I quote from the Bradford Witness, from an article headlined "A good try, Mr. Roberts".

York Simcoe Member of Parliament John Roberts along with benchmate Barney Danson of York North, made a valiant attempt this week to encourage the federal government to get involved with the GO north campaign for rail commuter service north of Metro.

They presented a detailed brief to Paul Hellyer, Minister of Transport, outlining the needs and costs of such a service.

Alas, Mr. Hellyer deftly whacked the ball into the court of the provincial government by stating that the present GO system is operated by the province and that it was really up to them to make the decision.

The Minister added that the federal government was willing to co-operate at any time with the province in launching the new commuter service.

Nicely stroked, Paul! But it really isn't good enough.

The province is just completing a detailed study of the GO-north proposal and in conjunction an examination of the existing GO commuter service operating on the Lakeshore.

The provincial Cabinet will examine all the pros and cons probably sometime in January and it is expected that a decision will be reached early in the new year.

But the federal government could take a more dramatic step now by offering money, equipment and services.

Mr. Speaker, I have been told by reliable sources that, to this day, GO train in Metro Toronto has received no support from the federal government and neither will any extension north to the city of Barrie.

Could it be that the Liberal MP has information from The Department of Highways which Mr. Hodgson and I don't have? It seems to me that Mr. Roberts and Mr. Hellyer are playing politics, because in a situation like this, there is no way they are going to lose. If The Department of Highways and the government of the province of Ontario decide to go ahead with the GO train north to the city of Barrie, they will say the results of the announcement we made and the support we gave it is the reason why the people are getting it. If the government decides not to run the GO train north to Barrie, they will blame it on the provincial government.

I would like to point out also that at no time did Mr. Hellyer mention in his remarks that a GO train to Barrie would help to relieve the housing shortage in Metro Toronto. And this is a point that he should have given a great deal of consideration.

I believe, with good planning, a GO train service to Barrie with extensions planned in the future, is a must. It would encourage relocation and settlement of our people along the route.

Mr. Speaker, I have a young gentleman in my area, a Mr. Jack Lennox, who has done a lot of research on the feasibility of extending GO transit north to the city of Barrie. Over 2,000 people have signed a petition that they will use the service.

The council of the city of Barrie, the Chamber of Commerce, the council of the township of Innisfil, the town of Bradford, and many of the smaller municipalities in the area have endorsed and are supporting the resolution presented that GO transit be extended to the city of Barrie.

Mr. Lennox wrote to Mr. Hellyer this October 22, in answer to a letter he had received from him, and I quote:

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of October 16, 1968, we know that the CNR would prefer if we got lost, but as long as the CNR and the Canadian Transport Commission continue to provide the best of commuter service to the Montreal area, we feel justified in requesting that a commuter service be started between Barrie and Toronto, till the GO trains could be ready to take over this service.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, has stated any group or area is to be treated equal. Surely some action can be started without having to bother him.

We in central Ontario have watched over the years hundreds of millions of dollars spent in the Montreal area by the CNR and the Canadian Transport Commission for everything from hotels, hump yards, airports, commuter service trains, plus the best of freight service, and so on.

With the CNR holding a monopoly on this Barrie area, how long must we sit back and watch this discrimination be allowed to continue by The Department of Transport in Ottawa?

The people here have seen one train after another, both passenger and freight, cut off, rail lines growing up in weeds and in so bad a need of repair. Service is cut off and business is lost because of poor service and delays. Then the CNR will say these lines are not paying and ask if they cannot be closed.

Mr. Speaker, earlier in my remarks, I mentioned good planning, and we need good planning to avoid having the financial burden fall too heavily on the community served by the proposed service. We must overhaul the tax structure to accommodate those residential areas that would be affected by a commuter service.

This could be done with a regional government proposal for the area. There are several ways which we could propose to keep lots at a minimum price so that the average worker would be able to own his own home —like putting on a capital gains tax on land developers, or if the federal government dropped the 11 per cent tax on building supplies, or if the high cost of education was taken off property tax. I believe that everything should be done to make it possible for people to own their own homes.

Mr. Speaker, old railway lines, whose service is discontinued, should not fall into private hands. They could be used in my area to transport people to Wasaga Beach, Georgian Bay, Lake Simcoe, to enjoy a summer holiday or a winter holiday. We have the largest fresh water beach in the world at Wasaga Beach, but no adequate highway to get the people in or out of Metro Toronto to enjoy the Huronia vacationland.

Mr. Speaker, GO transit service to the city of Barrie and to the rest of Simcoe county would relieve the pressure on our north-south highways—Highway 27, Highway 400 and Highway 11.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend to the government that they prepare to make an extension of GO transit as far as the city of Barrie, at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce yield, because I do not have the hon. member for Parkdale on my list.

Mr. Trotter: Oh, all right, if that is the list, okay.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Well I should bow to my friend from Parkdale, but Owen Sound is the key to this situation.

We have heard the dimension of east-west all the time and now the north-south dimension has come into the picture. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in our area, the CPR train has been cut off to run three days a week now. We have been a designated area, and we have cut off the lines of communication. So I think it is time that "Go-Go-Gomme" there got into the act and started to run this very important side of our lives in this province—transportation.

I think that you should have the power to tell the CPR that they have to service these outlying parts of the province in a better way than they are doing. The CPR, Mr. Speaker, have the power to cut off a whole part of the province because a line is not profitable. The fact of life is that the CPR—this great corporation across this nation—over the years has assumed and controlled great tracts of land that cost them nothing and they are in turn, now selling that land at millions of dollars—land that cost them nothing.

They owe it to the people of Ontario, in outlying parts like Owen Sound, to give the transportation we should have to look after our people. And so they have cut the service down to three days a week and they have doubled the fare and no one knows when the damn trains are running. This is a serious thing for the people of our part of the province.

I think it is time the Minister got into the act and said to these people: "We must have a network of rail lines, to use these lines we have, to service the outlying parts of the province."

Now the people of all Ontario have been paying the freight for GO Transit. In truth, the cost, Mr. Speaker, should not be shared by all the people of Ontario—these charges of $50 million we have now unmasked in GO Transit, capital costs and loss and subsidy. It has cost the outlying parts of this province $50 million to service downtown Toronto real estate. In truth, this is the end result.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): No wonder the member for Parkdale wanted to speak first.

Mr. Sargent: Well this is the key point of this thing. In other jurisdictions across America—where we have rapid transit and go transit servicing the metropolitan real estate, the charges of the capital cost and losses are assumed by the real estate it serves. You take—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Where is this?

Mr. Sargent: In every area, Mr. Speaker, where there is a rapid transit system—San Francisco, Boston, right across the whole board.

In truth we have the 70-storey Toronto-Dominion Bank building which is vertical transportation. The bank pays for the elevators in there. The bank pays for the elevators going up, but the people of Ontario pay for the horizontal transportation, bringing the people down there.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Who pays for the elevators going down?

Mr. Sargent: I never thought of that one.

But in truth we have a great inequality in that the outlying parts of the province are paying this freight for GO Transit and I think it is time that the Minister of Highways take on another dimension in his department. These rail lines not being used should be taken into the total picture to give us the service we need.

A case in point last week. A person on the train to Owen Sound from Toronto got talking to the conductor and found out that the three-hour run could be cut down to two hours by speeding up. The conductor told this person, who is a very responsible person, that this was a matter of fact; that they could make the run in two hours. This person wrote a letter to Mr. Hellyer and told what she had found out from the conductor. The conductor was fired from the job by CPR because he had spoken out of turn to a responsible person.

Now this is the situation today with the CPR—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What did Mr. Hellyer say? That is what we want to know.

Mr. Sargent: Well we have not developed this whole thing yet. You may have had some letters regarding this or you will be hearing about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It is alright. You will be hearing more about this but this is the power the CPR have. They want to discourage people travelling on these lines. They want to get rid of it. I think that the Minister should realize that we are important up there too. We are paying the freight for you down here on GO Transit. Let us have some equality and put the equal opportunity—

Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this resolution before us, I sometimes wonder, as I hear some of the people talk, whether we are going to talk about the CN or CP. I think we are talking about GO railway and its extension today.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Let us talk about the Ontario government too—

Mr. W. Newman: Let me just say one thing, while I am on my feet, about you fine gentlemen over there on the other side. When the government of Ontario brought this system in to this province and introduced it, it was the first of its kind in Canada. Nobody over there ever talked about it before we brought it in, you hoped it would not work so you could run it down.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that is completely misleading. We were told in this House by Mr. Leslie Frost, that it was utterly impossible to have a GO train, so do not hand us that nonsense.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, obviously I touched on a soft spot over there and I hope it hurts where it should.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Newman: Well I am glad we touched on that soft spot because—

Mr. Trotter: You are the soft spot.

Mr. W. Newman: Well let me tell you this, the government of Ontario, because of its thinking and planning, has done it, and I am sure they are planning further extensions in other areas. I am here to speak on the resolution this morning about the GO train not going north, but going farther east.

Mr. Speaker, while my remarks on the hon. member's resolution are in support of that resolution, I wish to speak on the expansion of GO Transit to an area other than the north. In that respect I wish to confine my remarks to the eastern corridor of the GO Transit system—and particularly concentrate on the very extreme portion of that corridor.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that total figures for the GO Transit system show that 8,000 people, on the average, use the system to travel into Toronto each working day. However, what is more interesting is that more than 1,000 of these people use the Pickering station. In other words, one of every eight persons using the GO Transit originate at the Pickering station. We believe in GO out there and we use it.

What is even more interesting is that this figure is increasing. For example, there has been an increase of 41 per cent in the number of persons using Pickering station this past October as compared to October 1967. In fact, both Pickering and nearby Rouge Hill have increased their patronage by over 40 per cent during the 12 months from October 1967 to October 1968.

This is indeed a remarkable increase, for the overall system increase—that is the increase for the entire GO Transit system—has barely managed to reach the 15 per cent mark for that very same period.

There are no up-to-date figures available for the number of Ajax, Whitby and Oshawa residents who travel to Pickering to use GO Transit. However, a survey carried out during a one-week period in 1967 showed that of 440 people who exited at Pickering, 50 lived in Ajax, 30 in Whitby and another 50 in Oshawa.

It is logical to deduct that the 40 per cent increase over the past year would add to those totals, to make 70 from Ajax, 42 from Whitby and at least 70 from Oshawa.

It is also reasonable to assume, Mr. Speaker, that if the GO Transit system was to be extended to Whitby that the number of persons using the GO Transit would increase considerably, if not double, because of the convenience and the economy factors alone.

It is for these reasons that I urge this government to extend the services into Ajax and Whitby and farther. After all, what better way to extend services than in the direction which shows a great need, and one which has proven successful?

Mr. Speaker: On the list which was furnished, the next speaker is the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith); we have the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) who have both indicated a desire to speak so perhaps it can be arranged that all three speakers will have time between now and twelve. The hon. member for Simcoe East has the floor.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution introduced by the member for York North. I will make my remarks brief in order to give time to the other hon. members who wish to speak concerning this important item.

I would like to mention here that the hon. member for Scarborough East and myself are again today leading the way and setting the pattern for what the well-dressed member should be wearing at this Christmas season.

In supporting the resolution, may I, Mr. Speaker, draw several points to the hon. members' attention through you. The town of Orillia is served by the main line of the Canadian National Railways, and consequently the passenger trains coming from western Canada and from northern Ontario—from North Bay and Sudbury—travel through our town.

If and when the GO-north plan is implemented, as I know it will be, the GO-north plan will use these same tracks. Consequently rail traffic at the divisional point at Washago will be diverted north of Orillia and will use what is known as the Bala grid, routing the trains through Beaverton to Toronto, down the east side of Lake Simcoe. Consequently, Orillia will be isolated from rail passenger traffic, and the many people in our area who depend on this service will be deprived of it. I would like to suggest at this point that Orillia should be considered as a terminal for the GO-transit system.

Orillia will become a city on January 1, 1969. It will be the first city in Simcoe East, a city of 25,000 people in a thriving industrial and tourist centre. Consequently, it is most necessary that the GO-north study include the city of Orillia in order that we will receive the necessary service for people not only working in the area who might wish to commute to Barrie or Toronto, but also for many people in the southern part of the province who might wish to come to Orillia, either to work or to enjoy a holiday.

The hon. member for Simcoe Centre pointed out the great asset it would be to the motoring public if they could come north on the GO transit. May I point out that this would be a real asset on weekends, when the highway traffic is so severe and congested, not only during the summer months but during the winter months when so many come north to enjoy the winter sports.

I would just like to pass comment concerning the comment of the member for Wentworth when he indicated that the hon. Minister of Highways was perhaps deferring the study for three years to use it for political advantage. May I say that our socialist friends across the way seemingly are always considering things of a political advantage. Every decision they make perhaps should be considered for what it will do for them; whereas we, on this side of the House, are only thinking about the good of the people and what we can do to benefit them.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion may I recommend to this government that they give every consideration to extending the GO-transit system the additional 23 miles north of Barrie to the city of Orillia as of January 1.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, if you have ever had the opportunity of being on the top floor of the Toronto-Dominion Bank in this city and you look down on the hard core of the city of Toronto, it looks as if it has been bombed out. One of the reasons is that so many buildings have been torn down and the land has been used for parking lots. By the time you figure the cost of paying for parking a car and the cost of the land, the average cost of parking a car per year in Toronto—what it costs the community as a whole and including what it costs an individual—is about $1,000, and the main reason for that is a lack of planning.

The way our roads have been planned or the lack of planning, and the manner in which they are being planned has really caused a major transportation crisis in the province of Ontario, and particularly in southern Ontario. The situation that bothers us in Toronto is not unusual. There are about 76 cities in the world that have got approximately the same problem, and the International Conference on Transportation held in Vienna in 1963 learned one thing—that the private automobile is not going to solve the transportation problem. In many ways, and it is unfortunate to have to say it, in our modern society the automobile has become the vulture and we have to see to it that when we plan our communities, we plan not for more cars, but for more people.

The only possible answer for that, or one of the main answers, Mr. Speaker, is that we have rapid transit. I certainly support the resolution that is before the House. The only criticism I might make of the resolution is that it does not go far enough. We literally have to plan for Ontario as a whole, and I would certainly support the speaker who said that rapid transit should not only just affect the northern part of Metropolitan Toronto, but it should go east and west.

We in southern Ontario are far more fortunate than those in many of the large cities of the world, because we have the land and the possibility to expand. Our own Department of Highways has learned that the people move east and west, and the pressure is from the lake going north, and it has acted on this to a certain extent. And so Highway 401 was built up in the northern part of what is now Metropolitan Toronto. Ontario Hydro has moved up in that area, and the railways as well.

I would suggest that there is a natural area, Mr. Speaker, where rapid transit can be built literally across the top of the Metropolitan Toronto area, through to Niagara Falls, and going to the east toward Peterborough. I don't have the time to go into details of what could be done, but we have the facilities and the ability to do it. Our new towns or satellite towns, or whatever you call them, are going to be dependent on transportation. So we have to plan our transit lines first before we can plan our communities. What is so disturbing is that this administration has delayed and delayed in coming out with an overall plan.

If you want to get the best experts—I mentioned Vienna back in 1963—there are well-informed people not only in Canada, and right here in this city, but throughout the world who can help us in this very important situation, and I repeat: you cannot solve your housing problem or your living problem, or your pollution problem until you set out ahead of time, your transit areas. But, I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the rate the present administration is going I have one slogan I can use on this problem during the next election, that is: "GO won't go until Gomme is gone."

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Speaking in support of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two short observations before referring to one of a series of articles that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star.

First, speaking for the eastern section of the riding of Scarborough Centre, the service in this area is 50 cents a day to the downtown Union Station. After this, the people are required to spend 20 cents to get to their destination, be it a block, or be it anywhere else in the city.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the only people who are using GO transit from the area that I represent are the people who can afford it, and only those people. At $1.40 a day, this subsidized service is too expensive for great numbers of people in the riding of Scarborough Centre.

If they had an interchange of service, from GO to the TTC there would be many more people using the service from my own particular riding.

The alternative that these people have, Mr. Speaker, is come to downtown Toronto on a two-fare system. This they are able to do for 80 cents a day; they would be able to pay one dollar a day; they cannot pay, Mr. Speaker, $1.40 a day which is $30 a month for transportation to and from their work.

Secondly, speaking of the beginning of the GO service in this province, one might well wonder why the service did not include the service to the north right from the beginning, because the report that was made showed very clearly how easily these services could have been extended to the north. Instead we have a government who put the service from Hamilton into Toronto, removing service from the Hamilton people who are now left on two trains a day where they used to have five and six. There is no service to Hamilton now by train on holidays—Christmas, and so on, because of this. In fact that service has gone backwards, not forward, Mr. Speaker.

In the commuting areas of Clarkson, Port Credit and Oakville, this is renowned commuting territory, there is no mystery about providing a service from this territory. In the forties it was a packed train service the need of which has grown, not diminished. The mystery was in the north and usually in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, we bring voice to this House from people who cannot speak for themselves but it would appear it must be brought for those who are able to speak for themselves.

Mr. Robert Silcox, a downtown investment man, along with Mrs. Samuels, the wife of an architect, Sidney Samuels of King, Ontario, pioneered enough information to move this government from telling them that a study would take three years. The Highways Minister, Mr. Gomme, said that it would take a three-year study to determine whether expansion was possible to the north. The lady took it into her own hands, Mr. Speaker, put notices in the newspapers and learned the following four facts which I would like to have recorded in the House:

1. That from Newmarket, 450 persons in the area working at de Havilland Aircraft could ride the train right to the plant.

One gentleman said after driving 60 miles a day for ten years that this would be a pleasure. They learned that 700 Barrie residents travel back and forth to work in Toronto each day by car and bus and another 500 come to within five miles of the city itself. And, as he says for no reason known, 400 people travel from Toronto the other way each day.

Now, with this kind of information, one would wonder that it took four years to put in such a service—half of which is over an area that is already recognized as a commuting area of our province.

I would like to record this particular article, Mr. Speaker. It is one of a series in the Toronto Daily Star, August 20, 1968.

After the action of these people, the Minister then provided them with information by the end of the year. The consulting firm who did the original study for GO laid out very clearly how easy it would be to have services go into the northern areas of this province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue with the Throne Debate and I would remind the hon. members that, as has been indicated, there will be a night session on Monday evening.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the west gallery are students from Downsview Secondary School in Downsview, and in both galleries from the Dr. Williams Secondary School, Aurora. And in the Speaker's gallery we have members of the student council of Woburn Collegiate Institute, Scarborough.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves that the order of the day for second reading of Bill 37, An Act to establish an Institute for the Prevention and Cure of Birth Defects, be discharged and the bill withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

Introduction of bills.

CERTIFICATION OF PERSONS FITTING AND SELLING HEARING AIDS

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the certification of dealers and persons engaged in the fitting and selling of hearing aids.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require the licensing and permit the examination of those persons engaged in the sale or fitting of hearing aids.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Education has a statement.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, prior to the orders of the day, this really relates to a question that has been asked with respect to the school year. Because there has been some slight confusion with respect to it and in that there are some students present here today who, perhaps, will have some more than passing interest in it, it should be understood that the present school year has not, in fact, been lengthened; but at 194 days is, in fact, four days shorter than the school year of 1967-68, which was 198 days.

The final day of the school year 1968-69 will be June 27, 1969, while last year it was June 28, 1968. Students in elementary school will continue to attend classes until that date, as has been the case in other years. Certain changes in the attendance pattern of secondary school students have occurred during the last several years as the examination system has evolved.

During the period 1962-67, the last grade 13 departmental examinations fell on the following dates: In 1962, June 29; 1963, June 21; 1964, June 26; 1965, June 29; 1966, June 24, and in 1967, the last year of the departmental examinations, June 23.

As the members will recall, departmental examinations were compulsory for all grade 13 students with a student taking an average programme finishing about June 16 to June 18. In June, 1968, the first year the departmental examinations were eliminated and exemptions permitted for students with an average of 60 per cent in a given subject, many students were released from school on June 3. This, in effect, reduced the school year to nine months for secondary schools, leaving 179 days for instruction, compared to 198 days for elementary students.

As last year was the first time that there were no departmental examinations, the time necessary to complete marking and administration was not known in advance. However, some schools were able to complete all promotion meetings and mail reports to students by June 18.

On the basis of this experience, it was determined that two weeks was a reasonable length of time to allow for administration and marking, keeping in mind, and this is important, that many students are exempt from writing final examinations.

The announcement regarding June, 1969, indicated that regular classes in secondary schools should continue until June 13 after which students not required to write examinations can be excused attendance. This will provide 184 days for regular classes in the current school year. The change represents, in fact, an increase of five days from last year.

It might be noted that the committee on aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario recommends that the school year be prescribed as 200 days.

It should be noted that the elimination of departmental examinations was not for the purpose of decreasing the length of the school year. Rather it was for the purpose of improving the quality of education through the provision of greater opportunity for individual study and for examination of topics of interest in depth.

There are additional factors, Mr. Speaker, which should be kept in mind. Schools this year are closed two full weeks at Christmas; one week during the winter—March 15 to 23—and two days at Easter. Last year, I think it is fair to state, the students of this province, and fortunately so, were out of actual classroom situations on educational tours, etc., more than at any time in our educational history. It should also be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, that the cost to the public for secondary schools alone, in this province, is $2.5 million for each legal school day, and this cost is borne whether the schools are open or closed. Teachers, for example, are paid for ten months' teaching whether or not the students are present.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome the Premier back, and feeling better, I trust.

I would like to ask him if Judge Little has been investigating collective bargaining procedures on behalf of the Canadian Union of Public Employees at the Don Jail with the government of Ontario?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might place a question similar to that, which I asked Friday?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister.

What is the termination date of the memorandum of agreement between the government and the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Locals 79 and 878, representing employees of the Don Jail and Metro Toronto courts?

Two, will the government extend the memorandum of agreement and all the terms and conditions contained therein until such time as Judge Little's report regarding collective bargaining for civil servants has been received and given full consideration?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first in answer to the question of the leader of the Opposition:

Judge Little has been investigating and his investigation is much broader than just the situation at the Don Jail. It involves the whole question of collective bargaining between the government and its employees. So it goes beyond the situation at the Don Jail, but they would be included in it, undoubtedly.

Mr. Nixon: This was specifically a term of reference.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, this was not—

Mr. Nixon: Not as a general term, but specifically.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It was not given as a specific term of reference to Judge Little, but as I point out, his terms of reference are broad enough that I would think it inevitably would be covered in what he is doing.

Mr. Nixon: This is hardly the understanding of the Don Jail employees.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I can only tell the member what his terms of reference are.

Then, in regard to the other question, there were, of course, no specific time limits in the agreement entered into between the government and the particular CUPE local, except this matter of check-off which was to cease as of the end of this year. The letter which prompted this question came into my office this morning and I would have to look at the proposition they are putting. Certainly, all the elements in that agreement were not tied to any specific date or dates.

As a matter of fact the elements in the agreement do not lend themselves to being tied to a specific date, but at the time we did not really know when Judge Little's report would be brought down. Frankly, at this moment in time, I cannot tell you when it will be available, either. So I will have to check into it and answer this letter, which, as I say, I received only this morning. I will have to see what the government's position would be.

As I point out, I do not think the date for the elimination of the check-off being December 31, 1968, bore any relation to Judge Little's report. This was a date in the agreement. The government said that it would continue the check-off for the union up until that date. However, in view of the fact that Judge Little's report is not yet down, and I think one might have expected it would be before this, I will go into the matter and see what we can do about it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question if the Prime Minister will permit. He no doubt recalls reading in the letter this morning and perhaps in accompanying news releases that the guards at the Don Jail are considering strike action—unilateral action—if in fact they are not given opportunity to bargain with the government without coming to the civil service commission. Has the Premier got any comment on that sort of a threat?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What this amounts to, really, is a reopening of all the matters settled by the agreement of last year, because—

Mr. Nixon: One of the terms of settlement was this investigation, which was supposed to have been completed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: One of the terms of settlement was that investigation would take place, and it is presently taking place, but the point I make is the date that was set beyond which the government would no longer check off the union dues, was not really related to Judge Little's report. As it has now turned out, we have now reached this date, or we are coming up to it, and as I say I do not really know when Judge Little's report will be available. It might be out before December 31 for all I know, but these are the things I will have to find out as a result of receiving this letter.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General, actually a couple of them.

Has the Attorney General undertaken any further investigation leading to the elimination of the hate messages being disseminated by telephone, as raised by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) on Friday, December 6?

Does the Attorney General now feel that these messages are in violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, it was just a few days ago—not very long ago—that the hon. member for Downsview asked a question on this matter to which I replied, having listened at that time to a message using the telephone number which he was good enough to state in his question. I referred the matter to officials in my department, as I said I would, and it has been brought to the attention of the police authorities. I have not had a report back. I would think that we might be permitted to study the pattern of these messages.

The one that I listened to—and I have only heard the one—was not, in my view, one that gave right to a course of action, or to an action against them, or to prosecution. But I think we need a little more time just to examine the situation.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the Attorney General if, in fact—it is hypothetical—if, in fact, action could be taken, would it be only under the human rights code, or would there be other regulations covering this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It has been suggested that there can be no prosecution. No action of a criminal nature can be taken over this—the slander, or this type of thing, of an ethnic group of people. I am not sure whether there is a right of action under the human rights code. There may be, but one would have to examine the statements which are made very carefully to see how far they go.

The one which I heard—I do not want to recite it again—was, perhaps, scurrilous. It was something to which none of us, I am sure, subscribes. But it was nothing which, in my view, and in the view of officials in my department, gave a right of prosecution or of action against the people who were putting out this statement.

Mr. Nixon: I have a further question for the Attorney General on another matter.

In view of the charges laid against Diane McIntosh and Michael Manelli, will the Attorney General now undertake investigation, or prosecution, under the section of The Child Welfare Act requiring medical doctors to report evidence of mistreatment of infants?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think the question said, "Will the Attorney General undertake investigation or prosecution?"

Section 41, to which the hon. member refers, does not make it an offence not to report. It does say the medical practitioner "shall report." There is no offence created there; there is a duty. Then the section goes on—I think the intent of the section was to make it clear that the medical practitioner cannot refuse or give as a reason for not reporting what was a question of privilege heretofore.

The Act is administered by the Minister in The Department of Social and Family Services and I would be glad to review the matter with him and to investigate it. The Attorney General's Department does not primarily administer this Act, but I think it is clear there is no offence created here. Possibly with a broad interpretation of some sections of the penal code, you might bring the failure to perform the duty within the grounds of a broad section, making it an offence, but there is nothing in this Act which creates that. I do not think that was the primary intention of that section. I should be glad to review it with my colleagues and with the Minister of The Child Welfare Act to see what may be done.

Mr. Nixon: If I might ask a supplementary question. Perhaps I should have directed the original question to the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko), because a similar question asked when the case first came before the public was answered by the Minister. He said that since there was an inquest in process the whole thing was sub judice. But these charges were laid during the inquest, which indicates surely that the Minister had the duty at that time to make a decision.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Then I would ask the hon. Attorney General to read it as a matter of clarification—that when the Act says that the practitioner must report information that comes to him of child beating, it is not an offence if he does not report such information.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This Act did not create any offence. Section 41 says:

Every person having information of the abandonment, desertion, physical ill treatment or need of protection of a child shall report the information to the Children's Aid Society or Crown attorney.

Then the second subsection goes on to make it clear that a medical practitioner cannot rely on his privilege to fail to report. There is nothing in the Act—and I have looked at it very carefully—which makes it an offence not to do this. There is nothing—I say again—in this Act which makes it an offence not to do it. I said in my earlier remarks, in reply, that possibly we could find in the code a broad section which would make failure to carry out the provisions of an Act, an area in which you might set up a prosecution.

But again, I come back to my answer—that I would like to review this with the Minister of Social and Family Services and The Department of Social and Family Services to see what might be done. This is my answer—that I feel I would like the view of the Minister who has to administer this Act.

Mr. Nixon: Let us pursue this a bit further. Is the Attorney General saying he does not know whether or not there are teeth for the law in The Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I say, there are not. As the hon. member is putting it on that basis, I should say I got his question about ten minutes ago. I have not read these sections of the code. I had another question from him. I do know, in my general knowledge, that there are sections in the code which, by their language, may be wide enough to make it an offence. However, a duty, as prescribed in an Act, may be wide enough to admit some action.

That is all I can say at the moment. Having got the question a few moments ago, I want to review it with the Minister who administers the Act, to see what may be done. I cannot answer any more than that at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Scarborough East would allow me to discuss with the leader of the Opposition whether question 296 of the Premier, dated December 10, in connection with French education, is to be asked—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was just looking on my desk for that. I may have taken it downstairs. If one of the pages would give that to me, please.

This was as a result of the second report, the volume of the bilingualism commission report. Was the Premier, at the time of the impending—and I guess that still applies—provincial-federal conference intending to press for the recent recommendation of the Royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, that the federal government finance the extra costs involved in providing primary and secondary school education in French for French-speaking Canadian children who are residents of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, let me make several comments in reply to this question.

In the first place, the whole question of bilingualism is being considered by a sub-committee of the continuing committee of officials appointed at the conference—and I find it difficult to keep track of all the various methods that have been set up to study the questions raised—but at the conference last February an official language subcommittee was established. That is a committee of officials dealing with this matter; it is an official-level committee and discussions are, at this stage, confidential. They will be made known to the governments concerned.

However, I might say in a general way the whole question of language rights and instruction in all aspects is being considered right across the country. I am a little leery of shared-cost programmes with the federal government at the present moment. I might really prefer that if they are going to get into the question of financing any form of education in this province, we might simply go back to the time-honoured and hallowed method of Quebec and ask for a fiscal equivalent. Then we will deal with the French-speaking Ontarians as we see fit in this Legislature, by this government. I think this point of view has to be given some very serious consideration.

After all, the recommendation in the B and B commission report is nothing other than a recommendation by a commission. No doubt it will be the subject of a good deal of debate and points of view put not only by this province but by other provinces before any final arrangements are made.

But it is a little worrying to see another recommendation for a financial intrusion into the constitutional rights of this province, or indeed any province, when we are presently in such a mess because of the exercise of these powers by previous governments. So I can assure you this government will be looking at it very carefully indeed.

Mr. Nixon: But we can assume the government would accept the ten per cent addition to the transfers from the federal government if they were in fact not directly aimed at a specific programme?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would have to see what terms and conditions would be attached to them, because nothing comes without terms and conditions and various strings attached to it, and I can only assure you that we will look at it very, very carefully indeed. I think we already have a programme under way in this province which will be of benefit and will recognize the position of our French-speaking children. We are quite anxious for any financial assistance we can get from the federal government, but the member can understand we may be just a little bit leery about shared-cost programmes at the present moment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a point of privilege.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is that in the Toronto Daily Star today, Monday, December 16, on page 45, there is an article entitled "Metro Students Call Off Mass Walkout over Longer School Year" and the following is in the second-last paragraph:

Woburn Collegiate students have enlisted aid from Tim Reid, NDP Scarborough East, in their fight against extension.

Mr. Deans: We should be rising on the point of order.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is because it sounds like something the NDP would do.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if I could get my voice over the ruckus that is being raised, I would like to say that I am not a member of the NDP, never have been and never want to be.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, the assurance was unnecessary.

I have a series of questions, Mr. Speaker, the first two to the Prime Minister held over from last week.

When does the Prime Minister expect a report on the investigations instituted by himself nearly two years ago into the conflict of interest problem at the municipal level as illustrated by the Collins case in London?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I make no apologies for the time that this has taken. It has proven to be a very complex problem. I think the hon. member is aware of this. It has been debated in one form on another—

Mr. MacDonald: It is being compounded, though.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We enlarged the scope of it at the request of the hon. member for Riverdale, as I recall, to take into account the positions, for instance, of boards of governors of universities. The whole question of conflict of interest is one that is very, very difficult to deal with.

The Collins case in London was a case in question. There is another case in the city of London concerning a man by the name of Bradford which poses some additional difficulties, and we hope that we will be able to find what will be a reasonable solution to this problem. This committee has been working very hard, and the length of time they have taken is a measure of the difficulties that they have encountered.

I would hope that they would have a report in our hands within the next few weeks and I sincerely hope that we will be able to put some legislation before this House before this session ends late next spring, hopefully. So I will just assure the hon. member that we are very interested in this problem. We know what it is doing in the municipalities. We know what it does in terms of getting people to run for office. It is very difficult if one is going to be accused of all sorts of things which may not in fact be so, or if one must appear to be pure, regardless of what one may or may not in fact be.

I mean there are some real problems, and I hope that we will have something to put before the House. But I would caution the members not to look for any simple solution, because frankly there is not one.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The hon. Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) is the expert on interest, they should let him handle it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question to the Prime Minister from last week—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear that interjection, but if the hon. member has something to say concerning me, I should be glad if he would repeat it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well the Minister is interrupting then.

Interjections by hon. members

Mr. MacDonald: I have the floor, do I not, Mr. Speaker? I would hate to think of the interruptions if he did hear the interjections.

Hon. Mr. White: If the hon. member has got something to say about me let him speak up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for York South has the floor. Perhaps we could—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister.

Will the Ontario government make representations on behalf of the residents and businessmen of this province to the Canadian Transportation Commission in forthcoming hearings on Bell Canada's application to raise its permissible level of earnings from 6.6 per cent to 8 per cent, and for authority to increase basic telephone rates approximately 10 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this government is making arrangements to be represented at those hearings. We have copies of the representations being made by Bell Canada. They are presently being analyzed by The Department of the Treasury and Economics and by the Attorney General in order that we may prepare a position that we think would be in the best interest of the people of this province. We will be represented at the hearings.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister again, a new question this time.

In view of the controversy over the unrepresentative nature of the committee which was responsible for the choice of art in the Ontario government office complex, as detailed in the Toronto Daily Star December 14, will the government consider the appointment of a committee from the Ontario Council of Arts and the Art Gallery of Ontario to act as a continuing body for the selection of art for public buildings?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, yes, I would be quite happy to consider that. I can only tell you that we will never satisfy these two groups—the avant-garde on one hand and the traditionalists on the other.

Mr. MacDonald: Bring them both into the picture.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: As Minister of Education, I was in between the two of them for a good many years, and whatever one does, the other disagrees with. It takes more—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Turn it over to the press gallery.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It takes more than a mere mortal to solve this particular problem. We knew the alternative to a row over this was no art—I mean, literally, that is about the size of it. We recognize the difficulties in trying to reconcile the irreconcilable points of view that these artistic people have. Naturally, we will do everything in our power to see that the decisions are made with a minimum of friction.

But once again, from experience, I would say it is not going to be an easy task. For instance, I opened an art show, Mr. Speaker, a week or so ago at the Art Gallery of Ontario and there was certainly public money put into the prizes awarded. It was a different type of jury that chose the art, and you should really go and look at it and make up your own minds, if this is what you would like to have over in the new complex. I do not often give opinions one way or the other, but I have seen both and you will see what wide gulfs there are between the representational artist and the traditional artist. It is all very interesting, but do not expect peace between these groups because you will never achieve it. However, we will use the arts council to go as far as we can in attempting to satisfy everyone.

As I say, the alternative is no art at all.

Mr. MacDonald: No, Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is not possible that the gulf might be bridged if you had a committee that is representative of both sides?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Lots of luck!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there is virtue in what the member says and I would be delighted to use the good offices of the arts council to get it off my back. I would just be delighted.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Since some chain stores are selling pre-packaged grapes without indicating the country of origin, will the Minister explain why regulation 141, section 3, subsection (e) under The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act is not being enforced?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, it has been departmental policy to apply the regulations of the grades and sales Act to those commodities which enter into active competition with domestic produce, or those commodities for which definite grades have been established. In The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act there are a number of named commodities for which these provisions do apply, and one of these commodities is grapes, Mr. Speaker.

However, the inspectors of the inspection service branch of our department as well as the federal inspectors work together. In some areas the federal inspectors do the inspecting under our regulations and in other areas we do the inspecting under their regulations. There is an interchange of inspection responsibilities not only for the same commodities involved in various areas of the province, but we work together very closely to avoid duplication.

Our inspectors have applied the regulations only to the Lebrusca type of grape, which is a type produced in Ontario and in the areas enjoying the same climatic conditions that our grape producing areas have in this province. The Vinifera type of grape is produced in the warmer climates such as California and other places, and is not considered to be in active competition with our produce in this province. As such, there has never been a very strong set of grades applied to it.

With regard to the matter which the hon. member raises concerning the sale of these products not having been identified, I am not disputing at all that this is not the case, but I think, generally speaking—certainly in the chain stores or in food stores or fruit stores where I have seen these grapes sold in the past—they have been sold from boxes that clearly state the country of origin, and generally speaking they are a very high quality. In some chain stores, where the product has not been identified on the box it has been taken from, a sign has been established there saying, "Produce of the United States of America."

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, if the Minister would permit. In the first place, 41 of the 61 Dominion stores in this city, on Saturday, gave no indication at all of origin; you could not see the box, so you had no idea where they came from. The regulation is very specific:

No person shall pack, transport, ship, advertise, sell or offer for sale any produce—

That is the lead-off in section 3. Then subsection (e) is:

—that has been transported into Ontario and that has been packaged for sale in Ontario, unless the package containing the produce is marked to indicate the country or province of origin and the other provisions of this regulation have been complied with respecting the produce.

My question to the Minister is: By what right has anybody, including the inspectors of the Minister's department, the choice of putting his own interpretation on a regulation which is explicit—that all produce brought in and packaged must indicate where it came from?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, obviously there has been some breach of the regulations in this particular regard—

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —in this particular regard, if what my hon. friend has said is correct, and I am certainly not disputing this—I was not in those chain stores, I do not know. I am simply saying that I am sure the member will appreciate that in the past there has not been any great problem as far as quality complaints are concerned, because this product is really not conflicting with any produce that is produced in Ontario. The general policy of the department has been that where a product was not conflicting with Ontario produce and not adversely affecting Ontario producers, there was no real problem. It may be that certain procedures have been implemented recently that circumscribe the regulations, as the hon. member has pointed out.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure us that the regulations, as they now stand and until they are changed, will be lived up to?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: All I can say is that we will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a strange way for those who are guardians of their own laws and regulations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member will go on with his questions.

Mr. MacDonald: My question is to the Minister of University Affairs.

Has the government discarded, as suggested by the Committee of University Presidents, the proposed commission to study post-secondary education, terms of reference for which were announced by the Minister in the Legislature on June 5, 1967?

Secondly, if the government has discarded this proposed commission, what alternative methods are being resorted to for a systematic study of post-secondary education in Ontario—other than the national commission on the relations between universities and government, established in the summer of 1968 by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada and the Canadian Association of University Teachers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a similar question presented by the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) and the member for Scarborough East on December 3, as quoted in Hansard. I think this is substantially the same, but I will just repeat very briefly the observations I made on that occasion. That is to say the government has not abandoned the idea of a study of the needs of post-secondary education in the province, projecting it ahead over the next decade or so. But because of the study that is going on at the national level, we are suggesting a reorientation of the study to a certain degree.

I have communicated this thought to the Committee of Presidents, the Ontario Confederation of Faculty Associations, and the council of regents of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology with some suggestions, and we are in the process of receiving some response to it. I think it is fair to state, Mr. Speaker, that while we are very hopeful that the work of the committee on university-government relationships, which was established by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada in conjunction with the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Canadian Union of Students, certainly will be helpful to us in any of this discussion or the decision-making process, we still feel there are certain issues that are related directly to the province of Ontario which require consideration of this kind. I have communicated these ideas to those three organizations with an expected response, I hope, very shortly from them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has a question of the Prime Minister from last week.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question to the Premier of Ontario is as follows:

As a result of the advice received from the Attorney General, would the Premier inform the House as to the legal position of the provincial government in regard to the raceway on Lakeshore Boulevard West in Toronto?

Secondly, if the government is of the opinion that no action is required of it to legalize the raceway as planned, will it initiate legislation, or take other political action, in order to stop the proposed abuse of a major roadway in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the metropolitan council has asked two departments for opinions on this matter. They are being prepared by the Attorney General and as soon as we have those in a form to send to the council, I will put them before the House. I would think that would be within the next day or so.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify this. I understood the Attorney General had sent some type of answer to the Premier's office. I have had different questions before the House and I am trying to get an answer.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can assure you that I will have an answer for you, probably within 24 hours. But it is being correlated between two departments.

Mr. Trotter: So we may expect to hear from you tomorrow? Very well.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has two questions of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Shulman: I have one question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: One has been transferred; that is correct.

Mr. Shulman: Is it the policy of the government to allow members of this Legislature to visit public institutions without prior notice?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there is no policy as broad as that set out in the question. We have institutions in which the primary concern must always be the health and position of the inmates and therefore it would be impossible to have a completely open policy.

On the other hand, we have not really anything to hide in the conduct of these institutions and they are available, within what might be termed reasonable limits, for members of the Legislature to visit. I think this has been the case over the many years and I have noticed members of this House visiting various institutions we have.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of The Department of Health has issued instructions that MPP's are not to be allowed in the public institutions under that department unless prior notice has been arranged so that a conducted tour can be managed?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this. But I have no doubt that whatever regulations govern visits have been laid down, as I point out, in the interests of the patients in the institutions.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Prime Minister agree with me that it is very bad public relations—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member will enquire if the Prime Minister will accept a supplementary question.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Prime Minister accept a further supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh yes.

Mr. Shulman: Thank you, Mr. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister agree with me that it gives a very bad impression, both to the MPP's and the public, if they are not allowed into these institutions by blanket order, except if prior notice is given?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question. I can only say this, that over the years I have detected a certain desire for mischief-making in some of the visits that have been made. This is the position—of those who are charged with the responsibility of operating these institutions and looking after those poor unfortunates who happen to be there, they must first discharge their responsibility to them. I think that if there are rules and regulations laid down, I can only repeat that they are laid down in order to ensure that the people who are in these institutions being treated are not disturbed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a further question.

Mr. Martel: A question of the Prime Minister.

Has the Premier received a telegram from the Sudbury Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers demanding immediate action to stop local pollution of air, water, and vegetation?

Secondly, what steps does the Premier intend to take in this situation?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have received this telegram. The government is proceeding on the steps we have initiated to ensure that the matter of pollution in this particular area is cleaned up as quickly and as efficaciously as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. Is the government developing a summer employment programme for students in 1969, because of the inability of a large number of students to obtain employment during the summer of 1968?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for—

Mr. Speaker: Windsor-Walkerville.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, I know. But there is another question, Mr. Speaker, which was on exactly the same subject.

Mr. Speaker: Of the Minister of Education, yes.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is there another one here? Well, in any event, Mr. Speaker, in the first place, we are very aware of the fact that we have more young people staying in school. This, of course, means that there are more young people looking for summer employment. As we said last spring, when this matter was discussed, it is impossible for this government to assume the responsibility of providing employment for all students in this province. As our student population increases, both at the post-secondary and at the secondary level, I think we may look for this problem to increase.

We have gone over our own departments to ensure that we can and do employ the largest number of young people that we can. On the other hand, we cannot accept the responsibility for making and creating government jobs for students in the summer time.

We are also working with the federal government because theirs is the ultimate responsibility. They have the machinery established all across Canada in their Canada Manpower offices to provide all the employment that is possible, and to organize the employment available for young people.

In addition, we are encouraging industry to take on young people in the summer time. No doubt between now and the time this situation arises again, which will be when classes are complete in the spring, I would hope that we would have a co-ordinated programme with the federal government. But I would have to come back to my original point, and that is the government cannot assume the responsibility of providing a job for every secondary school student or every student in the post-secondary institutions because we are heading into a real problem here as our school population increases.

Mr. Nixon: The government will have to do much more.

Mr. Speaker: There are two questions. The questions the hon. Prime Minister was referring to were placed with the Minister of Education, one by the hon. member who has just questioned the Premier, and the other by the member for Peterborough. Perhaps we could dispose of them at this time also while this matter is under discussion.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. I forgive you for your confusion in this matter with the overdue absence of the Prime Minister. By the way, I wish to express my sincere joy in seeing the Prime Minister here again, although in a typical Tory fullness-of-time fashion, he did take 72 hours to get over a 24-hour illness—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be given the opportunity to place his question shortly. Will he please—

Mr. Ben: I suggest that perhaps the question was in a such vein that the Prime Minister has just answered it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question was answered?

Mr. Ben: All right, I will put my question when the time comes and he can answer it again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will just resume his seat for a moment or two, I think we can get this sorted out. We are trying to get these questions answered in a reasonable way. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville placed the same question of the Prime Minister as he did of the Minister of Education and therefore I think that that should be disposed of. And the hon. member for Peterborough placed a very similar question of the Minister of Education. And then it had been my intention to have the hon. member for Humber place his question immediately following to clear it up and then go on with the rest of his questions that he has placed for today.

So perhaps the hon. member for Peterborough would place his question.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you are aware, the question was placed some days ago and in the meantime in the Throne Speech debate the member for Scarborough East has commented rather extensively on this, but I think perhaps the Minister might like to answer this question.

Is the Minister aware of the increased difficulty for Grade 13 students who wish to secure jobs to pay for their university expenses created as a result of the Minister's extension of the school year for all secondary school grades?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there was a second part to the question.

Mr. Pitman: Actually the next question is on a different topic altogether.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this will answer the first part of the question: we are quite aware that some students will have, perhaps, some greater difficulty in finding employment because of the extension. At the same time it should be kept in mind that for those students who will be passed on the basis of their year's marks, and so on—those with 60 per cent the same time factor will apply. This, of course, covers a goodly percentage of the students who will be going on to post-secondary experience. And because this applies right across the board, the position of the students, because of the five additional school days, will be relatively the same as it is this year. It will apply to all students who are seeking summer employment.

So the relative position, I suggest, will be almost exactly the same and, because of the substantial percentage of students who will move ahead, because of their 60 per cent recommended mark, the total number affected perhaps will not be as great as some of the students anticipated when they first heard this announcement.

Mr. Pitman: Might I ask a supplementary question—perhaps in two parts?

First, I was wondering if the Minister might consider a completely different timetable for grade 13 students, in view of the special difficulties they might have in competition with students in lower grades in the high school system.

Second, I am wondering whether the Minister has heard from the principals and teachers in regard to this extension. Has he had any indication of concern that they may have difficulty in marking exams, entering marks, holding meetings, and so on, in the days that are left in June? Will they be able to carry out their duties effectively during that period?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I have had any official word from the headmasters or from the teachers' federation. There are obviously some who are not enthusiastic.

I would only say this. The experience from last year in several schools that were taken as, shall we say, guidelines, indicated that in the two-week period that was available it was possible for the professional staff to meet the situation in the time that was available to them. We have moved to a date which still leaves roughly two weeks to have the results available by the end of June.

We do not see any major problem as far as administration is concerned. It will mean some adjustment, of course. It will mean that the schools will have to, to a degree, adjust their procedures. But at the same time, Mr. Speaker, it must be noted that the function of the school is to provide an educational experience. We have a very real responsibility and, as I pointed out in my statement before the orders of the day, the taxpayers of this province have $2.5 million per school day invested in the secondary school programme. So I think we should be making every effort to see that we can have as long an educational experience available for these young people as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East should place his question.

Mr. T. Reid: If I could, because they are related quite integrally with the question of the member for Peterborough. Perhaps the Minister would like me to place them both, they are on the same subject.

In view of the Minister's recent decision to extend the high school school-year, which reduces the length of time available to a grade 13 student to earn money between leaving high school and going to an institution of post-secondary education, will the Minister immediately revise the present Ontario Student Awards Programme condition pertaining to the amount of money a grade 13 student is assumed to have saved from summer employment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the current expectation of summer savings for students entering into the first year of any post-secondary institution is relatively limited in amount because we want it to have as general an application as it can. In other words, taking into account the various dates that a student may leave the secondary system, the amount of expected summer savings for these students in their first year is $250, which amounts to $125 per month, assuming that July and August are the most productive months.

Quite obviously, if a student, for reasons beyond his control, is not able to earn or save that amount of money, as the hon. member well knows, through the appeal procedure, we are prepared to alter this rule. We are quite prepared within The Department of University Affairs to analyse what the amount in dollars would be in the five additional days in school and relate this to these student award programmes to see that no student is prejudiced.

I must say, once again, Mr. Speaker, we must be very concerned about the investment we have in the secondary school programme and we must endeavour—and I think the leader of the Opposition made some observations on this himself not too many years ago—to see that there is a valid use of the school plant for as long a period of time as educationally feasible.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe a supplementary would be in order and I do not believe the other one should be asked at the moment.

The hon. member for Humber has the floor—a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Do I understand from the Minister's remarks that the $250 might well be reduced by some fraction as the consequence of the increased time grade 13 students have to be in school?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we are quite prepared, within The Department of University Affairs, to analyse what would be the total economic effect, related to the $250, of the additional five or six days a student may have to stay in school.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has the floor. If he feels the Prime Minister can enlarge upon the answers given to the questions about the school year for students he might ask question 325. If not, he can proceed with the other questions he has.

Mr. Ben: It is not a question, it is a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I resent, extremely, being gagged by you and when you would insolently suggest to me that if I feel the Prime Minister has an answer to the question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I am on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Would the hon. member please use much more moderate language in this House. While we all understand his feelings and the fact that they do occasionally come out the way they have done just now, I think it would be appreciated if he made his point without extravagant vocabulary.

Mr. Ben: I will continue the way I was. If there are any words you find unparliamentary in "May's", I will be very happy to apologize, but I do not think you are yet a God that I cannot use ordinary English language in this House when it applies to you.

The fact remains that the question was put in on December 11. I have been patiently sitting to ask this question and, when I rise on a point of privilege, you cut me off when the point of privilege is in order.

Now, if you are going to have two rules here, okay, that is fine, say so and I will abide by the rules, but do not be insolent about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I believe everybody is entitled to his day here and have equal treatment. It is simply because I use language that may offend the Speaker's sensitivities. As long as it is not vulgar language, I am entitled to use it.

Mr. Lewis: Better use vulgar language.

Mr. Ben: The question that I put on the 11th for which we have been waiting to get an answer and which should have been asked at the same time as the member for Windsor-Walkerville asked his question—perhaps I should ask Mr. Speaker if he has it in front of him, just to check up how good his system is here—is this:

In order to prevent student unrest in the lack of summer work that existed this year, what action has been taken by the government to date to ensure that all secondary students who are able to work and who wish to work will have summer employment in 1969?

Mr. Prime Minister, I regret that in the Speaker's opinion—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question, he will return to his seat and await an answer.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I have the question and I believe I have answered it. I do not think he would like me to go through that again.

I think my answer to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville would suffice as an answer to this question. Furthermore, my voice is gradually disappearing and I would not get to the end of it, anyway.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough. Would he ask that other question of the Minister of Education—the second part of the question?

Mr. Pitman: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Has the Minister agreed to co-operate with the universities in passing on to them, in an organized way, the standing of students completing their Grade 13 year in Ontario secondary schools?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, one might have a very interesting discussion on what the member's definition of an organized way may be, but certainly we are quite prepared, as we did in the past. The Grade 13 marks were collected and tapes and print-outs were made available to the universities last year and we fully intend to carry on with this procedure.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur has questions.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Will the Minister inform the House if the legislation concerning the incorporation of the new Lakehead city will be introduced prior to the Christmas recess?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to page 281 of Hansard at which point I said:

Prior to the introduction of this legislation I shall go to the Lakehead in January—

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

First, will the Minister name the crop insurance agent in the Thunder Bay area and give the date he began the promotion of crop insurance in the rural Port Arthur-Fort William area?

Second question: Since it appears most farmers for Fort William-Port Arthur were not properly acquainted with the crop insurance programme in time to apply its benefits to last season's critical crop losses, will the Minister reconsider their urgent requests for departmental assistance?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have to confess that I cannot name the crop insurance agent nor can I name the date that he began his promotional campaign because he was never appointed. This is of great concern and regret to me.

The crop insurance commission, when this question was asked, informed me that they have tried to find an agent in the area. They had been unsuccessful. I was of the opinion, when I reported last week to the House on crop insurance work in other areas of northern Ontario, that all areas had crop insurance agents. I was greatly surprised and more than a little disappointed to learn that this was not the case.

However, we do have an agricultural representative within the Lakehead area, the Thunder Bay area. Mr. N. W. Harrison retired and a new man came in this last summer. He had been forwarded all of the information pertaining to crop insurance availability in the north and to the rates of premium, the amounts of coverage that would be available to any farmer in the area. I suppose it could be debated whether or not he did enough promotional work on his own; whether or not the promotional work that was done by radio and television and in the newspaper advertising reached the farmers. This may be the case. My hon. friend, the member for Port Arthur has, I believe, a very wide listening audience to his own radio programme and I am sure he could very easily have brought to the attention of the people of that area this—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Who is running that department?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Am I not able to give the hon. member credit for something he could have done and probably did do?

An hon. member: It was part of the member's job.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. Speaker, surely there is nothing wrong with me suggesting that with the promotional programme that is now being planned in our department I would hope that the services of the hon. member for Port Arthur could be enlisted in this, if he has not already done so. I say this quite sincerely with no reflection whatever on whether he has or has not. It may well be that he has. I do not know. But I think that we have to recognize all of these things.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the Minister not know what is going on in northwestern Ontario at all?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that I know a great deal more about what is going on in northwestern Ontario than the hon. member for Rainy River. For instance, he didn't know about the Stratton cattle sale. He never had anything to do with it; he did not even think enough of the co-operative cattlemen's sale to come out to see it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Then he sits here and says we do not know anything about what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Minister will please confine himself to answering the question which he was asked.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I will do that exactly, but I would like to enlist your very considerable influence in this House, in seeing that the member for Rainy River abides by your rules.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not at all. I am greatly concerned because I speak as a farmer in this province who knows what it is to lose his crop, believe me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I am greatly concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am greatly concerned, Mr. Speaker, that all farmers of this province have not availed themselves of the opportunity to purchase crop insurance. I do not know—it is probably—

Mr. Nixon: Five per cent?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It probably is something like that. I do not know how one persuades them to do this because, frankly, there are a great many of us who really do not buy crop insurance. I cannot say why; I suppose it is because we have always carried our own insurance. It is very difficult to change that policy and I would suggest that many people who—

Mr. V. M. Singer: It is hard to buy it if there are not any salesmen around.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There are salesmen around. The agricultural representative would have sold the crop insurance to every farmer in the area, every farmer; he had the application forms there.

The truth of the matter is there was not one single enquiry in the whole area. Now why? I do not know.

This is the problem. I do not know how we can persuade farmers to buy something they do not want to buy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa—sorry.

Mr. Martel: Buy advertising!

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister will answer my second question.

He answered the first part of the question but he has not answered the second part which is whether he will reconsider the request of farmers up there for special need because, in effect, they just did not know about crop insurance.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether they knew about it or not, and neither can he. I would say this—

Mr. Knight: They did not know about it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say this—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, let me say this. As far as we are concerned, I have to go back to the question that I replied to when the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) asked me this question at the introduction of crop insurance. He said, "Will adverse weather assistance be continued after the introduction of crop insurance"?

I said, "no". I live by that decision and I have to maintain that policy.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a question to the Treasurer.

In view of the select committee on taxation's recommendation that passenger vehicles be charged a flat rate of $25 as a licence fee, why did the government increase licence fees to $35?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, the change in passenger vehicle licence fees was announced in the Budget statement last March 12, prior to the establishment of the select committee on taxation. I would refer the hon. member to page 18 of the 1968 Budget statement for further particulars. I should also advise the hon.

member that the increase was not to $35 across the board; it involved an increase to $20 for four-cylinder cars; $27.50 for six-cylinder cars and $35 for eight-cylinder cars, particulars of which are also shown on page 18 of the Budget statement.

Mr. MacDonald: So your revenue is now about 110 per cent of expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister is not in his seat. The member will have to wait till he returns.

The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine has a question.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in three parts to the Minister of Correctional Services.

Has the Minister been advised that a girl in the Grandview training school tried to hang herself in the last few days?

If so, is the Minister aware that representations were made prior to the girl being committed to Galt, advising the authorities that this child, who is not a juvenile delinquent, was severely disturbed and should be placed in an institution where treatment is available?

Will the Minister now arrange for the girl to be transferred to an institution equipped to deal with emotionally-disturbed children?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is "no". Therefore, the other two parts of the question do not apply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East may now place his question to the Minister of Education.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question left over from last week; do I ask that one first?

To the Minister of Education:

Will the Minister table correspondence with Mr. Piekoszewski regarding the non-provision of schooling for his retarded daughter?

Two, when did the Metro Board of Education take over this responsibility in Toronto from The Department of Education? Is the department still responsible in the other areas of the province?

Three, how many children are in a similar position throughout Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no. This, I think, is consistent with the hon. member's point of view with respect to personal records and student involvement on records. I am sure that to do this would be contrary to his own view.

Second, when did the Metro Board of Education take over this responsibility from the department? I really do not know quite what the hon. member is suggesting.

The education of trainable retarded children in Toronto does not officially come under the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board until January 1, 1969. It has been under the jurisdiction of the Metro Toronto retarded children's authority for some years.

With respect to the third question. It cannot be answered because it is based on question number one, which assumed that the child was not attending school.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, to return to that debate. Another question, in three parts:

How many millions of dollars have The Department of Education of the province of Ontario and local boards of education spent on computers and data processing operations in the past four years?

Second, is one of the prime usages of this data processing equipment the rapid production of high school student report cards at the end of the school year?

Third, does the Minister's recent decision to extend the current school year by — my understanding is two school weeks — mean that the report cards of Grade 13 students will not be able to be processed by the computers in time for the current deadline for application for admission to universities in Ontario, without: (a) rewriting the computer programmes; and/or (b) additional expenditures of public money to mount a crash effort to process the data in the more limited time available?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first part of the question, I can give the hon. member a figure for 1968-1969 which is $1.7 million. This is substantially higher than 1967-1968, because during that period of time the computer operations at the Ontario Institute were merged with those of EDC. In other words, they were sharing the same facilities.

That is the figure for the education data centre. I am sorry, 1966-1967 was $550,000, 1965-1966 was $200,000 and 1967-1968 was $726,000.

With respect to the equipment of the boards, Mr. Speaker, it is really impossible to give any specific breakdown of cost, because their cost for computer time and data processing is built into their administrative programmes. Some boards have some computer time and some hardware related to curriculum and instruction, but for the majority it is built into their total administrative cost. It is impossible for us to look at the boards' total administrative costs, and determine what portion of that is related to computer time—and data processing.

With respect to question No. 2, we have an experimental programme for this purpose in co-operation with three boards only, but I do not think we would describe this as a prime use at this point.

The third question, of course, does not relate to the department's data centre. I am not sure whether the hon. member has any specific board in mind, or any specific case. If he has, I would be delighted to look into it for him. I might say that there were schools last year which mailed out their final report cards by June 18, as I said in my earlier statement. There were a number of boards that were able to do this, and that was two weeks after the students' release date of June 3. And as I said in my statement, it would appear from the experience in several board areas of last year the two weeks mean work, there is no question about this, but it does provide sufficient time for proper administration.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the Minister accept a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Has the Minister not received a brief from at least one board of education concerning the specific problem that I posed in subsection 3 of my question—that is, that the school boards might actually have to rewrite their computer programming? The changeover cost, of course, would be very high, so they would have to make other financial adjustments.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that we have received this specific brief on this point, but I will look into it. As I say, they may have to rewrite some programmes, although once again, at this stage I cannot give the hon. member the exact figures, we hope to have them within four or five weeks. Once again a substantial percentage of the students were recommended—that is they did not go through this procedure—and this will still pertain, so that it will not be the total number of Grade 13 students that will be involved in any administrative change.

Mr. T. Reid: My final question to the Minister is this:

With regard to members of existing school boards, who have been asked to continue on for the next six months: (a) Will these people be receiving any pay, and if so, by whom; (b) If members of the 1968 school boards have been elected to municipal councils, will they be eligible to continue on in this service?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, members of existing boards may be requested by the corresponding new board to serve on a committee; this is the way it will be structured. They may be paid an honorarium not exceeding the rate they have been paid, and which applied to the former board effective December 31, 1968. They will serve in this capacity on the committee, and they may be paid an honorarium comparable to that which they have been receiving for committee work.

With respect to the second part of the question, I think, Mr. Speaker, this obviously involves something of a legal opinion, and perhaps if the hon. member has been approached on this, he might suggest to the board or the municipal council that it take a look at it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Is the Ontario Northland Railway considering replacing the passenger trains between Porquis Junction and Timmins with buses? If so, why?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is no, not at the present time.

Mr. Ferrier: I have another question, Mr. Speaker, of the same Minister:

How many carloads each of copper, zinc and other mineral concentrates were shipped by the ONR from the Hoyle Concentrator by Ecstall Mining during the month of September? What was the destination of these shipments?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the number of carloads shipped in the month of September was 812. Lead and zinc concentrates were shipped to the following places: Quebec City, 440 cars; Little Current, nine cars; Port Maitland, 28 cars; U.S. points, 181 cars. Copper concentrates: Noranda, Que., 154 cars. That gives a total of 812 carloads.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education.

First, will the Minister advise us as to whether or not he has received the petition from a large majority of residents of the township of Chisholm, which is mainly bilingual, requesting transference of their area from the Parry Sound board of education to the Nipissing board of education?

Secondly, why was this township placed in the east Parry Sound board of education area, as opposed to the general rule, and the seminary was placed in the combined Nipissing district separate school board area?

Thirdly, will the Minister present during this session, a bill to provide for the required changes? If not, will the Minister assure the people concerned that their children will have bilingual education provided for them by the Parry Sound board of education, as is now available to them in the North Bay secondary school system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question of course is yes.

The answer to the second question relates to the area which was designated as the East Parry Sound School Division, and it contains only two separate school zones within his boundaries, as perhaps the hon. member knows. One of them is in the township of Chisholm, and one at Kearney. There is no district combined separate school zone with boundaries co-terminus to the East Parry Sound School Division. The separate school zone at Kearney is unaffected by the legislation because of its remoteness from other separate school zones, and the separate school zone at Chisholm township was attached to the Nipissing district school zone because of its proximity to that unit. A portion of the township of Chisholm was already included in the Powassan High School District which formed part of the East Parry Sound Division.

With respect to the third part of the question. I will get a copy of the section to the hon. member. Section 68 of The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act already provides the right for a student to attend a secondary school in another district to take a course of study that includes French for French-speaking pupils, if it is not available in his own secondary school district. This is already in the statute.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, perhaps he could clarify the answer to the second question because he answered the question by saying why the separate school areas were placed where they are. But he did not answer the question of why the Chisholm area was not placed in the public school or the board of education area of Nipissing, instead of Parry Sound.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think, really, I did. The hon. member may not have understood it, but I thought that I indicated that it was because of geography and proximity to the other centres. This is why the decision was made to include it in this fashion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. When will the balance of this year's legislative grants be paid to local boards of education?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, most boards will receive cheques in payment of the 1968 grants by the end of this week, in time for Christmas, hopefully. Most of them have already received them. This does not apply to the Metro boards because the necessary data are not yet available to permit a final calculation, but the rest of the boards should have it before Christmas.

Mr. Worton: May I ask a supplementary? Why the delay from November 30? Are there new types of bookkeeping being set up?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I do not think there is any new bookkeeping, Mr. Speaker, but the task is becoming a shade more involved and will be for another year. Hopefully perhaps not a year from now, but two years from now, with the larger units of administration where we are only dealing with 150 or 200 boards—the task will be somewhat simpler.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Has his department produced a communications map of this province showing various means of communication used by the Ontario Provincial Police, Ontario Hydro, the Emergency Measures Organization, and the Forest Protection Service?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for High Park, on the first part of the question the answer is no.

With reference to the second part, the Ontario Research Foundation has done work on this project as part of the study of this department's air service and communications system.

On number 3, until the report and the map have been received, I—

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have not placed the other question. They would all depend on the answer to the first one. May I place those before he answers them, please?

The second question was: Has the Ontario Research Foundation done some work on this project? The third was: Does this map show a massive duplication of services and will the department supply me with a copy of the map?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the second part of my answer, the Ontario Research Foundation has done work on this project as part of our department's work in conjunction with the air service and communications system.

3. Until the report is finalized we are not in a position to comment.

4. As soon as the map is available we will be pleased to send the member a copy of it.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Will the Minister intervene to give Charles Nairn the $1,700 owed to him in the form of a bond held by the department?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Yes, I am currently looking into this matter and I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on December 12, as recorded on page 580 of Hansard, you advised the House that the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) had an answer to a question that had been placed by the member for Humber. You then asked the leader of the Opposition if he was content that the answer be given. The leader of the Opposition is recorded as having answered "yes". The Minister then proceeded to give an answer.

I would point out, first of all, that I did not put the question, but submitted it through the usual channels to you for approval. I feel it is proper for the leader of the Opposition to state that an answer is required, but I suggest that it is wrong to say that a question has been put.

Secondly, if the Speaker permits a Minister to answer a question in the absence of the person who puts the question, I think proper procedure would at least require the Minister to read the question which was being answered so that posterity, if posterity ever gets around to reading Hansard, would at least know which question the Minister was answering.

On page 581, Mr. Speaker, you are recorded as having made this statement:

The hon. Minister of Health has answers to two questions, one from the member for Humber and the other from the member for Grey-Bruce. Would it be in order to have those answers or would you wait?

In this particular instance, Mr. Speaker did not have even the courtesy to ask whether the leader of the Opposition wants the answers put. You simply directed the statement to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would point out to the hon. member that that observation of Mr. Speaker was addressed to the leader of the Opposition. An answer was given and the—

Hon. Mr. White: Sit down when Mr. Speaker is talking.

Mr. Speaker: The question was therefore answered.

Mr. Ben: At any rate I would record it at least here, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member had been in his seat at that time he would have known what was said by the Speaker. The Speaker is now pointing out to him what was said and how it was said and the proceedings which took place.

I have no objections to dealing with the questions before the orders of the day in the best interests of the House. I would point out to the hon. member for Humber that it is my desire to have the two Opposition parties share equally in the question period; I do my best to see that they do that. I do my best to see that the members who get my eye have the opportunity of asking their questions.

When it seems best to Mr. Speaker that questions should be asked in a certain order because they run that way, it is my responsibility, and I try to accept it, to have them asked that way. I admit that no one can satisfy everyone. I would be pleased to change or deal with them in the manner which suits the great majority of the members here, because this is, presumably, a democracy and the majority rules. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Ben: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I draw to your attention that you are, in essence, chastising me for quoting Hansard, and you say that I should have been here to hear what you said. I only presume, therefore, that Hansard has properly recorded you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is placing words in Mr. Speaker's mouth. Mr. Speaker did not say that the hon. member should have been here. I said that if the hon. member had been here, he would have heard what Mr. Speaker said.

Mr. Ben: Then I presume I am not reading correctly what you are recorded as having said, Mr. Speaker, because I read from Hansard on page 581.

Mr. Speaker: And I pointed out to the hon. member that what I said was addressed to the leader of the Opposition. The hon. member was not here so he does not know to whom it was addressed.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Humber is verging on insolence.

Mr. Ben: My point, Mr. Speaker, is this. If it is expected that the Ministers answer questions, I think that the questioners should put the questions in the absence of the Ministers, and then the Minister can answer in the absence of the questioner. That is, if the member who has a question desires an answer, even in his own absence, of the Minister, he should put the question in the absence of the Minister. Then the Minister can answer. But if the member does not put the question in the absence of the Minister, then I suggest that the Minister cannot answer a question which was not put.

Now my position is this: I have two questions of different Ministers here, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: There will be no questions placed in the absence of a Minister. Questions which have been placed by a member, and which a Minister is ready to answer, will be answered in the absence of a member if the leader of the party to which that member belongs wishes that information to be given at once.

That is a ruling which I made some time ago. It has turned out very well and, unless

I am otherwise directed by the House, that is the ruling of the chair.

Mr. Ben: I take it that once a question is submitted to you, Mr. Speaker, that question must be asked and it cannot be withdrawn without your leave. Is that the position?

Mr. Speaker: The question can always be withdrawn by the member asking it, so far as Mr. Speaker is concerned.

Mr. Ben: I should say that if a question is put to you, once it is put to you, it is deemed to have been asked; because it was not asked in the House, so it must be deemed to be asked once it is submitted to you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might comment on the point of order. About two weeks ago, you mentioned that you were going to have an informal meeting of party leaders to discuss some of these problems as they arise. I would urge that you convene that meeting in the near future.

Mr. Ben: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, may I have an answer for my guidance? I asked you, is it to be presumed that once a question is put to your office, it is presumed to have been asked and should the member drop dead, that Minister will answer that question even though it was never asked?

Mr. Speaker: I have already answered the hon. member's question by saying that it had been presumed to have been asked, that it was merely submitted to the Speaker's office.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it is with delight that I continue my remarks from last week. I hope to make them fairly brief at this time. However, over the weekend a number of issues have been drawn to my attention and I would like to begin my remarks today by drawing your attention, and the attention of the hon. members to these two problems.

The member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) and I have placed a number of questions to the Minister of Education (Mr.

Davis) concerning the extension of the school year and how this might have certain adverse effects on students and teachers and education unless compensating policies are taken to offset some of these bad effects.

I would like to start my remarks, sir, by welcoming the members of the student council from Woburn Collegiate who are in your gallery, and to say that I am pleased that they have gone to the trouble of preparing a brief for the Minister of Education concerning this specific issue.

Too often we hear that students are irresponsible, that they are not willing to put in the hard work necessary for making changes in policy. I am delighted, sir, that these students have put the effort into the preparation of this brief and have presented it to the Minister of Education, at least to his secretary, with 1,200 signatures of fellow students at Woburn Collegiate.

As their member in this House, I would like to report on their brief. I believe that this is one way of making the voice of ordinary people, especially perhaps the younger people in our province, felt in the halls of this Legislature. So I would like to read their brief. I do this not because I necessarily agree with everything that is in their brief, but because I believe they have a right to be heard, and to be heard loudly, particularly when they act in a responsible way. I would like to make their views known to you, sir, and to my colleagues in this House.

In response to the recent regulation put forth by The Department of Education concerning the extension from May 30 to June 13 of the present school year, we, the students of Woburn Collegiate Institute, present this brief stating our objections to the said regulation.

Our first objection is to the short notice given to the students, teachers and to the employers of the students who, in order to be financially able to attend post-secondary educational institutions, must work during the summer. In previous years, university and community college students have had a three-week jump on all available summer employment but now they will have at least a five-week head start. Graduating secondary school students are in the same position as university students in that both must earn money for the following year's tuition. It is totally unfair that the university and community college students are in a better position to earn this money.

Also, we think that if we must attend school until June 13 it is necessary to change the current OSAP requirements which assume that a student will have saved $250 from summer earnings in order to qualify for a student award. Employers, in many cases, will not hire a student unless he is available to work for a full three months beginning June 1. It is very difficult for a student to save the required amount of $250, if he does not have a full-time job. It must also be noted that good paying part-time jobs are very hard to come by.

Our second objection is on behalf of the teachers and students together. Mr. Ward McAdam, vice-president of the Ontario secondary school teachers federation, has been quoted as saying, "It makes accurate year-end evaluation almost impossible." He is referring to the promotion committees that are set up in every school to determine whether the borderline students should be passed, be set back or be transferred into a different course. With the extension of the school year the time allotted for the meetings of the promotion committees would be cut in half, thus a fair and valid evaluation for each student is less likely to be made.

Also, because of the shortage of time for the teachers, the examinations are not apt to be marked so carefully.

Are we, as students, entitled to a reason for this late action? To this point, no valid or substantial reason has been given for the two-week extension. By the news media, we can only conclude that the purpose of this regulation is to enable or force the students to learn more. If this is the only reason, then this regulation will not serve its purpose. It is our feeling that a student will not learn that much more by wasting his energies, and the teachers', in a hot classroom for an extra ten school days.

We, as students, know that the most prevalent attitude among the students would be flippant and languid towards school.

At this point, we could elaborate on the faults and short-comings of the classroom system but we are sure that every one is fully aware of all the pertinent criticisms. We ask that Education Minister Davis give us a sound and well-grounded argument, which has so far been lacking for this regulation. We definitely feel that we are entitled to it.

Mrs. A. M. Clark, Scarborough board of education chairman, says, "Students will have to accommodate to the change," which she feels is just a step towards creating a 12-month school year. This quote appeared in an article in the Toronto Telegram last week.

Also Mr. Barry Lowes, chairman of the Metro board of education, has stated that this law is a step to a gradual changeover to an 11-month school year. Here again we feel that it is our right to know the grounds on which these statements are based.

In this brief, we have stated our main objections to this regulation and to the apparent lack of communication between The Department of Education and the students concerning this regulation. We, the students of Woburn Collegiate, ask that Education Minister Davis withdraw this regulation for this year, and that the regulation not be reinstated until such time that substantial arguments can be presented to support such a change.

Mr. Speaker, that is the end of the brief from the students of Woburn Collegiate. In my opinion, it is a very succinct brief. It is well informed and it is short and articulate. And I, sir, am proud to present it to this House at this time.

My more detailed remarks on the hon. Minister's decision are contained in Hansard for Friday. I will not repeat those remarks at this time but will simply refer the Minister of Education and other interested members to those remarks.

However, I would like also to put on record a letter addressed to the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight), which is from a teacher. I think it is interesting to note the views of this teacher. The letter is dated December 12, addressed to the member for Port Arthur, and it reads as follows:

Would you please attempt to ascertain from the Minister of Education the exact reasons for his putting back the last day of classes in high schools to June 13, and hence the first day of exams to June 16? This dictum from on high means that it is virtually impossible to complete marking and all his departmental rigmarole before the end of the first week of July. Perhaps he has forgotten these things, plus the fact that many students and teachers must attend summer school, plus the fact that many students are thus being deprived of at least part of their earning capacity over the summer months.

On the other hand, it may be a case of falling into some form of pressure and he is using his assistant deputy minister to pass it along to us civil servants. I, for one, am reasonably happy to put in eleven months of my year working a nine-to-five day and at least five-evenings-a-week routine. But let someone start chewing away very much of the free time still remaining to me, then I won't be a teacher in this province much longer.

In conclusion, may I repeat my request that you attempt to determine the rationale behind this latest dictatorial action. Nowhere else can I think of, that the employer—the government at that—can arbitrarily take a week of a person's own time without recompense.

Yours sincerely,

—and so on.

An hon. member: Did he sign it?

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, he did sign it, Mr. Speaker.

The point of these two briefs, I think—the basic point—is the way in which the decision was made and not so much the decision itself. It was done—by the number of letters I have here from students and other teachers, sir—in an arbitrary way and I think it represents the way in which this government conducts too many of its programmes.

I would point out that I am pleased that the teachers of this province, and the students of this province or many of them, are willing to voice their opinion directly to the Minister of Education. I might add, sir, that I am very pleased that the Minister of Education sometimes does respond to this type of pressure and does clarify his decisions, such as the decision that we heard today for the first time. That the $250 which was required from every student graduating from Grade 13 going on to university, was required in the determination of the student award, may be reduced—will be reduced, I think if we read Hansard, we will find—will be reduced, on a pro rata basis.

It is that type of decision that we have to get this Minister to take. He must be involved in the type of integrated decision-making and realize the effect of one decision in the area of education on other areas of education.

I would like next, sir, to turn to a question I know many members feel strongly about. That is the report of the committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the pollution of air, soil and water in the townships of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke in Haldimand county.

I have read this report carefully, trying to come to an evaluation of its contents in as objective a manner as possible, to try to determine how one should treat this report. Is it a whitewash of the government? Or is it not? Is it a substantial report that can be useful for guidelines in the future?

I would like to say that in my reading of this report, in my interpretation of this report, I do not find it to be a whitewash of the government policy. I find it to be a condemnation of the government's policy in the area of air and water pollution, particularly its effect on human beings and other living organisms.

I would like at this time, sir, to record some of these statements made in this report which do condemn the government's policies over the past—I will not say 25 years, sir—but since 1957, in this area of air and water pollution. I think that by a fair selection of condemning statements — I stress that; I attempted to be fair in my selection of these statements — it will be clear that in an absolute sense the policies of this government have been abysmal. It all depends on what standards one uses to judge their behaviour. But I shall make the following quotations directly from the report in order to let the report speak for itself.

The first quotation, sir, is found on page 238. It is a neat and direct quotation; I am not interpreting at this time:

That there has been fluorosis in some of the cattle on several of the farms in the townships of Dunn, Moulton, and Sherbrooke and the county of Haldimand is unquestionable. There certainly has been some loss of cattle from the ingestion of above-normal amounts of fluoride over a long period of time. There has been severe lameness in some cattle. There has been evidence of dental fluorosis in some cattle. There has been, in some cases, substantiation from fluoride analyses of urine and fodder.

My comment on that particular quotation, sir, is that the findings of that report were condemning. They found fluorosis in the cattle, and that is the absolute statement. If they go on to compare it with some figures showing how many cattle have died, then the substance of their remarks is diminished. But if you leave comparisons out of it, and out of some other statements that might have been made about the cattle, the fact is that that statement stands by itself, and condemns the air and water pollution policies of this government.

On page 295 of the report, again this is a direct quotation, the report states, there has been "some damage to vegetation in the Port Maitland area, and this was evident in 1962." So there was damage back in 1962, damage to vegetation. That fact stands by itself. The report notes however:

No complaints of damage to farm animals were made until the summer of 1965. The limed candle readings made in the area showed a dramatic increase in fluoride concentrations, and at some stations, ten-fold increases were noted. The committee concludes that there was a definite relationship between the sharp increase in fluoride emission from ERCO and the increase in vegetation damage and crippling effects on some farm animals after 1965.

There is no questioning that result. There is no questioning the conclusion that there has been damage to vegetation in that area as a result of air pollution. And when we examine the appendices, and look in the detail at those appendices, we find that there certainly was a sharp increase. Here I refer to the appendix of table 6, on page 61. The story is this, Mr. Speaker—the annual mean levels of fluoride in the atmosphere within defined areas, increased from 80 micrograms fluoride per one hundred square centimetres in station A in 1964, to 3,642 in 1965. That was for station A. This is the index of air pollution. For station B the increase is from 66 in 1964 to 987 in 1965. And for station C, 82 in 1964 to 1,064 in 1965.

Those are the facts that this committee has come up with. And damning facts, sir. Not only that, the committee notes on page 59 that a "safe" level for this particular index is under 100. To underline this, look at the increases. Look at the absolute amount, in 1964, at these three stations. For station A, for which 80 is still safety, and how it has risen to 3,642 in one year. And the safe level is 100 units. In station B the increase was from 66, still a safe level presumably, to 987 in one year—away over the safe limit of 100. In station C, 82 in 1964 was still under the safe limit, but it rose to 1,064 in 1965, sir. I submit that the committee is damning this government for lack of action in that area. I hardly call that a whitewash.

Turning to what the report says about teeth and the effect of water with the pollutant fluoride in it, the report notes on pages 73 and 74 that disfiguring dental fluorosis:

Will be evident in the teeth of many children in this area, if fluoride intake since 1964 has exceeded the 1957-64 level by 50 to 100 per cent. For this reason, it is recommended that children in the Port Maitland vicinity be re-examined for mottling defects in early 1970.

That, sir, is 13 months away. Why do not we re-examine them now to find out those effects? Why use children as an index to find out whether there is a poisonous substance in the drinking water in the area? That, sir, is putting the cart before the horse; it is saying the only way to find out what is really happening is to wait till the damage is done to these people, and then you have some sort of evidence. I submit, sir, that again this is a damning indictment of this government's policy. What a way to find out if there is danger.

Keeping on with this mottling process on the teeth as a result of excessive fluoride in the water, which of course comes from a number of sources, I would like to offer this argument to you, sir. The report states that:

The mottling frequencies for children living within two miles of Port Maitland indicates that their maximum fluoride intake during 1957-64 was equivalent to that derived from drinking water containing 1.5 to 1.9 ppm fluoride.

So what the report says is that when they examined the teeth of these children, they found that mottling occurred to a number of these children. And they categorize the degree of mottling on an index, to find out quite rigidly in terms of normal, very mild, mild, moderate and severe. So "moderate" is right beside severity. It is in the fourth category, if you like, where, if anyone has moderate mottling of the teeth, they are in a danger area.

The U.S. public health report states that mottling, moderate mottling—which is just before severe mottling—begins at the level of 1.8 ppm.

When we look to find out what this committee meant by moderate mottling, that is the fourth stage, because you have got normal, very mild, mild and then moderate before you've got severe—I think we should put this in the records of this House, because it is the definition that is important in this category.

To me, a moderate is someone who is not very extreme nor severe. But the definition of moderate, in terms of the mottling of the teeth of children, is a very interesting one because in my opinion the definition of moderate in this report, even though it might be based on the U.S. public health reports, is a very damning definition.

It is a very extreme definition. On page 323 the committee uses the following definition of moderate mottling of the teeth. I will read it directly with no comments.

Tooth form is normal, but opaque; white enamel generally covers all tooth surfaces. Minute pitting is often present, generally on the labial and buccal surfaces. Brown stain of the enamel is a frequent, disfiguring complication but one which is apparently related to some secondary factor in the water. The pitting is frequent and is generally observed on all tooth surfaces. In extreme cases (again in terms of the moderate mottling), the pits are confluent and so extensive as to affect the tooth form. Stains are widespread and range in colour from chocolate brown to almost black in some cases.

I suggest that a moderate mottling is a very severe type of mottling. It is interesting to note that the report did not find any example of severe mottling, unless I misinterpret, but they said in the appendix, there is no definition for severe mottling.

One thing in this might be that they have left out a word. Some of those quotations I have made may be referring to severe mottling, and they left it out. In other words, through the shoddy editing job on the book.

The point is you can get moderate mottling at a level of 1.8 ppm, and they did find cases of this when they examined the children's teeth. Let me recall what the report says.

The report says that a 50 per cent to 100 per cent increase in the fluoride level in the water could result in "disfiguring dental fluorosis." That 50 per cent figure would be when the level in the water, in terms of the index used, ranged between 2.3 and 2.9 ppm fluoride, then we would see many more cases of moderate type of mottling of the teeth.

I suggest that the limed candle reading which increased so fantastically for air pollution between 1964 and 1965—increasing in one case from 80 to 3,642 at station "A"—will be condemning.

With the type of increase in the air pollution—which I would assume would be related to the water pollution—the same type of pollutant outflow—one going into the air, one going into the water—that will result in damning cases of severe mottling of children's teeth whenever there is another cross-check done in that area. The report makes it very clear, these are the delayed effects here; that the high, the fantastically increased levels of pollution in that area, particularly around Maitland—between 1964 and 1965—will show up in 1970. This is the delayed effect.

I would like to find out, sir, I would like to know this government is concerned with that, and is going to look into it.

There is another aspect on the teeth question. It is this—this report contradicts itself in my opinion. On the one hand, it says that disfiguring dental fluorosis will take place in children's teeth, if the levels of fluoride in the waters increase by 50 to 100 per cent. But then, in another part of the report, on page 73, it says: "The lifelong intake of three or four times this concentration would not impair general health or cause symptoms of skeletal fluorosis."

I am not too sure whether this report is saying, on the one hand—it uses the figure of 8 ppm fluoride, and says that's a safe level. On another hand it says that if the present level of pollution increases by 50 to 100 per cent they would be in for disfiguring dental fluorosis.

I am a layman in this. I didn't understand the details of the science, but I suggest that logically this report has condemned the government on its minimal statement, and, if we ever used its maximum statement, it would say this government is completely irresponsible in this area.

I would like still to continue from the report, sir, which might be helpful. The report condemns the government further on page 311. I paraphrase the first part, and finish it up by quoting directly. The report states, sir, that the study of the committee on pollution in the townships of Dunn, Moulton, and Sherbrooke and the county of Haldimand, "reveals a potential human health problem, and was especially significant to the medical and dental professions."

There we come out with the conclusions. This report acknowledges the fact that they see a potential health problem in this area. I don't know what the newspaper people have been doing, but to me, that is a damning statement. They have done their analysis; they have done their research—I think they've done minimum research on this—and yet they still come out with the statement that their study "reveals a potential human"—forget the cows, forget the vegetation—"reveals a potential human health problem, and was especially significant to the medical and dental professions."

Those are some of the quotations from the report which, I feel, certainly do not white-wash the behaviour, the lack of policies, of this government over the past 25 years, particularly in this area, and this geographic area, since 1959.

I would like to talk about the case of Ted Boorsma, which is mentioned, of course, in the report, the 35-year-old farmer. And I would like to throw the following information out on the floor of this House. It is not spectacular, it is just interesting. I think it must be looked into further by this government. The question is: Does Ted Boorsma have fluorosis or does he not? The report says he does not, and quotes from medical reports. The report also states that he seems to have a disease called hyper-parathyroidism, and the parathyroid is a small gland lying close to the thyroid gland which controls the calcium metabolism in the body.

My understanding, sir, is that Mr. Boorsma was out of the hospital, but is now back in the Toronto General for an operation on the parathyroid.

My understanding is—and I will be very pleased if the Minister responsible would say that my information is incorrect, because it would clear the air in something that may be coming up in the next month or so. My understanding, based on talking to several people, is there seems to be some medical evidence that there could be a relationship between fluoride intake and changes in the parathyroid glands.

For example, I would love the government to check this statement out. J. M. Faccini, of the University of London, has, I understand, concluded that by feeding sheep with NaFe produces changes in the parathyroid. That is to say, feeding sheep with doses of fluoride has induced changes in their parathyroid glands. The article is, I understand, found in the September, 1965, issue of Nature—volume 207, page 399.

In other words the intake of fluoride may do other things than produce fluorosis. Now I would like to have that checked out by the responsible Ministers, and I would like to know that that is being checked out very thoroughly, because there may be evidence coming up in the next month or so that there is a relationship between the intake of fluoride and damage to the parathyroid gland. So I think we have far from finished with an examination of the medical effects of this type of air and water pollution.

The other piece of information which is not new, sir, but which I think must be continually drawn to the attention of this government, has to do with the findings of Dr. George Waldbott.

Now in the brief there is the question of Dr. George Waldbott. It is discussed in full on page 347, but there is nothing on page 347 which indicates—Let me read the final paragraph of it. It says:

Dr. Martin submitted a complete review and report of Dr. Waldbott's brief, which has been studied by the committee. The committee rejects many of the statements made by Dr. Waldbott in his brief and accepts the testimony of the physicians and other scientists received in evidence and referred to or quoted in the committee's report.

So what I would like to see, sir, is a copy of Dr. Martin's report—"complete review" as it says in the report on Dr. Waldbott's brief. Particularly I would like to see the section in that report which pertains to Dr. Waldbott's statement, which was as follows.

Dr. Waldbott stated in a release, which I have here. It is dated November 1, 1968. He states this:

As late as July 8, 1968, urine tests on four Port Maitland persons residing near the plant showed fluoride levels ranging from 7.04 to 12.6 mg.

Normal is about one half to one and a half mg. Muscle tissue removed from one patient showed 116.4 ppm, and a prostate gland sample showed 92.2 ppm. (The normal is less than 1 ppm.)

Now this is the key point, Mr. Speaker.

Tissue analyses were done by one of Europe's most outstanding experts on fluoride analysis, Dr. W. Oelschlager, in Hohenheim, Germany.

And this, sir, is the Stuttgart Hohenheim Agricultural Institute, which has done extensive research in fluoride in Europe and has had many publications, probably in German.

The thing I would like to see, sir, before we leave this report by the committee on the pollution around the Maitland area, is a statement that says something to the effect that either Dr. Waldbott's statement, as I have recorded it in Hansard, is not true. That it could be not true, in that sense that we did not have analyses done by these outstanding experts in Germany. It could be an untrue statement, in the sense that there is no record of this analysis having taken place in the Stuttgart Hohenheim Agricultural Institute by this particular Dr. W. Oelschlager.

I would like to know for sure whether or not this statement is true or false. If it is true, sir, then it casts a questionable light on the underplaying of this type of evidence in the committee's report.

If it is not true, then I think that this government must state clearly that it is not true. But as long as this statement by Dr. Waldbott, which I have now recorded in Hansard, remains uncontested by this government, then I think that we in the province of Ontario have the right to say that this may well have been a cooked report, in the sense that it underplays the actual human health hazard that has already been experienced in that particular area.

So I challenge this government, sir, to either say that this statement is a lie, and it is incorrect, that it is an exaggeration. Until they do so, sir, I must say that I have to conclude that this report has underplayed tremendously the human health problem of air and water pollution in that area.

The final aspect on this report which I would like to deal with is what it has to say about the organisation of government in response to a very complex question of air and water pollution. The quotations are quite detailed, but I would first give the concluding comments at this point.

Mr. Speaker, the report states, on page 239, the following:

If blame there has to be, we would say that it was a combination of inadequate organization to handle such a problem; lack of knowledge on the part of many persons—even when such knowledge was available—an appalling lack of communication; an early unawareness of the potential seriousness of the problem; delays and procrastinations; lack of effective co-ordination at the right stage; and confusion involving multiple legislative and jurisdictional authority.

The report notes, on page 275, that the case study that they were involved in, or they call that ad hoc research, is——an excellent example of overlapping jurisdictions on what is essentially a single environmental problem. Air pollution, water pollution from a particular industry from a particular area—

—and this is a reference, of course, to the water pollution of ERCO, which is the responsibility of the OWRC, whereas air pollution by ERCO is the responsibility of The Department of Health.

Then, of course, you get into vegetation pollution and so forth, which all lie under different types of jurisdictions.

The final aspect which leads me to believe that this condemns the government more than whitewashing them is the committee's statement on page 275 which is:

The Ontario Water Resources Commission has been far more tolerant in its dealing with the Electric Reduction Company than perhaps was warranted.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the main reason I brought this up was to give further background to this question of air and water pollution in this province—in the way in which a case study shows that this government has not been able to cope with it in any effective way.

The report concludes, in paragraphs 789 and 790—the last two paragraphs in this report. On pages 313 and 314 are the following comments. I think the government must really have these comments driven home to them as I conclude my remarks on this subject:

It is with some reluctance that the committee, at this stage in its report, does not list or discuss some specific proposals relative to the control of pollution and the effects on humans, livestock, vegetation, wildlife, etc. May we point out that the problems of organization, of policy, of terms of reference, of teaching or research, of laboratories, of people, of responsibilities, of communications, of jurisdictions, are very complex. The study of such matters, urgent as they are, was not one of the tasks assigned to this committee of inquiry. It would be unwarranted and perhaps prejudicial to a thorough review of these considerations if we were to present here what, of necessity, would be superficial comments. We have learned a lot about part of the problem; the other parts deserve equal study.

—and I underline that. In the final paragraph, 790, on page 314, the committee concludes:

Pollution is a natural and ingrained fact of life. Pollution control is yet in its infancy. We suggest that the government adopt an even greater sense of urgency in developing "anti-pollution" policies and in establishing the organization to implement them.

We feel that a study of this extremely complex problem is of the utmost importance in the immediate future. Any changes which might be made in organization, in order that pollution control may be more effective, should be welcomed, even if recommendations emanating from such a study include the establishment of a department of environmental health or a department of pollution control.

Well, the problem has not been brushed under the carpet. What we should do with this report is to remind the government that they must really move in this area and that they have a responsibility to move quickly on a very serious issue.

I would like to remind the government of what our policy is on this by quoting from the remarks of my leader. I think this should be underlined to all members of this House. My leader stated on December 11 outside of the House—and I would like to put it on the House record—the following:

If Ontario's critical pollution problem is ever to be conquered, it must be assaulted with a greater urgency and determination than the government has shown so far.

My leader has stated that the government, instead of initiating a strong policy in the matter has "allowed a fragmentation of the responsibility through six departments, besides the Ontario Water Resources Commission, to slow down effective control through red tape."

My leader said that "the government must take decisive action in setting up a powerful agency to join with industry in its war on pollution."

And my leader noted that getting industry to become less complacent about the problem is secondary. What "is of primary importance is that the agency has the power to get the results." I suggest, sir, that that would be an excellent guideline to this problem, to the present government as it moves forward, if at all, to this area.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks on the Throne Debate with some comments about education in this province and this pertains directly to my leader's amendment to the Throne Debate.

I would like to say a few things to start with about the Ontario College of Education. On Wednesday morning, November 28, I went to the Ontario College of Education on the invitation of a student to speak to 50 student-teachers on the question of "criticism in education today." Afterwards I had coffee with some of the student-teachers in the "pit", which is the basement or so-called coffee shop at OCE. It was certainly a very interesting way to get first-hand information about what is happening in the area of teacher education, in secondary school education in this province.

What I would like to do now is again, in a sense, to represent the views of the student-teachers to this House and to the government by quoting directly from some notes I took at that time. I must say that I can agree completely with the seven comments made to me by student-teachers who took the trouble to have a coffee with me.

Here is what some of these students said about OCE. The first comment is this: There is a complete lack of public policy on the question of the preparation of teachers in Ontario. Everyone says that the preparation of teachers is important yet OCE takes anybody who has a BA. There is virtually no admission policy other than this. For example, a university graduate who had two courses in English and had passed these two courses with only 50 per cent, can become a teacher of English in the high schools of our province. This is no way to get good teachers, say some of these student-teachers.

The second comment was this: University graduates with mental disabilities are admitted to OCE and can become teachers of young people in this province. While quite a few of these unstable people drop out of OCE, this is an inefficient way of screening them out of the teaching profession.

It is also a very expensive way, sir, of screening them out of the profession.

The third comment was that there is absolutely no "sensitivity training" at OCE. Surely, if we are going to institutionalize the preparation of teachers, there should be much more emphasis placed in formal "sensitivity instruction".

The fourth comment was that there is no sense of community here. You are here for a year; it is a means towards an end only.

The fifth comment was, there should be a hard look at the compulsory courses; what is the purpose of these compulsory courses? It is certainly not core education. Take the history of philosophy course. In one class it is almost pure history; in another class it is almost pure philosophy. This would not be too bad, Mr. Speaker, if students could choose between the two classes or sections of the history and philosophy course, but they cannot. Student-teachers simply get allocated to the classes in the course.

The sixth comment was this: It is terribly significant in the bungling in the administration of education in this province. They said: Why is it so difficult for students at OCE, the future teachers of Ontario, to get an unexpurgated copy of the Hall-Dennis report which is so important to education in Ontario today? The teachers here keep throwing the Hall-Dennis report at us in class but we cannot get copies. Apparently there is a summary available somewhere but we cannot even get it. Surely students should not work from summaries? After all, we are university graduates.

And their final comment was: We are university graduates and being at OCE is just like being back in Grade 10, and when they were in Grade 10, of course, education was very much like what Lloyd Dennis said it was today still.

I would like to remind the members of this House what Lloyd Dennis has said about education in this province just with a short quote. He said:

The school system in Canada and specifically Toronto is based on the needs of a bygone society for control, authority and obedience; in it, the student was told what to learn and when to learn it and who will teach it and when they will teach it.

What these students at OCE are saying is that being at OCE today is just like being in Grade 10. That is no way to train teachers.

What is the Minister of Education in this province doing to try and improve the quality of teacher education at the secondary school level? In his September, 1968, report entitled "September report of the Minister of Education," 1968, Ontario Department of Education on page 10, the Minister said this:

A Minister's committee representing a variety of educational organizations has been meeting since June, 1968, to examine existing concepts, standards, methods and facilities for training secondary school teachers. The committee's report will make suggestions for new teacher training programmes as alternatives to summer courses as well as additional programmes to meet the demand of more extensive training beginning in 1969.

I read that and I said, 'Gee whiz, you know, the Minister is really going to do something. He is going to find out why there is so much rot at places like OCE. He is going to really step in and make changes and as a result improve teacher education at the secondary school level.'

Then I thought I would give the Minister the opportunity of making a statement on this very significant statement in his September, 1968, report. So on Nov. 21, 1968, page 43 of Hansard, I asked the Minister the following question:

Who are the members of the Minister of Education's committee which has been meeting since June, 1968, to examine existing concepts, standards, methods and facilities for training secondary school teachers? And when will the committee's report be tabled in the Legislature?

Sir, I was using the exact wording of the Minister's own report on page 10. I thought for a question of information, he would probably reply to it in a very simple way and say, 'we will have a good report; there are good people on the committee and they will bring it in'. Instead, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education informed me as follows; on page 44:

This committee really arose out of the decision to discontinue the summer courses at the OCE, and is composed of a group of individuals who are recommending to us ways and means of keeping a flow of teachers into the secondary schools at the same time as we discontinue the summer school programme.

That bears absolutely no relationship to what the Minister said in his September, 1968, report, less than six weeks before, when he outlined the purposes of the committee—to really look into "concepts and standards and methods" and so forth.

The Minister comes in this House and he obviously has not read his own report prepared by his Deputy Minister. That is the only conclusion I can come to, because then he lists the members of the committee and there is not one full-time classroom teacher on that committee.

There are about 14 or 15 people; people from The Department of Education; from headmasters' associations and The Departments of Education at various colleges across this province and so forth. But there is not one full-time classroom teacher there.

No wonder the Minister had to go back once he appointed these members and rewrite the terms of reference of this committee. Because if he appoints a committee like this to look into an educational problem, to look into an examination of existing concepts, standards and methods for teaching—secondary school teachers—obviously he has to appoint a much different type of person to it.

What I am saying is simply this: two points—the Minister has rewritten the terms of reference of this committee drastically. He has made it into a technical committee instead of an education committee. He has put technocrats on the committee; there is not one full-time classroom teacher on it. I suppose that we in the Opposition should be thankful that this committee of administrators and technicians is not being asked, as the Minister originally thought, to really look into concepts of teacher training.

It is a technical committee concerned with flows; the flow of teachers into the system and not the quality of teachers or their education.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a Minister of Education of this province who does not even read his own report (or appears not to read his own report) or changes the terms of reference within six weeks of that very report on what the committee ought to be doing, should not be the Minister of Education of this province.

I can only conclude by this that the Minister of Education does not think there is a crisis in the training of secondary school teachers in this province because he has set up, as recorded on page 44 of Hansard, a technical committee instead of an educational committee.

The next item I would like to turn to is one that I hope the Minister will act on, because it has to do with the superannuated teachers in this province and the dire state many of them are in.

On January 1, 1966, The Teachers' Superannuation Act of Ontario and the Canada Pension Fund were integrated. At that time an amendment was made to The Teachers' Superannuation Act, whereby teachers' pensions would be calculated on the basis of the best seven years of salary, instead of ten. That is a good benefit. The same benefit was not, however, extended to teachers already on pension, although it is customary in Ontario and other provinces to extend all new benefits to those then on pensions.

Three brief comments on this. It is an injustice, I just point this out to the Minister. I asked him a detailed question last year on the order paper. There are many retired teachers living below the poverty line as defined by the Ontario Federation of Labour—many, many retired people in this province.

The incidence of poverty among retired teachers is highest for those over 70 years of age. Furthermore, retired women teachers are hardest hit by these poverty pensions of the Minister of Education.

The question that the Minister must face up to is a very simple one because obviously the argument is that we have not got enough money. We have to tighten up and so forth.

The question he must ask himself is what would have been the increased outflow of funds from the Ontario teachers' superannuation fund in 1967, for example, if the January 1, 1966, amendment to The Teachers' Superannuation Act, whereby teachers' pensions were henceforth calculated on the basis of the best seven years of salary, had also applied to teachers already on pension?

I submit it would be a drop in the bucket, but it makes a big difference to a lot of these old people, particularly women over 70 who are living in the ghettos of this city.

I believe firmly that a wealthy province and a wealthy nation can well afford to have its retired teachers live in dignity.

In case this government does not realize it, or in case they want to instruct one of their so-called research people to look into the matter a bit further, I suggest that they look at the plans of the governments of British Columbia and Saskatchewan with regard to the inclusion of additional pension benefits to teachers already retired at the time the amendment was made. I will tell the government what the answer is; in British Columbia, under Mr. Bennett, they can afford to include additional benefits for the retired teachers. Why can the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Robarts) not do the same thing?

Mr. Speaker, I have some remarks to make about student rebellion. I think it is very important to try to think what it is we are talking about when we talk about the revolt of students. Some people call them "revolting students"—particularly a guy called George Drew.

Now I would like to confine my remarks on on the student radicals to three areas.

First of all, what is the nature of student protest?

Secondly, a case study of the press writing about a particular incident of student protest, and the way and problems attached to that type of coverage.

Thirdly, what I consider to be the malicious, vicious slander of student protest leaders and their right to dissent in our society, by a former Premier of this province in an address to the Canadian Club.

I would like to discuss student protest, which I consider to be a very healthy thing, in those three terms.

As you may remember, on Wednesday, November 20, there was a march on Queen's Park by students from the University of Toronto, York and Ryerson, concerning their views about education. They approached me, as they did the members of the New Democratic Party and even members of the government, with their brief. Their brief was entitled "The Ontario Student Award Programme—immediate problems and long range proposals". It is a four-page brief put out by the student administrative council of the U of T, over their letterhead, but it is a joint proposal by York, Ryerson and the U of T.

I think it is only fair that someone took the trouble to read this brief into the record of this House and to let the members know and you, sir, what the brief was all about. After the demonstration took place there was a complete misrepresentation of what took place and what their brief was about by the press of this city. Later on, sir, you had a completely irresponsible speech, in my opinion, by the former Premier of this province, Mr. George Drew.

I would like to let you know that I thought this was a very responsible brief. But I would like to let you have it in its proper context and I shall return to a discussion of it. The brief says this:

In a democratic society it has been maintained that all citizens have the right to be educated to the full extent of their ability. In Canada, however, this theory has not been matched by adequate programmes to make this possible. Education at the present time is a privilege of the upper middle classes, even though lower income groups are taxed heavily for this education.

Education benefits not only the individual but also the society of which he is a part. The government has already implicitly admitted this fact in their present support for education. Since employment in an advanced technological society is based on educational requirements, and since education serves to keep people out of the labour market, educated people necessarily serve the present economic system.

Students from the several Toronto educational institutions—U of T, York and Ryerson—together with labour leaders, have gathered today to protest the inequities of the present programme and the inadequacies of planning for increased accessibility to education.

Then they divide their brief into two parts, sir; you can call it the short-run issue and the long-run issue.

For your information and for my remarks shortly, I would like to read the long-run aspects of their brief first. It comes at the end of the brief after they deal with the Ontario Student Awards Programme, but I would like to read it first. The brief continues as follows near the bottom of page 3:

To return to the long-range problem of changing the social composition of post-secondary education, we stress that a more equitable system of student aid will not adequately solve this problem. We do not, at this point, demand free education as an immediate goal, since we realize that it alone will do little to significantly affect the social composition of post-secondary institutions of the province.

Neither is it sufficient for the government to finance the comprehensive study of student aid systems, mobility and the presence of various income groups at different levels of the educational system. The question of democratic access to post-secondary education cannot be solved in isolation by The Department of University Affairs. It must be worked out with The Department of Education, the Ontario government as a whole, and the federal government.

The present composition of post-secondary institutions is maintained and reinforced by the structure and direction of the primary and secondary educational systems. The rigid structure of the streaming system establishes geographical and social barriers between various groups. The system limits and determines the future education of many students. Reform throughout the educational system is only part of what is required. Until the whole question of poverty is tackled by the comprehensive government policy, poverty will continue to perpetuate itself. Slum housing, low motivation, and inadequate medical services for the poor all contribute to the inability of all but the exceptional child to benefit from what we hope will be an improved educational system.

This is why the question of access to post-secondary education must be solved by more than improved student aid in education policies. The role of the federal government in these questions of student aid, educational reform, and accessibility to post-secondary education, is seldom recognized. Many of the present problems, such as the requirements of parental support and summer savings, are the result of decisions made by provincial Ministers of Education in conjunction with the federal government. The Ontario government must work with its colleagues in the federal government and the other provinces to see that the changes we call for are implemented.

Our understanding of the problem faced would be greater if such discussions were conducted in open session. We intend to transmit these ideas to the federal government. We call on the Ontario government to implement changes in OSAP this year to eliminate the problems we have outlined. We further urge the government to begin work immediately on the questions of poverty, motivation and accessibility to post-secondary institutions.

Sir, the point I wish to make here is simply that here is a brief prepared and presented to the Minister of Education, to myself as the official Opposition critic of education and university affairs, and to the NDP spokesman. The brief was divided into two parts—one part dealt with the OSAP programme, the inequities and the need for more money for students now in university—but a great deal of the brief, sir, the part that I have read out this afternoon, talked about the deeper problems, the social barriers to education—the interrelationship between poverty and the slum clearance programmes in the city and those who get to university; between the chances of a kid born into poverty to fight his way up through the middle-class educational system.

They were concerned, sir, with more than their own selfish interests. Yet, if you look at the newspaper reports of that brief, I suggest, sir, that the newspaper reporters did not even bother reading that brief. When you listen to what the Minister of Education said on those steps where he tried to label these students as irresponsible because they were demanding more money and that he did not deal with the wider problems of accessibility, these students had their case badly mangled up by the Minister of Education and, indeed, by the press of this province.

Let me deal with the press first and I will let the Minister speak for himself later on.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I think the member must have written the brief.

Mr. T. Reid: I do not know how to respond to that because some of the articles I wrote three or four years ago are very much like that brief. I did not write that brief, but there is a common knowledge on how you deal with poverty and accessibility to higher education, and I think the Minister for perhaps acknowledging the fact that some of the articles I wrote three or four years ago may have resulted in that type of view by some university students.

But returning to the interpretation of the press, sir. Here is the Globe and Mail for Thursday, November 21, 1968. There is a photograph and under the photograph here is the caption:

Part of a group of 1,000 students set out from the U of T campus yesterday for Queen's Park to demand more money for student loans, but University Affairs Minister William Davis told them there would be no more money.

That is the caption of the photograph. What is the heading over the story? The heading, in nice big black type, is this: "No More Money for Student Aid This Year, Davis Tells 1,000 Marchers at Queen's Park." Then you take a look at the Star for Thursday, November 21. Again a nice photograph and under the photograph the following:

It was a busy day for protest parades and petition presentations yesterday at Queen's Park. At left, University Affairs Minister William Davis holds bagels he was given by 700 good-natured student demonstrators from University of Toronto who paraded demanding more student aid loans. Davis told them there were no more funds.

And what is the caption over the story in nice big black type? "Student Leader Hopes for Loan Action." Let me make this point clear, sir, that in the small print in the stories the reporters who were on the scene, while not doing what I would consider to be a balanced job, did mention the fact that these students were concerned with the kids who did not have a chance to get to university; that the student brief was concerned with the problems of deeper social accessibility and poverty in our society; that they were not just out for more bucks for themselves; that they were protesting for the silent poor of this province. I do not think it was a balanced job but I think they at least acknowledged the fact that the brief was not a selfish document.

So what happens to these reports when they get down to the city editor? He says, "Oh, students looking for more money. Well, you know students are irresponsible, I guess they are just out for more bucks, so we will get a photograph showing students, we will put a caption under the photograph saying, 'After more bucks, a bunch of selfish kids, you know, just out for a lark, fun-raising kids.'" You know, this type of thing. And the headline on the story gets the same thing —not a word about the deeper problems these students are concerned with.

Sir, my view of that brief was this, and I stated it at that time and I would like to record this again. I said at that time:

Any citizen of Ontario who has the opportunity and who takes the time to read the entire brief of the University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council on OSAP and education in Ontario, will find this brief a most responsible critique of many aspects of education in Ontario today.

Newspapers across Ontario should carry the brief in full. It is short and concise. Reporters and editorial writers have a responsibility to give the public a balanced view of what it is the students are saying.

I noted that the students at York and at the U of T and at Ryerson are involved in community action programmes, particularly in the disadvantaged areas of this province, and many of these same students are the leaders of student demonstrations. They are concerned as is evident in these programmes that they have, in these seminars they have, and in which I have participated over the past three years. These programmes are designed to open up our society and especially our educational institutions to many young people who have thus far been too often denied accessibility to higher education. That, sir, was what the brief was all about, and I concluded my remarks on that by saying:

Sure these students want the present inequities and the administrative red tape of the present OSAP programme removed, but their brief is even more about the inaccessibility of higher education to far too many children now in primary school. For the Minister to dismiss what these young people are saying by issuing press releases that the total amount of money budgeted for in student awards is increased, is an example of what the political process ought not to be about.

I am simply saying, that the student radicals are a very diverse group. You have extreme student radicals; you have destructive student radicals, but you also have the constructive student radicals—students who would submit a brief here today on what they feel about the extension of the school year. They take the trouble to try to be responsible. Students who would write a brief about inaccessibility in this province in education who take the trouble to organize a march, come down to the steps of Queen's Park and state their views.

But to have those views, which are concerned with the essence of democracy in our society, dismissed by an irresponsible Minister of University Affairs as simply being out for another buck, is an infringement upon their good intentions. And to have the press—not necessarily the reporters who reported it—but to have the headline writers and the people who write the captions for photographs down at the Globe, the Star and the Telegram, try to condemn these students as simply being irresponsible because they are out for more bucks, to me, sir, it is a great injustice to the students who are properly concerned with the welfare of their fellow man in our society.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask the member a question?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is agreeable, yes. He has the floor and it is his option.

Mr. Makarchuk: In view of the fact that the hon. member has presented one view of the student radical, I would like to read to him the view that was presented of the student radical by the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not asking a question.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is my question. He could perhaps clarify his party's stand on the student radical.

Mr. T. Reid: I would rather finish my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member declines to answer questions.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to just say a few words about a report of a speech given recently by a very distinguished Canadian. This is a report carried in the Globe and Mail on Friday, Nov. 29, 1968, and it is entitled, "University protests attack by Drew". It starts as follows:

George Drew, former Ontario Premier and former leader of the national Progressive Conservative Party, told an applauding audience at the Empire Club of Canada yesterday that Canadians should no longer ignore organized hooliganism threatening the country's educational structure. Mr. Drew, 74, is a governor of the University of Toronto and chancellor of the University of Guelph. The strength of his feelings repeatedly carried him away from his 14-page text. He said that the protests at the universities in Paris, Berlin, Tokyo, Bonn, Toronto and other centres were strangely similar.

Then there is a quotation attributed to Mr. Drew:

I do believe that Canadians should no longer ignore the organized attempts to destroy the educational structure upon which the strength of our country so largely depends, and in that way weaken the authority of the state and the unity of our people.

The report goes on, sir:

Mr. Drew said, after the speech, he had been in Paris last May, as well as in Berlin and Tokyo when student riots developed, and he heard phrases like "destroy capitalism" and "weaken the power of the establishment," repeated again and again in those places, as well as in Toronto.

The report continues:

He would not endorse the charge of a Communist conspiracy but said there were Communists involved in all the protests. The similarity of approach was striking in each riot, he said.

He stressed the need for self-discipline, decency and cooperation in such threatening times and launched into his denunciation of student protest to more applause. The luncheon atmosphere exuded Ontario politics circa mid-40s. To Mr. Drew's left sat Mr. Frost—

And so forth. In the Toronto Daily Star for Nov. 29, there is a similar story which says:

Drew, Premier of Ontario from 1943-1949 and former National Progressive Conservative leader, lumped protests at Canadian universities with those of Paris, Berlin, Tokyo, as being strangely similar to attempts to weaken the authority of the state and unity of her people. Drew said phrases such as "destroy capitalism" and "weaken the power of the establishment," which he overheard in student riots in Berlin, Paris, Tokyo indicate Communists were involved.

The quote ends there.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): What is the big headline on that one?

Mr. T. Reid: I will not deal with this at length, although I certainly will when we get to the estimates of The Department of University Affairs. But I would like to contrast those reported views of Mr. Drew's with some remarks of other business men. I would like to quote from John D. Rockefeller 3rd, who is chairman of the Rockefeller Foundation. Here is a very interesting article in the Dec. 14, 1968, edition of the Saturday Review and he says this:

Every generation has had its gap, and it seems unmistakably clear to me that we are experiencing something much more than the age-old rebelliousness of youth. The ferment of today is deep and intense, although the activists are a minority of young people, it is a larger and more vocal minority than ever before. The youth revolt is a world-wide phenomenon appearing not only in the United States but in a dozen other countries, such as France, Mexico, Japan and Czechoslovakia.

So he and Mr. Drew apparently agree that it is an international revolt of some sort. But John D. Rockefeller 3rd, continues as follows:

They (referring to the students) feel that time is running out on the great problems—war, racial injustice, and poverty. They dislike the impersonalization of large organizations and rapid technological change.

Then Mr. Rockefeller continues:

I submit that we have let ourselves be distracted by the colourful fringes to the point where we miss the central meaning of today's youth protest.

Then he goes on, Mr. Speaker, to outline the three areas that he thinks are most important. He says this:

Many young people are preparing for long-term efforts to change society. For example, the law students of today are concerned less about trust in the estates and corporate law, and more about how just the laws are; how poor people and black people can get a better break before the law. They have learned from experience that it is necessary to be loud and demonstrative to get results. It is this behaviour that compels attention and strikes fear for the very stability of American society.

Then Mr. Rockefeller says:

The nature of our response is critical, for it has everything to do with whether there will continue to be violence, and whether violence will pay. We must understand that social protest has an honourable history and has a rightful place in any enlightened society—

Including the society of George Drew. Mr. Rockefeller continues as follows:

Change can be very difficult and threatening, especially when pressures come from the young. The temptation is to tune them out—it takes much more courage to listen.

The problem lies in ourselves as people; the crucial issue is not the revolt of youth but with the nature of our response to it.

Then he talks about three possible responses. The first response, which is possible, is "apathy or muted hostility". And he says that if that type of response from us, from legislators, from older people in society is allowed to continue we will find ourselves "constantly pushed towards the brink of backlash". He continues:

The greater tragedy will be the opportunity we will have lost. For we know all too well that the time is running out on the great problems the world faces. It seems to me—a republican businessman

—that we have a choice. By suppression or apathy, we can make the youth revolution yet another problem, in which case the burden can become crushing. Or we can respond in positive ways so the energy and idealism of youth can be a constructive force in helping to solve the world's great problems.

Instead of worrying how to suppress the youth revolution we, of the older generation, should be worrying about how to sustain it. The problems of our cities, of our environment, racial injustice, of irrelevant and outmoded teaching, of overpopulation, of poverty and war—are the key issues of the day.

To achieve such action we, of the older generation, must re-examine our attitudes, our assumptions and our goals. We do not like to have them threatened.

He adds:

We must revitalize our existing institutions whether they be in education, government, religion, business or politics. They must be made more relevant to today's problem and have a greater sense of mission. At the same time, in support of the initiative of the young, new programmes and institutions must be developed which can be effective in areas of pressing social need.

And he concludes his excellent little article, sir:

The antidote to despair is to be involved, to be imbued with the same spirit that fires the imagination in the efforts of the young.

There is a VISTA slogan—that is Volunteers in Service to America slogan—which captures this spirit: "If you are not part of the solution you are part of the problem." The Company of Young Canadians has a slogan, sir, which is very much along the same line: "Better worlds just don't happen, they're made."

I suggest that we listen to this Republican businessman in the U.S., that we read his well-thought-out views. He acknowledges the fact that there is an international revolt of young people and, he said, it is a healthy thing. He says the challenge is directly to the older people.

I, sir, would like to have Mr. Rockefeller come up and speak to the Canadian Club about youth, rather than have someone like Mr. Drew pull out a 1935 speech.

But Canadians are responding, and businessmen in this province are responding, to the challenge of youth. I would point out to the hon. members, sir, that Mr. C. Norman Simpson, president of Acres Limited, a Toronto based holding and management company, has come out with a very imaginative programme of challenging the creative energy of young people into research and into progress. He says he has:

—got a programme within Canadian industry [this is a businessman] and instead of trying to mould them [these young people] into your own image, ask them what their ideas are and let them do their own thinking.

And he talks about a research and development plan which he has set aside in his company:

Acres plans to bring into the company five or six really exciting young people, from next spring's university graduates to help plan a research project related to the mid-Canada development.

Mr. Simpson wants to get the ideas of the young people in this area, and he says:

We are confident that working in a stimulating and unrestricted milieu they will generate significant new ideas which might otherwise be lost.

And the reporter asked him, "Why is Acres concerned about what young people do and think?" Mr. Simpson responded: "Because we want to be alive in ten years' time—enlightened self interest, I guess."

I submit that there are businessmen—they are good businessmen—who realize that dissent and protest by the young people in our society is healthy and, in fact, can be a vital factor in the regeneration of their own businesses.

Well, sir, I think I will conclude my remarks on the youth radicals. I firmly believe they are a positive force in our society. They are like any group of people. They have extremes. They have the anarchists and they have good, hard-nosed reformers who believe in thinking things out—who believe in rational solutions.

I think that one of the best examples of the attitude which I think predominates in the student radical movement in our universities, in our CAATs, and in our high schools—indeed, sir, it is getting down in the lower grades—is very well brought out in the issue of Pro Tem, which is the student newspaper of Glendon college of York University. It is really the Christmas issue and on the front cover it has the disarmament symbol, which most of us know about. And it says, "Let your dreams become your reality."

How optimistic can you get? I think, you know, these people believe in the possibility of dreams becoming reality.

Then they print, in their student newspaper for December 12, an old statement found in Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, dated 1692. And I, sir, would like to say that this to me is something—written in 1692, in the Christian church, and the radicals—as most of the newspapers tend to be edited and written by students who are radicals—chose this statement. It is a statement which reflects their beliefs today. I would like to read it out. It says:

Go placidly amid the noise and haste and remember what peace there may be in silence. As far as possible, without surrender, be on good terms with all persons.

Speak your truth quietly and clearly and listen to others, even the dull and ignorant. They, too, have their story. Avoid loud and aggressive persons, they are vexations to the spirit.

If you compare yourself with others, you may become vain and bitter, for always there will be greater and lesser persons than yourself. Enjoy your achievements as well as your plans. Keep interested in your own career, however humble; it is a real possession in the changing fortunes of time.

Exercise caution in your business affairs, for the world is full of trickery. But let this not blind you to what virtue is. Many persons strive for high ideals and everywhere life is full of heroism. Be yourself; especially do not feign affection. Neither be cynical about love, for in the face of all aridity and disenchantment, it is perennial as the grass.

Take kindly the counsel of the years, gracefully surrendering the things of youth. Nurture strength of spirit to shield you in such misfortunes, but do not distress yourself with imaginings. Many fears are born of fatigue and loneliness.

Beyond a wholesome discipline be gentle with yourself. You are a child of the universe no less than the trees and the stars; you have a right to be there and whether or not it is clear to you no doubt the universe is unfolding as it should.

Therefore, be at peace with God, whatever you conceive Him to be and whatever your labours and aspirations in the noisy confusion of life keep peace with your soul. With all its sham, drudgery and broken dreams it is still a beautiful world. Be careful. Strive to be happy.

I say, sir, that the student radicals are basically optimistic people. They are basically idealistic people. They are not to be condemned as part of a communist international conspiracy of this province.

Finally, I would like to turn to the question of the student aid programme in this province.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Is the member reading from his own notes? It sounds like a newspaper.

Mr. T. Reid: Oh no, these are my own notes.

An hon. member: Did you not notice something nice about them?

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): That is an old poem from his undergraduate days.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, sir, turning to the more detailed problem of the Ontario student award programme in this province. I think the following statement ought to be made.

It is simply this, that hundreds of students are being forced to become Christmas drop-outs because of the unfair conditions of the present student award system in Ontario. The Department of University Affairs of this province has made it clear to the university awards officers at our universities, that, despite the admittedly harsh and in many cases unrealistic demand regard the parental contribution table, a lack of or a reduction in the funds expected from a student's family will not be accepted as basis for appeal in the OSA programme.

I would recommend firmly to the Minister of University Affairs and Education, Mr. Speaker, that he look at this question. I think it is of vital importance that students have the right to appeal if their parents simply turn around and say, "Sorry, the government says we should give $900 for education but we are not giving you anything." And parents are turning around and saying this to students who are, of course, 20 or 21 years of age. I would like this government to grant, as grounds for appeal, this type of problem in the OSA programme.

I would like to bring to the attention of the members of this House four cases that have been brought to my attention, because they throw a light on the inequities of the student awards programme in this province.

I acknowledge the fact that the average award is higher this year than it was last year, but that is not any reason for saying it is still an inequitable system.

Well let us look at case "A", a female student in third year university. Last year she received $1,640 from the Ontario Student Awards Programme. This year she received $510 less. Her mother earns approximately $5,000 per year and the student's summer savings were used to help the family recover from the financial hardships imposed by the mother's return to higher education in 1967.

The case there is simply this. Last year she got $1,640, this year she got $510 less. Nothing changed in the family's circumstances at all. The mother is not well off and the student is probably going to become a Christmas drop-out because she cannot get the money.

Case "B" is a second year male student whose widowed mother earned practically $9,000 per annum. Now $9,000 a year sounds like a lot of money to a lot of people, but let me give you the particulars, sir.

There are three dependent children in the family, and yet the widowed mother is expected to contribute $1,042—and that is 11 per cent of her gross income—in order to help support this student through one year of university. I submit, sir, that that is unjust.

The third case is a female student who received $1,430 in 1967 from OSAP and this year was assessed as needing only $380.

The family circumstances have not changed. Her father is earning approximately $7,900 per year, and is himself attending university on a part-time basis. The contribution expected from this man is $726 to support just one of the three children attending university. The total contribution for the three children would amount to a quarter of his gross income—25 per cent. It is unbelievable.

Case "D", the eldest of a family of four children, the children being ages 19, 16, 13 and 9. This is her first year in university and she had been led to believe by the resounding statements of the Minister of Education, and The Department of University Affairs, that she would receive enough help from the Ontario Student Award Programme to make her university education possible. Her father earns roughly $9,500, and was expected by The Department of University Affairs to contribute $1,067 to supplement the $190 the student received from OSAP. This contribution amounts to 11 per cent of the family's gross income.

The Deputy Minister of University Affairs claims, according to a letter addressed to me, that the criteria taken into consideration in the "need assessment" process were introduced as a result of a study carried out by the federal authorities, and approved by the provinces participating in the Canada Student Loan Plan.

While it is true that the principle of providing aid only to students in need was agreed upon by the federal-provincial governments, the federal Department of Finance did not draw up the family contribution table, or means test table used by The Department of University Affairs.

The Deputy Minister also stated to me that $544 of the $1,067 in case D was the amount "that is considered necessary to maintain a child of 18 years old at home if she were attending secondary school." What the Deputy Minister failed to make clear is that in many cases the parents could and would be receiving a contribution to the student if he were part of the labour force. If a student attends university, the parents sometimes suffer doubly because of the unfair assessment procedures of the province of Ontario student award programme.

Sir, the provincial government Department of Family and Social Services occasionally classifies a 19-year-old as independent in order for him to receive a disability pension. Why cannot The Department of University Affairs do the same thing? Some students are independent by any criterion imaginable except by those of The Department of University Affairs. And I would like the Minister of Family and Social Services to let the Minister of Education know that his department does classify, in my understanding, on occasion, 19-year-olds as being independent for—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Not a dependent in a family with an income of $9,500, which is more than 99 per cent of my constituents earn?

Mr. T. Reid: How about the two average cases—$6,000, $8,500?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Those people earn more than what 80 per cent of my constituents earn, sir.

Mr. T. Reid: Do not let us get side-tracked on it, Mr. Speaker, I point out that the Minister of Family and Social Services (Mr. Yaremko) has accepted the principle that under certain conditions, well-looked into, that a 19-year-old can be classified as independent of his parents for certain of his programmes.

I simply suggest that, without getting into discussion on whether it is $9,000 or $5,000. But he has accepted that principle, whereas his colleagues and the Minister of University Affairs have not accepted that principle. I would like the two of them to get together.

Finally, on the student awards, sir. The student awards officers at the various universities and colleges across Ontario are generally fairly capable people. Certainly some students did abuse the system as it stood last year; there is no question about that. If some students took advantage of the regulation in 1967, surely this is an argument to put greater resources in the hands of the universities so they might hire more people to realistically assess the students' real needs.

I offer the government an alternative way of administering this type of programme. I acknowledge the fact that abuses must be looked into; they must be kept to zero, if at all possible. But I suggest the way to do it is to strengthen the hands, the resources, available to the universities and to the CAATS, to talk to students to find out their real family circumstances and to cut out any abuses that occur. To say most students abuse the student awards programme and therefore you have to tighten it up, I think, is an injustice to too many of the students.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks on a high level. It has to do with the difficulties of an Opposition member, to return to a previous issue, in making his criticisms of this government and being forced into making long, long monologue speeches instead of participating in a real debate with his counterparts in the government, in my case the Minister of Education and University Affairs. I think this is a point which was brought to light in a question I asked—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This has been a good speech so far, do not spoil it.

Mr. T. Reid: This extremely high-level discussion which I am about to engage in for two minutes is this, that on December 5, 1968—it is recorded on page 388 of Hansard—I asked the Minister of Education the following question:

Would the Minister consider establishing specifications—

No, the question I asked him, the one I want to relate to here is this: this is page 389:

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): No advance lecture preparation!

Mr. T. Reid: I do not believe in lectures.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The students have another class to go to.

Mr. T. Reid: I need another apple, Mr. Speaker. The question was this:

What educational justification is there for the Minister's decision that the foundation levels of the Ontario foundation tax plan should be increased by $20 for secondary vocational school pupils and only $15 for secondary academic pupils?

The Minister replied, according to the rough copy of Hansard of the day before, along the following lines:

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member in researching this question probably ascertained the costs relating to the vocational and academic are approximately $450 and $580. This was increased by $15—

And so on. I asked a supplementary question, which said:

Would I be correct in deducing from the Minister's remarks that the cost of vocational education is substantially higher than the cost for secondary academic education per pupil?

And the Minister replied:

I thought that was rather self-evident—

I submit, sir, that what the Minister did to me there was a beautiful piece of one-upmanship because in the carbon copy of Hansard, he replied in terms of a parallel response:

That the hon. member, in researching his question, probably ascertained that the costs relating to the vocational and academic are approximately $450 and $580.

I assumed that the $450 applied to the vocational and the $580 applied to the academic in terms of parallel construction. And then I asked a supplementary question because there seemed to be some confusion here on the $450. I thought he said the $450 went to the vocational and the $580 figure went to the academic.

What happened, Mr. Speaker? The height of insult to me is that the Minister realized his mistaken answer and changed Hansard around to read correctly:

The hon. member, in researching this question, probably ascertained the costs relating to the academic and to the vocational are approximately $450 and $580.

I think this is the sort of thing that makes my supplementary question look very silly, but it really was not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): I congratulate the new Minister of Revenue, (Mr. White). I did have the privilege this summer to participate with him on the select committee on taxation, and I want to congratulate him on the basis of the job that he did on that committee. I think it was outstanding.

I do not think that I really contributed as much, but I did, in my own inimitable way, make some effort.

But along with the chairman, I was also impressed with our senior counsel, Mr. Macaulay, and I can very well understand why he vacated the government benches. You know, he is one of those fellows, in my opinion, that does not believe in perpetuating the status quo and I think that Bob left because of that. I want to congratulate him as well.

I want to also, Mr. Speaker, point out an incident that happened in my municipality just that other evening. We had had some debate in this House in regard to those people that are less fortunate than ourselves, and particularly those children that are in the mental institutions in this province.

I evidenced what I classed as really a miracle that happened this Christmas when one of the residents of the city of Oshawa, a Mr. Adrian Van Lith, a 42-year-old General Motors worker, took on a toy project in that city and provided hundreds of bicycles and tricycles and cars. You name it and he provided them. There was just a magnificent display in the Kinsman Hall. He presented these toys to Dr. Frank, director of the Smiths Falls hospital and Dr. Billington, director of the Orillia hospital.

I cannot recollect in my time a more worthy project and a gentleman that did a more worthy job in providing these toys that will make it just a little happier for these children when they wake up Christmas morning.

I want to suggest to this government that I am prepared to provide his name so that they can send a letter of commendation and congratulation to Mr. Van Lith for that magnificent effort on his behalf. I want to say also that a number of organizations did participate in terms of providing the resources, and this is the second year that Mr. Van Lith has worked on such a project.

I know that he even got permission from the board of control in Oshawa to go to the dump and pick up articles there and and renovate and rehabilitate them, so that these children, as I said, would enjoy a better Christmas than they ever did in the past.

Now I also would, just for a moment, like to talk about the question of leadership, both within the framework of my party and, as I see it, in the government. An article appeared in the Globe and Mail on September 25. It said that last Friday the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) announced severe cuts in the spending programme.

One interpretation is that the Premier (Mr. Robarts) is tackling the tough political jobs and is preparing to retire, leaving his successor a soft spot. Speculation about his retirement has gone on for months, but a senior party official recently put it this way: "If we go into the 1971 election with Robarts, there will be another reduced majority. Perhaps a minority government. Someone like Bill Davis could win us 90 seats," he says. "Mr. Davis could win us 90 seats."

I want to point out to the government that the provincial leadership of this country is taking on a very drastic new look. If we checked over the representatives that are going to preside at the next constitutional conference called by the federal government, the roll call will show new leaders from Alberta, where Mr. Manning has retired, from Manitoba, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. I am sure that Mr. Bennett is going, and Mr. Ross Thatcher, I am convinced, has got one foot on a banana peel and he is going too.

An hon. member: Who is going to replace—

Mr. Pilkey: I do not know what the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) would do as a leader. Joey Smallwood is a sort of lame duck Premier now, so that my guess is that the Premiers in this country hold a very precarious position. I want to say to the government that the speculation is about the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) and they talk about the Provincial Treasurer taking over the leadership—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), do not forget him.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, yes, but I want to say in this leadership speculation that really there is one dark horse that is coming up on the inside, on the rails, and I want to say that it is the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall).

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Never believe my own publicity.

Mr. Pilkey: I think he will be an inevitable entry in any event. My colleague says he cannot look after the housing, but let me tell you what he is doing.

An hon. member: Well, we know that.

Mr. Pilkey: He is providing great sums of money to the industrialists across this province in forgiveness loans, and he is building up a considerable amount of support from that free enterprise section of our economy that could stand him very well in a leadership race.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): What we want to know is who is the real leader of the NDP?

Mr. Pilkey: We are going to get to that. We are going to get to that tonight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: On the other side of the coin you find that really he is not doing too much in that section of his portfolio which refers to the Ontario Housing Corporation because there is not going to be too much support for his election to the leadership from that section. So he is not going to concentrate too much on providing the needed housing in this province.

I am sure that there is going to be a leadership contest before 1971, even though the Prime Minister has said that this is not going to happen and many of his colleagues indicate that he is going to continue. I am convinced that not only is there going to be a leadership convention but there is going to be a sort of revolution or an evolution within the ranks of the party itself.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A knock down, drag him out fight!

Mr. Pilkey: That is right. As a matter of fact at least one of the Ministers in the government does have a tremendous amount of insight, make no mistake about that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Pilkey: I will say that. I will say that.

It being 6.00 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1968

The House resumed at 8.00 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, when I concluded at 6.00 o'clock I did indicate that there was really one enlightened Minister in the government Cabinet, and I drew those conclusions from a statement that he made. He said that his party, meaning the Conservative Party, was dead from the eyeballs both ways as far as organization is concerned, and really I thought that he was being rather kind, you know, just bringing in the question of organization.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Imagine how much better we would do with organization.

Mr. Pilkey: The editorial in the Globe and Mail stated that these may be rather harsh words. Possibly they are; still if they are exaggerated it was an exaggeration in a good cause. There are ominous signs there for those who care to look at them. It goes on to say, "Consider for example the fact that the Conservatives won every single by-election in Ontario during the years 1943 to 1961, 21 of them altogether, but only four of the last 11 by-elections called since then.

"Remember also that the Conservatives, who once held almost every Toronto seat, are now without a single representative in the federal House and that provincially Metro's Conservative strength in the Legislature was cut down from 21 to 12 seats in the election of October, 1967."

It goes on to say that there is evidence of substantial concurrence with the party that it stands in need of reform. Alan Eagleson recently campaigned for the presidency of the Ontario association of the party on a platform of change to improve rapport with the people and to restore confidence in the party and he was elected.

Well, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that after 25 years I am convinced that this government has become so deeply entrenched that they have become callous, indifferent and arrogant.

To illustrate that last point—I asked a question in this House recently of the Minister of Family and Social Services (Mr. Yaremko) after he had indicated that the government were doing a review in the whole province of Ontario in regard to homes for the aged. I asked when would the government complete this review, and his reply was "in due course".

Now, it appears to me that this Minister, and other Ministers in this government, should be able to make some reply to questions that at least enlightens the members to the extent that he has some knowledge, rather than answer "in due course". This is an example of the arrogance and the attitude of a deeply entrenched government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, we are deeply entrenched now, are we?

Mr. Pilkey: Not for too long.

At the start of the Throne Debate, the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) went into a lot of statistics, as I recall, outlining that the New Democratic Party, or its leader, did not have the support of the party and said that something like 31 per cent had voted against him. I wonder if the member for Fort William really did an analysis on his election; if my memory serves me correctly, he got about 33 per cent and was elected.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): It is the only place in Ontario where an NDP fell and a Conservative got back in, and do not forget it.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): How many Conservatives fell in the meantime?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You are here on borrowed time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to make an observation in regard to the leadership conference, the convention, that was held in the city of Kitchener, that my friend from Fort William talks about. And I remind him that the New Democratic Party is the only Canadian political party which has constitutional requirements for a regular review of its leadership at the provincial level, and this, my friends of the government, and the official Opposition, is the very essence of democracy, something the Conservatives and Liberals fail to understand.

I want to quote from the Woodstock Sentinel Review of October 30, just to read some comment from that paper in regard to that leadership convention, and I am talking about the support that was given to my leader. It said:

Out of the 17 delegates from the Oxford county area, not one was openly declaring he would vote for Renwick. A few are keeping open minds until they have a chance to hear both contenders speak, and the great majority are staunch MacDonald supporters. There is an old paradox, however—even the most vociferous MacDonald fans claim that, despite the challenge, a leadership convention is a good thing for the party. At least it forces issues out in the open.

"It becomes a way to clarify policy, and is making all New Democrats, whether they are delegates or not, do a little re-thinking and re-examining," says Innerkip delegate, Mrs. Stan Down, "and we are not afraid of that."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stop. You are killing us.

Mr. Pilkey: It goes on to say that MacDonald has worked quietly as a party leader, and because he works effortlessly, his work—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Not too quietly.

Mr. Pilkey: —his work sometimes goes unnoticed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: The report goes on, still quoting Mrs. Down:

One thing remains certain. Few Oxford delegates will walk away disenchanted with their party if James Renwick does win the leadership. Both men are intelligent, capable people and I feel the New Democratic Party will continue to grow no matter who gets in.

But it indicates the potential that this party has in terms of leadership.

Also, from the Toronto Daily Star of November 18, I want to quote another statement by my leader and he said—

Mr. MacDonald: That was the day after.

Mr. Pilkey: I want to quote another statement by my leader and he said: "Let us not get too worried when it is suggested that the New Democratic Party is becoming respectable—"

An hon. member: It has a long way to go.

Mr. Pilkey: "That means that we are winning the trust of the people who must eventually give us the power of government."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: It would be hard to express the essentials of democratic policy more clearly—a party where the radical, conservative or the middle of the road candidate can win majority support only by convincing the voters that he is responsible and effective. And that is what this party is all about; and that is why our leader, Donald MacDonald, will be the next premier of Ontario, come the next election.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: You are pulling them in.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): We are going to miss you boys.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): The new voice of optimism, 1967-1997.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): You recognize it is inevitable—

Mr. Pilkey: I also wanted to quote from Hansard, from a speech made by the hon. Prime Minister, speaking about two of the members on the select committee. I want to quote exactly what he said:

However, I understand there are certain members of it who found their freedom of action sort of cut off in the latter days. After examination was made and the conclusions were reached, all of a sudden the hand of the hierarchy reached up and said, "Thou shalt not do it that way in this committee; thou shalt do it this way according to the dictates of the caucus and the socialist experts who advised it."

Well, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as a member of that committee I appreciated the consultation that I had with not only the leaders of my party—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Careful. The leaders? How many have you got?

Mr. Jessiman: Which one?

Mr. Pilkey: —but also the research expert that we have in our caucus. But I wonder what really happened to the Conservative members of that committee as the heavy hand came down?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Is that a question?

Mr. MacDonald: When are you going to enter the Throne Debate?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the question having been asked, the eight Conservative members on the committee had absolutely no direction from our caucus, from the Cabinet or from our party leader. Absolutely none.

Mr. Deans: No direction whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. White: None.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, I suppose they did not have any directive at the time but they sure got it later. This is a document underlined by the hon. Minister of Revenue, and this is a speech by the hon. Prime Minister when he said:

We do not think as a government that taxing of places of worship and extending the sales tax on food and children's clothing are good recommendations as far as the people of Ontario are concerned.

He went on to say a little more, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What kind of directive was that to the committee?

Mr. Pilkey: This was the directive afterwards, as a matter of fact—

Mr. MacDonald: This is the dictate—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: The Prime Minister went on:

While, as I have said, the two reports unquestionably contain a great deal of extremely well-considered material upon which the government will take action, and which it will implement as quickly as necessary, administrative arrangements can be devised. We have come to the conclusion that on the matter of food and children's clothing and realty taxes on places of worship, economic and academic logic cannot prevail. While reconsidering the theoretical basis of the recommendations I cannot accept their practicality for the province and the people of Ontario.

As I point out, we may have had our consultations prior to the recommendations, but the heavy hand sure came down on that committee following the recommendations.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) told this Legislature last Tuesday that the inclusion of Pickering township in an Oshawa-centred urban region makes sense. Just for a moment,

I would like to make a case for Pickering township to be included in Metro, or at the very least to study the feasibility of Pickering township being included in Metro. The study may very well indicate that Pickering township's interests lie in the Oshawa regional area, but it should be there on a calculated basis, not an arbitrary one.

The Pickering township council have, by formal motion, stressed their desire to be in the Metro Toronto region, and this would in my opinion be an expression of the desires of the majority of the people in a township. The Smith committee suggested five criteria for regional government. One was a community criterion. Surely at this point a sense of community already exists, and shows promise of further development with Metro Toronto.

Mr. MacDonald: Eighty per cent of them work in Metro.

Mr. Pilkey: That is true.

Second was a balanced criterion. Obviously the inclusion of Pickering township into Metro Toronto will not disturb any balance that may now exist. Third was a financial criterion. This could very well be the most important point, inasmuch as every region should possess an adequate tax base, thus simplifying the provincial task of evening out local fiscal disparities. Pickering township's inclusion in a more densely populated and affluent area would simplify this obvious problem. Fourth was a functional criterion. In a greater region, wide benefits could be conferred on Pickering township as a part of Metro Toronto, through specialization and the application of modern technology. Fifth was a co-operation criterion. Responsibility for co-operative discharge of various municipal functions should not create a difficulty within the present framework of Metro Toronto.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs ought to give some credence to the request of the Pickering township council. I am suggesting that at least, as I said earlier, a study should take place. It may very well mean that Pickering's interest lies in the Oshawa region, but I think they ought to be afforded some study to make that determination on a calculated basis.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): That is exactly what he is doing.

Mr. Pilkey: He said on Tuesday that it makes sense that they go into the Oshawa region.

Mr. MacDonald: They act now and study later; that is the way the government operates.

Mr. Pilkey: Right.

Mr. Speaker, not so long ago—on October 17 to be exact—the Minister of Labour announced a 30-per-cent increase in the minimum wage for general industry in Ontario effective January 1, 1969. I might point out that he did say it was a 30-per-cent increase, and I do not know who he was really fooling in that regard. I mean, a 30-per-cent wage increase is rather substantial, but when you add it on $1, it is not very much. I think he was really trying to fool some of the people of this province when he used the 30 per cent. He could very well have said a 30-cent increase—not 30 per cent! The Minister went on to say in his news release that the new rates will restore the Ontario minimum to the relationship it held with the cost of living and wages when it was first established in 1963.

Mr. MacDonald: As usual, just catching up.

Mr. Pilkey: Well I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it does not even catch up. The 30 cents will not bring those people to the level that they had in 1963 because of the increase in the cost of living and I say that because it is our estimate that 0.6 in the index represents one cent.

I am not too sure that 0.6 really covers the one cent, that it ought not to be more, if we translate the 0.6 into the cost of living from 1963 to 1968, to the effective date of this minimum wage, we will find that the cost of living went up something like 45 to 48 cents.

If we were just meeting the cost of living, this should have been the increase in the minimum wage.

Now I know that the Toronto Daily Star and the Globe and Mail—who are really not noted for being in the vanguard of progress in this province—have indicated in their editorials some time ago, September 26 in the Star and September 30 in the Globe and Mail, that the minimum wage should be at least $1.50 and therefore this government is even behind those two papers and their editorials. They are behind them by 20 cents an hour.

The fact is that the minimum wage, as far as a great number of employees in the hotel, tourist resorts, restaurants and taverns are concerned does not come into effect until October 1, 1969, not even January 1. Nine more months before they give them the full 30 cents per hour.

Mr. MacDonald: And give specious reasons too!

Mr. Pilkey: I want to quote for a moment from these two editorials:

Many hard working people in this rich province are meanly paid for producing goods and services that are increasingly demanded by the comparable majority. On October of last year, over 100,000 workers in these industries earned less than $1.25 per hour and over 170,000 earned less than $1.50 per hour. Below the $1.50 rate were 40 per cent of retail employees, 60 per cent of laundry and cleaning employees and 75 per cent of hotel, restaurant and tavern employees.

The task of raising such wages above poverty level cannot be left to the labour unions. Too many of the workers are unorganized and even if the unions were well established in these industries, they often cannot win decent wages. They lack bargaining power because they have relatively unskilled members who can be easily replaced in the event of a strike, or because employers may be driven out of business if their wages get far out of line with non-union competitors.

I want to make a comment on that point in a few minutes—the question of these unskilled members being easy to replace in the event of a strike—because we have a number of situations in the province of Ontario that are a disgrace. This government ought to be ashamed of the action they have taken up to now. I want to enunciate some of those cases in a few moments.

In the editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail they go on to say Ontario should have a minimum wage at present of $1.50 an hour and it should apply to every worker. There should be no extra 25 cents an hour.

I want to make the point that even $1.50 per hour is not going to do the job that is necessary to raise the standard of living of these people above the poverty level. They are going to continue to be the second-class citizens of this province—and what did the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) say when this question was pointed up to him?

A drastic increase in the minimum wage forced small industries into bankruptcy and resulted in huge increases in unemployment, Ontario Labour Minister Dalton Bales told a group of manufacturers yesterday. He said the government, faced with intense competition for new industry, has had to give priority to low unemployment rates over high wages.

Well I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that if we have to take the choice, of people receiving a substandard wage—and really in effect what they are doing is subsidizing these inefficient operations here in the province of Ontario—I suggest to this government that you ought to say to them, “Either you update your manufacturing operations or you have no place in this province at those wages”. I think we have to be very frank and brutal on the question of wages having to be raised to give the people a decent standard of living.

There is strong public sentiment which appears to have priority and which governments of today must constantly bear in mind; the need to manage the economy as close to full employment as possible. This is Mr. Bales speaking. He said that excessively high minimum wages would force industry into financial hardship, even bankruptcy, which means the loss of jobs.

This is a rather ludicrous way to manage the economy when we are asking the workers of this province to subsidize inefficient operations.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour of this province knew full well those people who were living on substandard wages, because before he raised the minimum wage to $1.30 per hour he had a survey taken and the survey is called “The Wages, Hours and Overtime Pay Provision in Selected Industries, October, 1967.” He knew full well what the need was in the province, but the government lacked the intestinal fortitude to meet the needs of the people on substandard wages.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): There are people upstairs right now working for $43 a week.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No heckling, please.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a shameful fact, not a heckle.

Mr. Pilkey: I also want to point out a position that I took last July in regard to the automobile insurance plans that are prevalent here in the province of Ontario.

I notice that the Wotton Royal commission in British Columbia stated that the motorists are paying roughly $1.60 for each one dollar settlement paid by the automobile insurers. I might also point out that last July I said that if this government was not prepared to take on the question of providing adequate automobile insurance at rates that the people of this province could afford, then the trade union movement ought to take this up as a collective bargaining goal.

Well this must have at least concerned the Ontario insurance agents association because they did indicate what was happening in the state of New Jersey where the AF of L, CIO was reportedly dickering with a number of insurance companies in an effort to design a low-cost group plan for their one-half million union members in that state. They are hoping to effect a 20 per cent saving over individual policy plans.

It has been no secret that a number of unions have been working towards this end with their sights set towards eventually having the various employers provide auto and perhaps homeowner insurance as another fringe benefit. If there was ever a time when the independent agent had better do more account development I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time that this government initiated at least some study or indicated to the people of this province that we were going to have an automobile car insurance programme in the province of Ontario.

I want to just quote for a moment an article that appeared in the Wall Street Journal some time ago praising Saskatchewan car insurance. This is what it says:

While Saskatchewan's Liberal government and eastern Canadian private insurance companies are holding hush-hush secret meetings to liquidate the province's government car insurance plan, other Canadian provinces are investigating the plan as a means of getting themselves out of the predicament they are in as the result of private insurance company plans. Even the United States, that notorious land of free enterprise, is eyeing the plan with increasing interest.

The Wall Street Journal, a blue-chip financial paper, last November carried an article lauding Saskatchewan's plan under the title “A Canadian province finds a way to slash auto crash litigation”. The Journal said.

Pointing up the need for no-fault policies to cut down on the backlog of insurance lawsuits, the Journal went on to say: “Saskatchewan's plan has been operating 21 years. It was established in 1946 when Saskatchewan elected the only Socialist state or provincial government ever to take office in North America. The Socialists promptly set up a government-operated insurance system.

"Though the Socialists were replaced in 1964 by the regime of the middle-of-the-road Liberal Party that had promised to return auto insurance entirely to private companies, the provincial insurance system has been maintained and there appears to be little likelihood of major change."

"Government auto insurance has given us a lot of headaches," says the Saskatchewan Liberal Party Premier Ross Thatcher. "There have been plenty of times when I wanted to throw the plan in the Pacific Ocean." But he added: "I would have to admit the plan is working. Hardly anyone injured in an automobile accident in Saskatchewan goes uncompensated."

Then it goes on and on. It says that it is estimated that in Saskatchewan 93 per cent of the premium income is paid in benefits, and I want to suggest to this government that this is much greater than the private insurance companies are paying towards their policy holders here in the province of Ontario.

There is a need for government action, and I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, this government ought to provide this kind of insurance—as they do hospital insurance that they instituted into Ontario or the OMSIP plan. Many of these plans can be of benefit to the people of this province, but they need an imaginative government to implement them, and I would suggest to this government that they ought to take this into consideration.

Hon. Mr. White: Do I infer that you like OMSIP then?

Mr. MacDonald: Well it is a typical Tory half measure.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Put it this way, it is better than nothing.

Mr. Pilkey: As far as OMSIP is concerned I think that it was a step in the right direction and when the New Democratic Party is elected to government we will build on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Complete it.

Mr. Pilkey: That is right. We think it was a step in the right direction.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: It took us three years to blast you into than even, from 1962 to 1965.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, one of the other problems that is becoming increasingly apparent—and will become more critical; in our opinion in the year 1969, is the question of unemployment.

An ever buoyant economy in Ontario could be one of its greatest material assets. An economy geared to full production could create enough wealth to provide adequate wage levels to wipe out poverty; put an end to insecurity; and the fear of unemployment, and to meet our obligations to the poor of this province.

The failure to meet these goals really lies in this government's inability to generate a full production economy and because the people of this province have not enough purchasing power to keep our economy operating at full capacity. Nor have we solved the age-old problem of distributing fairly and sensibly the fruits of our production.

In reality there are two effective instruments which could be used to correct the imbalance in the distribution of purchasing power. One is free collective bargaining, and the other is for the government to provide meaningful legislation. For too many years Canada has suffered from unemployment rates much higher than any other industrialized country of the world. The latest figures released by the DBS indicates a rise to 4.2 per cent compared with 3.8 per cent a year earlier.

Mr. D. B. Marsh, assistant general manager of the Royal Bank of Canada in predicting the economy for the year 1969, told a forum at the University of Toronto school of business that unemployment rates should creep higher. The bank economist said the labour force was expected to increase by three per cent during the year while the number of jobs should expand by less than 2.5 per cent. The result: an average of 5.5 per cent of the labour force should be out of work in 1969.

How long can we as a nation tolerate such a disgraceful and indefensible unemployment record?

I might also point out, Mr. Speaker, that not so long ago, the economic council denounced the degree of poverty in Canada as a disgrace. I have a report here:

Involving Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's goal in a just society, the economic council of Canada yesterday denounced the persistence of poverty in Canada as a disgrace, and said that a more purposeful attack on it is urgent. It estimated conservatively that one Canadian out of every five suffers from poverty and singles out the plight of the Indians, Eskimos and others for special attention.

The elimination of serious poverty should be designated as a major national goal, the council says in a fifth annual review. One of the wealthiest societies in world history if it also aspires to be a just society, cannot avoid setting itself such a goal.

The question of poverty has been described by many in government both at the provincial and federal level as being regional or as pockets of poverty. They describe it in many ways, but really do not do much about it. We had an illustration just a moment ago when this government had an opportunity to take some meaningful action in regard to poverty and yet continues to perpetuate it with a low minimum wage.

Every action of this government indicates very little concern about the poverty that exists in this province, and this is one of the most, if not the most, urgent problems that exists. Poverty is not just in the area of wages, poverty exists in terms of housing, in education and in many social areas. I raised in this House, with the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) the question of a housing situation that is prevalent in Oshawa. He did outline the government's programme, but I wanted to indicate what is happening there, and I suspect very strongly that in Oshawa it is rather minimal in terms of a wide metropolitan area like Toronto. But there is a problem, and if it exists in Oshawa which is one of the highest wage areas in the Dominion of Canada—I think the city is second—and if we have that kind of problem there, what is happening in the rest of the province of Ontario?

An article I have here asks: Is the Oshawa area facing a housing problem? Fact: Since August the children's aid society has admitted—now listen to this—admitted 24 children under a child protection department for no other reason than the lack of housing. Now I just happen to think it is a disgrace, and is shameful, in this affluent society that we live in, that 24 children in this municipality had to be committed to the children's aid society because of a lack of proper accommodation.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): How come you did not send them to the training schools?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I guess you thought there was not enough profit for you to take them into Brown Camps.

Mr. Pilkey: It goes on to say that, according to Bernard Lewis of the children's aid society, four area families with a total of 14 children are facing eviction. These include two families in Oshawa, one in Whitby and one in Manchester. Fact: Applications for low rental housing at the city housing authorities total over 300 and the backlog continues to grow. Mr. Lewis at the children's aid society described the situation as becoming a major problem.

Mr. Cheesburg, director of social services described Oshawa's housing situation as unbelievably bad, and he agreed that it is getting worse, and yet this government sits back and does nothing in terms of providing the necessary housing for those people.

It is going to take people with the courage to initiate mass housing programmes in this province if we are going to meet the needs of the people.

Also, while we are talking about the care of the poor, the trade union movement was taken to task somewhat by a Mr. Smith, at a meeting sponsored by the Lakeshore New Democratic Party at which I was in attendance. And I would like to comment for a moment on some of the statements that were made by Mr. Smith, and I want to indicate what the trade union movement has been doing and the roadblocks that are placed in their way by government legislation—roadblocks that make effective collective bargaining in many cases nil.

Mr. Smith first of all stressed that he was not anti-labour:

I fear the stagnation and complacency of today's labour movement and hope for transformation of this role before society in general assumes that unions have become irrelevant to the problems of the day.

He went on to say that wage parity with the United States on a real basis was impossible because of the different levels of productivity between the two countries. And he went on to point out that the major car manufacturers should have expected a demand for higher wages inasmuch as they are today selling cars to the United States, and the big three had gained a nice windfall through the auto-pact. He went on to say that the UAW in its best tradition, had exploited the market and had decided that they deserved a slice of the pie.

Well, I want to say in that regard, Mr. Speaker, that I am convinced that the big three in the auto industry could not only have given the wages that were demanded by the union, they could have given the consumer a decrease in the price of the automobile and also given their shareholders a respectable dividend on their investments. So I questioned Mr. Smith in that regard, and I bring this up as a sideline to this question of the exploiting of the poor by organized labour, because he went on to say that approximately one-third of the Canadian labour force is unionized.

Outside this almost elite group, he said, the problems of our society exist, and unions seem to have joined in an unholy alliance with the other conservative groups of society in ignoring or being apathetic to these problems—and he is speaking again about the poor and the unskilled in our society.

Well, I want to tell you what the trade union movement is attempting to accomplish in three areas in this province, and the reasons for their effort to provide support to the workers, the poor and of those who are existing on substandard wages that Mr. Smith speaks of. First of all, I would like to talk about the strike that is presently taking place in Wallaceburg between the UAW and the North American Plastic Company Ltd.

This strike has been in progress for seven months; there were 323 employees who went out originally and there are now 400 strike-breakers operating that plant in Wallaceburg. Now, at the time of certification, 99 per cent of those employees voted for a union and voted for the UAW.

Let me tell you about the reactionary type of management that union faces. Mike Ladners, Jr., was speaking to a meeting of the automotive engineers in Detroit, and he used as his theme, "How to smash unions." This same Mr. Ladners is now using Canadian laws to beat back the workers and to smash that union. In addition to that, he now has the law on his side, where an injunction has been served so that the pickets have been reduced thus giving this management the opportunity of taking workers through the picket line.

In addition to that, this government provided provincial and local police to escort people through the picket lines. Many of the people working in the plant were brought in from nearby Chatham and they were escorted through those picket lines.

In addition, trumped up charges have been laid against the pickets, and I might point out to this government, that since the charges have come into court, 90 per cent of them have been dismissed.

This in itself, indicates an abuse of our courts here in the province of Ontario, to intimidate workers.

I might also point out that this Mr. Ladners, Jr., is an American. I have nothing against Americans, but he really has no respect for the courts of this province. As you know, when the judge enters the court, everyone stands in respect to that judge, but the other day Mr. Ladners sat down, he did not stand, he will not stand in Canadian courts, because he does not care what happens in our courts. And Mr. Ladners does not care what happens to the workers employed in this plant.

Though 99 per cent of the people voted for certification in this plant, there is going to be a hearing on December 19 for decertification. Do you know what that means? It means that those 99 per cent that voted for certification will not vote on the question of decertification. The strike-breakers and scabs will vote on that question, and 323 workers will be left without a job, outside the plant gates with nothing to say.

I suggest that if ever there were a need for a revision in the Labour Relations Act, protecting the people that were certified originally it is now. It is now that we need the protection, and the government ought to revise the Labour Relations Act to give these workers the necessary protection.

Interjections by hon. members

Mr. MacDonald: Aren't you a little ashamed?

Mr. Pilkey: The Labour Relations Act, on page nine, section 12, says that the parties shall bargain in good faith.

An hon. member: What are you going to do about it dad?

Mr. Pilkey: I want to suggest, through you Mr. Speaker, to the government, that this Wallaceburg management is bargaining in bad faith in regard to these employees and I say this is bad faith bargaining because I want to indicate just two of the issues that that are holding the parties apart.

One of the issues is the question of union security, that has been accepted by the vast majority of managements in this province.

One of the other issues is the processing of grievances and you know what this management said? They said: The only thing that we will agree to in the grievance procedure, is that you can handle two grievances a week and if there are any more we do not want to hear about them.

Now there is no self-respecting union in this province that can accept that kind of grievance procedure in an agreement. We have negotiated contracts in this province that allows for full-time people to do nothing more than to handle grievances and this is what they do all day long. Full-time people, and yet you get a reactionary management like this, that is trying to hold the workers to processing two grievances a week.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Limited justice.

Mr. Pilkey: This strike in Wallaceburg ought to be a top priority item with this government in terms of attempting to find a solution, because I am convinced that if this government does not find solutions to these problems, the day will come when the workers are going to find the solutions for you. They are not going to tolerate those kind of situations for too long.

We have another situation in this province that is equally deplorable, and this is where 20 workers at the Peterborough Examiner in the city of Peterborough are attempting to gain a measure of economic and social justice.

Mr. Stokes: You go back to Wallaceburg and settle that thing.

Mr. Pilkey: I might point out, for a little background, that the Peterborough Examiner, formerly owned by the Davies Family, was bought by the Thomson chain in March of 1968. Shortly afterwards the Newspaper Guild was certified as the bargaining agent for the reporters and editors below the level of city editor. The union sought a one-year contract, stressing a reasonable wage scale, union security, job security, protection against unilateral transfer to another Thomson paper, a proper work week, and standard overtime provisions.

After six months of stalling, management replied by offering a three-year contract that:

1. Proposed a scale of minimum salaries below the existing level.

Now I wonder what happens to the question on page 9 of the Act: "shall bargain in good faith".

2. Discriminated against women by offering unequal pay for equal work.

3. Refused union and job security and offered no guarantee against wage cuts during the life of the agreement, and

4. Provided no reasonable work week or overtime provision.

The dispute has been twice to the conciliation officer and to a conciliation board which produced a report but made no recommendations.

Right now a reporter's salary scale is $85 to $120 weekly, with union scale revision to provide $150 weekly after five years.

Management's reply: a scale of $62.50 to $117 weekly—lower than the present scale.

The union struck the Examiner on November 2. No injunction applies in this dispute and I might also point out that recently a number of university students joined the strikers on the picket line and 13 were arrested. I suppose that is some more of Ontario's justice in regard to people that are participating on picket lines, in a legal strike.

But here are 20 people who are being challenged by the giant in the newspaper industry—Lord Thomson and his powerful Thomson organization. I suggest to the government, through you, Mr. Speaker, that they really had no idea of tolerating the union in their plant.

In other words, there was no question about bargaining in good faith. They were bent at the outset on a course to destroy the union. I have had some practical experience in this regard. I have sat on two boards of conciliation with the Newspaper Guild against the Thomson chain. In the first one, we were able to work out an agreement but there was no question about the course they set out on in the second round of negotiations. They set out on a course that would have destroyed that union.

Fortunately, in that situation, where the Newspaper Guild was in a strike with that management, organized labour came to their assistance in great numbers.

I want to give credit to the then Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree), who arranged that we should meet in the Prime Minister's office. I think it was about 72 hours following that meeting, that an agreement had been reached and I want to suggest to this government that those same powers can be used in this situation to get a desirable result. The same powers that were used to resolve the Oshawa Times situation can be used in this one; this government knows they have the power to get a settlement in these situations.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

I was wondering if the hon. member for Oshawa saw in tonight's paper where the members of management and members of the union met with Mr. Dickie in this building today? I saw it in tonight's paper at supertime.

Mr. MacDonald: The government should back Dickie up in face of a defiant management that will not bargain in good faith, but he is not getting any backing.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say very frankly to the member, if this is true then we welcome this kind of action on behalf of the government, to resolve some of these disputes.

Hon. Mr. White: It is a little embarrassing now—

Mr. Pilkey: Well it is not too embarrassing. These things do not embarrass me, fortunately. If we can work out settlements and if the government wants the credit for getting the settlements they can have all the credit—but first resolve these problems so that people's jobs are not jeopardized. This is the key to the thing; we do not care who gets the credit.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not sit idly by while the union is working—

Hon. Mr. White: The talk is over there and the action is over here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: We will give you the credit if you just get the settlements.

Mr. Stokes: He just gave credit to the former Minister of Labour.

Mr. MacDonald: How about some action down at Wallaceburg? Are you going to sit that one out?

Hon. Mr. White: It is a little embarrassing that the labour chief would not know that.

Mr. Pilkey: It is not embarrassing at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister of Revenue did not have his own suggestions handled too well by his leader. That was a little embarrassing too.

Mr. Pilkey: Now the other strike that is going on in this province that has had prominence in the press and one in which this party has been vitally interested, has been—

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): We are vitally interested.

Mr. Pilkey: Well we will find out how interested the Liberals were in just a moment.

This is the Proctor-Silex strike in Picton. The condoning of the Proctor-Silex strike in Picton is indefensible. The situation reproduces in 1968 what happened in Tilco Plastics in Peterborough in 1966. At Tilco a union was broken by a combination of court injunctions and the so-called right of the owner, in management of a plant, to replace the labour force when confronted with a lawful strike.

The New Democratic Party is totally opposed to this destruction of the freedom of association, freedom of assembly, and freedom of speech. There was a time in human affairs when poverty was inescapable because of inadequate production facilities. Today, through science, technology, and economic capacity, we have the tools to abolish poverty. Yet we have in this "province of opportunity" a firm which is making every effort to perpetuate poverty in Picton.

How can we tolerate wages of less than $1.25 per hour? A married man working for Proctor-Silex finds his salary base below the point where the Economic Council of Canada indicates that bitter poverty begins. The workers in this plant do not enjoy the fringe benefits negotiated in many industrial areas of this province. Has this American-based company conducted its affairs as a good corporate citizen? Have they conducted the negotiations with local 585 IUEW in good faith with the object of an honourable and satisfactory settlement? Obviously the answer to both questions is "no".

The IUEW was certified to represent the Proctor-Silex workers on January 27, 1967, and on January 2, 1968, notified the company of its desire to bargain. The company notified the union that they would meet on January 19, 1968, although the law in the province of Ontario states that the parties will meet within 15 days after the notice to commence bargaining.

The parties met on January 19 and the union presented their proposals but the meeting was terminated in approximately one hour because the company's lawyer had to catch a plane to Philadelphia. The Proctor-Silex management would not meet the following week and set a tentative date of January 30. This meeting was called off and rescheduled for February 2. The meeting on February 2 lasted approximately two hours with the company making no submission or counter proposals. The company stated they could not meet the following week but would meet on February 14. During the meeting of February 14 a little progress was made and a tentative date of February 21 or 22 was set for future meetings. The company cancelled the tentative date and set February 28 for the meeting.

Next meeting was scheduled for March 14 and 15. The meeting was arranged for March 14 with Mr. Findlay, the plant manager, without the company lawyer, but very little was achieved and it appeared that management did not want to meet without their lawyer. The company would not meet the next day or even the following week and set March 27 as the meeting date. On March 20 the company informed the union that they could not meet on March 27 and the earliest possible date was April 3. The reason given was the company would not consent to any further meetings until their lawyer was available.

Mr. MacDonald: Where was the Minister of Labour during all that kind of procedure?

Mr. Pilkey: The delaying tactics of the company prompted the membership to call for conciliation services and the taking of a strike vote. The strike vote resulted in a 98 per cent vote for strike action if necessary to effect a satisfactory settlement. Conciliation procedures dragged out for weeks and finally the workers walked out on July 17, 1968.

During this entire period the company made no monetary offer. In fact no offer was made until the strike had been in progress for a two week period. At this point the company's offer was four per cent and on August 21 they gave the take-it-or-leave-it offer of six per cent. The six per cent offer would only reflect in a 5.6 cents to 15 cents adjustment in the various wage classifications. The facts are that the Proctor-Silex company had acted in a most irresponsible manner and bargained in bad faith from the very outset of the negotiations.

An injunction, which has no place in the field of labour relations, is now in force in the Picton situation. The injunction is being used by management to score an advantage over the union. With the injunction as a weapon to destroy the union the company have been able, because of a defect in the law, to move to destroy the union by duping other citizens to accept employment as strike breakers.

In addition to the injunction, the union has had to face Mayor H. J. MacFarland, a millionaire contractor, who has vast holdings in Prince Edward County and receives approximately $58,000 a year rent from the Proctor-Silex plant and other properties owned by him. Mr. MacFarland has done absolutely nothing to assist in resolving this dispute; as a matter of fact he had been more sympathetic to the company.

To further harrass the employees a threatening letter was sent out to every striking employee of the Proctor-Silex plant suggesting termination of employment if he did not return to work immediately. With the law, the mayor, and the company coming down full force on the striking members of this plant, the odds are formidable. After full realization of the odds facing the workers and out of deep concern for the strikers, the New Democratic Party caucus members appeared in the picket line in Picton to demonstrate their support for the strikers and to display a sense of solidarity.

Wherever there is an attempt to smash unions, wherever there is an attempt to exploit people, and wherever we can demonstrate against inhuman working conditions and poverty, the New Democratic Party must, and will, demonstrate unequivocal support for such people.

The people of Ontario cannot tolerate the Proctor-Silex situations anywhere in our province, nor can they tolerate wages and salaries that do not provide a decent economic standard of living for the worker and his family, and let it be perfectly clear to the government of Ontario that the New Democratic Party will not permit another union to be broken as the textile workers union was broken at Tilco.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): May I ask a question please? Do you have any idea how many of those people in the Proctor-Silex company own their own homes, what percentage there is, or anything about it? I am simply referring to a statement of the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), who states that here in Toronto a man and his wife who collectively make $17,000 a year, cannot afford to own their own home. I am just asking you tentatively if you really know the story. Now I have not been acting on behalf of the company or the union, either one, but I am just asking you how much do you really know about this whole situation.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who just spoke would not want to mislead the House. I certainly did not say that a man and his wife earning $17,000 in this city could not own their own home. What I did, and I am sure the member does not recollect correctly, was to read a letter from a man, an immigrant from England, who was having extreme difficulty in buying a home because he could not save the down payment. I never at any time made the suggestion which he has just attributed to me.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa may continue. If he wishes to answer the question he may do so.

Mr. Pilkey: I did not get the question and my colleague answered it anyway.

Mr. MacDonald: The questioner has not got the question.

Mr. Stokes: It was not a question at all.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, I just want to say to the member for Prince Edward-Lennox, that he would not know much about that Picton strike. I doubt very much whether he has ever been down there giving those workers any kind of support.

Mr. Whitney: I was impartial until you got down there and then I started looking at the other side.

Mr. Pilkey: Get that in the record.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What kind of wages are they getting on the other side?

Mr. Stokes: Does the member mean he was not aware of where the money was coming from until we got down there?

Mr. Whitney: What money?

Mr. Shulman: How much did MacFarland give you for your campaign?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, in the Proctor-Silex strike I do not think that the union was making excessive demands on this company. Their demand was for a $1.60 minimum wage for women, and $1.80 minimum wage for men, and this really would just provide a minimum standard of living in any part of this province. This was their demand on that company in terms of wages and yet this company refuses to meet that demand and provides strike breakers to beat back the forces of the workers in the electrical union.

I want to say that there has been some support, not only from the New Democratic Party, for this strike and from various other unions, but I was rather impressed with an article that appeared in the Belleville Intelligencer on October 2. It had a heading "Company will not service Proctor-Silex appliances: 'We will not sell or service Proctor-Silex products until further notice,'" read a full-page advertisement in Friday's Picton Gazette. It was signed by the owner of Wellington TV and Appliances, Mr. Craig Platt, who has started a commercial campaign against low wages at the Proctor-Silex plant.

When asked why he felt he should boycott company products, he replied that the wages at the plant were ridiculous. "I have actually been ashamed to cash pay cheques from the Proctor-Silex workers because they're too low," he stated. I wonder what the member for Prince Edward-Lennox thinks about that?

Mr. Whitney: Is that a question?

Mr. Pilkey: Yes, what does the member think of that?

Mr. Whitney: Well, I can tell you what I think about it. It is neither here nor there, it is simply one man's opinion and down in Prince Edward we have freedom. Anyone can think as he likes and advertise as he likes and there is no establishment whatever. That is the proof in reply to the assertions you people have been making. Everybody is free and nobody objects.

Mr. Pilkey: After 18 years with Mr. MacFarland, I do not know how much democracy there really is there; how much freedom.

Mr. Whitney: Does the member believe that the vote of the people means anything?

Mr. Pilkey: Well, the last time he was elected—he was never opposed before, nobody had the nerve.

Mr. Whitney: Pretty nearly three to one the last time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a conflict of interest and you are all benefactors.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Platt, who handles and services Proctor-Silex products at his store has taken all of them off the shelves and stored them. The company ought to go back to where it came from unless they start paying decent wages. We got this plant, I think, from Quebec. I think we should have left it down there where it belonged if they are going to continue to pay that kind of wage. Mr. Platt, who first ran his advertisement in Friday's Gazette, says he has not talked to other merchants yet or heard their reaction but he does have definite feelings about what they should do. If other merchants do not start boycotting Proctor-Silex products also, it is only because they are afraid they will have to pay over the minimum wage level themselves and at least here was one stalwart citizen in Prince Edward county who had the intestinal fortitude to stand up to this management.

Mr. Whitney: They all have intestinal fortitude, they all have.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. White: Do not look now, but all the Renwick gang have left, they are boycotting the co-chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: I can understand your shame about it—that you would want to hide it.

Mr. Stokes: That is not a red herring, that is a mackerel.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We do not approve of just $60 a week, I can tell you that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No heckling back there.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, at a large meeting that was held and I recall being there, there was something like—

Mr. Whitney: Sure, you advertised.

Mr. Pilkey: There were 1,000 people at that meeting, and I want to point out to the member for Prince Edward-Lennox that he was extended an invitation to attend.

Mr. Whitney: I said I would not be there.

Mr. Pilkey: I can understand that, he is not interested.

Mr. Whitney: Because at that time I was not involved in any fight and I am still not involved.

Mr. MacDonald: The member has changed his mind in the last two minutes.

Mr. Whitney: That was a packed meeting if there ever was one.

Mr. Pilkey: And they had a story in the Kingston Whig-Standard that indicated the mayor, the MP and the MLA missed the labour meeting in Picton, where 1,000 people were demonstrating their support for the 99 strikers at the Proctor-Silex plant that are being exploited by a reactionary management here in the province of Ontario. And the MLA stays home.

Mr. Whitney: That meeting was the member's idea.

Mr. Pilkey: Not my idea.

Mr. Whitney: Oh, well, the member was there, and they advertised in the paper—

Mr. Pilkey: I want to also point out, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party was accused by the leader of the Opposition of grandstanding in regard—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, no, he would not do that.

Mr. Pilkey: I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party caucus appeared in the picket line in a tangible, practical way to show our support for a group of workers who are being exploited and are being denied a measure of economic and social justice, and I want to point out that we will be there again if that kind of situation persists here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Whitney: If you want to help the company win, you will go again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: If we want to get an illustration of what is going on in the province of Ontario; if we want to get an illustration of what is happening in the province of Ontario in the giant corporations. Let me digress just for a moment, so we can really find out what is going on—

Mr. Whitney: You gave them a good illustration, they will all remember.

Mr. Stokes: What is the member doing about it—he with his non-involvement? Get off the fence and do something.

Mr. Pilkey: This appeared in the magazine section of the Daily Star two weeks ago.

Mr. Pitman: Doing nothing is helping the company.

Mr. Pilkey: It went on to say:

The Ford Motor Company moved to Oakville from Windsor in 1953 and its 5,600 men assembly plant on the eastern approach of town are a model of how large industrial concerns can be made to blend into attractive surroundings. But it is a large industry which is something that Oakville, created largely by the rich as a retreat for their own, has never been strikingly strong on.

Ford's unwritten policy has been that not more than 25 per cent of its work force should come from Oakville. A safeguard that prevents any slump in the local economy if Ford goes on strike and listen to this, and it also prevents the United Auto Workers from taking over the Oakville town council by sheer force of numbers.

Mr. MacDonald: It's not a good idea eh? Let the business minority run the majority that's what you want?

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, here is another example of a giant corporation manipulating the manpower and their interests. In other words, it is all right for big business to control the councils but we must never, never let the the workers have any say. It is in the interest of democracy in their opinion, not to let the workers participate.

This is their interpretation of the democratic procedure in this province; do not let the workers participate in any elected position at the town council level. So they restrict hiring and I want to suggest, to this government if they have knowledge of what is going on in the Ford Motor Company in terms of hiring, they ought to investigate the situation and come down full force on that company, so that every worker has the right to employment regardless of where he lives in this province and not restrict him as they are restricting them in Oakville for those insidious, devious reasons that are indicated in this newspaper.

But this is just another example of what is going on in this province as far as the giant corporations are concerned.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by indicating that this government must guarantee much greater protection from the reactionary elements of management within our society. It must approach such strike situations with a sense of compassion and a deep sense of understanding of the issues involved and, if necessary, fall on the side of the workers to assure them a decent standard of living and to guarantee that Ontario is truly a province of opportunity.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Would the hon. member permit a question? I am wondering if the fact that all of the Renwick supporters have left the Chamber is any indication of a bifurcation, if you will excuse the expression, in the NDP caucus. I am wondering if the fact that all the Renwick people left during the co-chairman's speech bears any significance?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the member for London South, that this party went through a leadership campaign, and obviously there are some stresses in any leadership campaign, but I want to say this very frankly—this party came out of that leadership campaign stronger than it was before it went into the campaign.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, it is some years since I have had the pleasure and privilege of participating in the Throne Speech which enables me to pay my word of tribute to you for the splendid conduct of the Legislature, over which you have presided for the past two years.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to introduce the broad background of the Ontario government's fiscal considerations into the Throne Speech debate. I believe this emphasis can lead to a much more responsible approach to this discussion which, traditionally, encompasses the full concerns of the government and the Opposition.

I think it is becoming evident to all observers, Mr. Speaker, that the question of what is generally desirable in terms of expanded public service is sometimes proposed outside the context of what is financially feasible, not only in this Legislature but in most other government chambers in Canada.

In recognition of the current and future financial pressures on our operations, I suggest that it may be wise to develop, as a tradition, the practice of presenting a fiscal outlook in the Throne Speech debate, along with a report on current developments affecting the financial affairs of the province. This would put into financial perspective the ramifications of all the proposals presented to this House and provide a background for the budget which follows. By detailing this financial framework in advance of the budget, both the members of this House and the people of this province will be able to assess our total government programme more accurately and relate the costs of specific recommendations more comprehensively.

I propose to you, Mr. Speaker, that such a practice would follow logically the improvements we are developing in the field of financial reporting. The new formats of our budget and our abridged financial report, and our accelerated efforts toward programme budgeting, are all part of a design to provide a clearer conception of government operations in Ontario.

In addition, discussions are now taking place within this government concerning the compilation and reporting of municipal expenditures in a way that can be incorporated into our analysis of the direction of public investment in Ontario.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I hope there is greater public awareness today, because of the present financial demands at all levels of government and the growing burden of all taxation, of the need to develop this concept on the broad base of total public spending in Canada. I envision some day that the process of government decisions will start with an analysis of the total expenditure and investment of public funds by federal, provincial and municipal jurisdictions. This total analysis, besides providing Canadians with an integrated picture of government activity and taxation, would serve as the framework for the annual federal-provincial discussions on finance and, ultimately, for the budget plans of each jurisdiction.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that Ontario will pursue this goal. We believe it is essential for the development of co-ordinated, judicious investment of the taxpayers' dollars.

Our review of financial demands on Ontario must start with a look at the current state of operations. Our present expenditure and revenue flows are following closely the estimates presented to this House in March. Our expenditures are expected to exceed revenues by about $250 million, as forecast in my budget statement last March, a deficit then can be handled without great difficulty through controlled borrowing and the use of liquid reserves.

As the Prime Minister and I have stressed repeatedly, our financial base is healthy and strong. The Ontario economy has been remarkably buoyant during 1968. I recall my forecast that Ontario's gross provincial product will increase by at least seven per cent this year. As of November, it was running at eight per cent, one per cent better than I had anticipated.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): For November or the whole year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As of November, rather obviously for the year up to November, I think.

Our financial operations are under full control. Our provincial credit has never been better. Our economy is aggressive. Our standard of living remains among the highest in the world.

Wise government, however, demands more than satisfaction from existing conditions and present operations. This administration, as has its predecessors, recognizes its responsibility to prepare for the future.

To document once again our long-held position that Ontario and our sister provinces are receiving the short end of the revenue stick in Canada, my department earlier this year compiled a detailed five-year forecast of expenditures under present programmes and revenues from existing rates of taxation. The result confirmed the legitimate concerns outlined years ago by the former Premier of this province, the hon. Leslie Frost, and the more recent projections of the federal-provincial tax structure committee and the Ontario committee on taxation, and in the supporting papers of my last Budget.

The Prime Minister and I, in recognition of our responsibility to the people of Ontario, have spelled out the disturbing results of these five-year projections. I will place them now on record here briefly.

Between now and the fiscal year 1972-73, if we allowed present expenditure trends to continue and held taxes at existing rates:

Total expenditures would rise by 74 per cent while revenues would increase by only 40 per cent;

Ontario's annual deficit would increase by more than 500 per cent, raising our provincial debt from less than $2 billion to more than $5 billion in 1973;

Even if we increased our borrowings to nine per cent of gross provincial product, this was recommended as sustainable and supportable by the Ontario committee on taxation, the projected financial gap for the single fiscal year of 1972-73 would be close to $900 million.

This fiscal spiral cannot and will not take place, as the Prime Minister has assured the people of this province on many occasions. But our citizens must be aware of the challenge that they, and we, face.

This area, however, represents only one of the two principal sources of financial pressure on the province. The other one, equally formidable and paramount in the consideration of tax reform for Ontario, is the cost of relieving the property tax burden by shifting more municipal financing to the provincial Treasury.

The funds required to satisfy each of these needs, even in the immediate year ahead, are staggering:

1. If the government accepted the full estimates submitted by our departments for 1969-70, our revenues would fall short by $600 million. With expenditure increases projected to outrun our revenue growth consistently by almost 2 to 1, this pressure to finance our own Budget obviously will get worse with each succeeding year.

2. The cost to the province of undertaking the full municipal-to-provincial shift, envisaged by the Ontario (Smith) and the Select (White) committees on taxation, would amount to $400 million. This is over and above the costs of reforms already implemented, including the municipal tax reduction programme and the takeover of justice administration costs.

The increase in the average provincial contribution toward local education costs to the level of 60 per cent, as advocated by both taxation committees, alone would require more than $200 million.

The other components of this $400 million price tag for reform include the costs of providing municipal taxes on exempt properties, higher grants in lieu of property taxes on provincial facilities, an increase in the unconditional grant and in assistance toward health and welfare programmes, and the rise in municipal tax reduction grants if the residential and farm taxable assessments were reduced to the proportions suggested by either Smith or White.

The twin pressures on this government—the rising costs of provincial programmes and the expenditures associated with tax reform—would total a cool $1 billion, or close to a 40 per cent increase over the present Budget, if we accepted them.

Obviously, Ontario cannot finance this load with its present tax resources. We cannot find the finances to carry forward, on the scale required, our own provincial programmes, many of which involve heavy contributions toward municipal costs. This presents a challenge in maintaining our present commitments to municipalities, let alone undertaking the package of municipal tax relief that has been proposed.

The excessive revenue demands to meet both tax reform needs and rising costs formed the background for Ontario's presentation to the recent federal-provincial meeting of Ministers of Finance and Provincial Treasurers.

In 1966, Ontario put forward its case for a reasonable rationalization of federal-provincial finance and our presentation still stands. We have argued for a fairer share of progressive tax capacity, based on a proper starting point in tax division to correct the basic fiscal imbalance between the federal and provincial-municipal levels of government.

Ontario pointed out also that without a more rational distribution of tax powers there is little hope that governments as a whole can contain total tax and debt levels, and allocate total public resources on a priority basis.

While admitting that provincial-municipal spending inevitably will grow faster than federal spending, Ottawa nevertheless has refused to relinquish any of its growth taxes. Instead, it has steered a course of programme invention that has dissipated potential federal surpluses, pushed up total public spending and raised taxes to excessive levels.

I doubt if anyone needs to be reminded of the consequences of the federal rigidity in 1966. Municipal taxes in Ontario, on average, went up 10 per cent each of the two past years; Ontario's taxes were raised by $105 million this year; and, irony of it all, Ottawa has proceeded to grab lustily into the income tax base so desperately needed by the provincial jurisdictions.

When our tax-sharing negotiations were resumed last month, Ottawa again refused any reallocation of tax powers to remedy the basic fiscal distortion in Canada.

Ottawa's position in short was: "I'm all right, you hustle out and patch up your own pocket."

In addition, Ottawa advised the provinces that it will limit its financial participation in three vital areas:

- Health and hospital grants will be discontinued;
- Health resources funds will be severely rationed;
- A larger share of health costs for Indians will be thrust on the provinces.

The screw has been turned even tighter by Ottawa's October budget which introduced the social development tax. While piously advising the provinces to raise their own income taxes, Ottawa largely pre-empted that very action by imposing the equivalent of a nine per cent increase in income taxes for themselves, specifically to finance its universal medicare programme.

And, with this imposition, the frustration of irony is piled on the exasperation of paradox.

Here is a regressive tax imposed on a progressive source of revenue in such a way that it precludes the hope of relieving the regressive character of the provincial-municipal tax system; in effect, intensifying in two directions the burden of taxation on low-income families.

Now you may not like the next one, Mr. Speaker but I am going to say it anyway. Ottawa's insistence on medicare is the greatest paradox, the extreme inconsistency—now we are not through with the Liberals yet, we may have something more to say—probably the most devastating of all shared-cost programmes, in terms of increasing expenditure. The financial community has been shocked by the inadequacy of Ottawa's estimating in these fields last year; that is what I referred to when I said credibility gap. It will be stunned equally by the unrealistic approach to medicare expenses.

Mr. Speaker, just last week I received a report from the Canadian Conference on Health Care whose annual survey reveals that the coverage of medical insurance in Ontario has risen to 97.3 per cent as of December 31, 1967. The Ontario citizen, Mr. Speaker, now relatively happy with his health insurance and, for the most part, prepared to look after this obligation by his own means, will start paying the two per cent federal medicare tax on January 1, 1969.

I estimate that the taxpayers of this province will contribute $225 million through medicare taxation during the coming year, more than half the urgent requirement for municipal tax relief and reform. I repeat more than half the urgent requirement for municipal tax relief and reform. I will discuss that in a moment.

This immediate burden, heavy as it is, may be relatively small compared to future costs in this field. As we were so forcefully reminded at the recent conference, the federal government will withdraw from this field in five years with an unspecified transfer of equivalent funds to the province. This withdrawal will affect our five-year financial planning almost immediately.

As the Prime Minister has stated, the federal position on tax sharing is not only anachronistic and rigid but also destructive of any workable and just federalism for Canada. At the November conference, Ontario asked some very basic questions concerning the future course of federal-provincial relations but Ottawa shrugged them off with platitudes instead of answers.

I enquired of Finance Minister Benson if the federal government believed in approaching our financial problem in a spirit of partnership. I did not think there was anything too much wrong in putting that type of a question to the federal Minister of Finance approaching these situations in a spirit of partnership, rather than as adversaries, if you like. He replied that "the need for federal-provincial discussion cannot override the basic responsibility of governments to Parliament and the legislatures". While this is clearly desirable, it is also true that Parliament is responsible to the same taxpayers as our provincial legislatures. Therefore, we are jointly responsible for the co-ordination and control of total taxation. Jointly responsible.

In that same vein, he replied to another question "that our first duty is to determine, control and administer economically all our own expenditure programmes". Surely, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, there is an inherent responsibility in the federal government to give equal rating to the broader and all-encompassing concept of total public service and total governmental expenditures.

The finance minister said the federal government does not wish to have a "tax jungle" or a "balkanized economy" and feels that these are not dangers that we face now. He admitted, however, that "the constitution was explicitly framed to vest in the federal government the powers and responsibilities necessary to create and maintain a unified economy".

To our concern that, for the third year in a row, the federal budget had been brought down just before our federal-provincial meetings, the federal spokesman replied: "We have had so many budgets in the past three years that it would not be possible to avoid sometimes acting before our meetings". I find it quite difficult, Mr. Speaker, to interpret three successive years of preempting the federal-provincial consultations as a "sometimes" happening!

I must concede, however, that the federal government gave some recognition to the provincial pressures, both in its recent budget and in the finance minister's statement to the conference. In both instances, there was the clear suggestion to Ontario and other provinces to follow the practice of two western provinces in imposing five additional points on the personal income tax. Mr. Benson even offered the co-operation of his government in undertaking changes in the collection agreement to be effective early in 1969.

While I welcome this gesture, I cannot help wondering, in view of the federal government's own tax increases, its persistence on the expensive medicare programme and its own budgetary problems, if the federal government demonstrates anything but a cavalier attitude toward the mounting burden on our taxpayers.

Let me point out here that the 9 percentage points represented by the social development tax, plus the suggestion of an additional 5 points by this government, would amount to a 14-point increase in personal income tax in Ontario for a single year. Is that what the leader of the Opposition is proposing? Well watch it now. Mr. Benson renewed the federal "17-point offer" as an alternative to the present shared-cost agreements in the fields of hospital insurance, Canada Assistance Plan and general health grants. This offer would give the provinces 17 additional points of the personal income tax, with a corresponding reduction in the federal share, plus an adjustment payment to ensure that the total fiscal transfer to the province is equal to the actual programme costs.

While Ontario intends to take another look at this proposal, since in the least it would provide administrative elbow room and perhaps enable more direct control over these costs, the obvious fact remains that this transfer will do nothing to improve the province's net financial capacity. It is merely an alternative arrangement for funds we already receive to meet our commitments in these fields.

Our calculations show that Ottawa's share of Ontario's costs in these three shared-cost programmes already amounts to the equivalent of 18 points of the personal income tax and will grow to 20 points and beyond in the 1970's. Although the federal offer includes payments above the 17-point transfer, no suggestion has been made yet as to how long the federal government will commit itself to this compensating payment.

Should Ottawa continue its present attitude of hasty retreat from shared-cost fields, Ontario could be left holding the differential bag within a few years. In the light of our own five-year projections, this province cannot afford to lose out at the federal bargaining table.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Would the Minister accept a short question?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, of course.

Mr. T. Reid: Am I correct in saying, Mr. Speaker, that Ontario now receives back roughly $28 out of every $100 collected by the federal government, and that the federal government has offered, in exchange for giving up the administration and participating financing of some of the shared cost programmes, to return back to us another $17, thus bringing the total that Ottawa would pay to Ontario to $45, or maybe $46, or $47, out of every $100 that they collect from us in personal income tax. Is this correct?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, precisely. That is precisely correct.

Mr. T. Reid: If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, should not the hon. Treasurer have a say in the income tax base?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, the Treasurer will have a say regarding the equivalent in terms of abatement of 45 per cent under those circumstances, of what the income tax base produces in Ontario.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That will be interesting when you raise your voice on that score.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very interesting.

Mr. MacDonald: It has been missing for a long time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But in terms of actual transfer of dollars, it does not mean anything more than the cost-sharing basis that we now enjoy. The cost-sharing basis, if I may go back, in an explanation to the hon. member for the three major programmes, is the equivalent presently, or was the equivalent at the outset, of 17 percentage points.

It is a straight transfer payment, but it turns out that at the outset of this cost-sharing proposal it was the equivalent of 17 percentage points. They now propose to turn back, or abate, 17 points plus an equalization payment. So it is in place of the other; there is no material gain in terms of dollars and cents.

In its brief to the conference, Ontario requested the federal government to turn over to us the fiscal equivalent of its budgeted Medicare cost for our own priority needs. Quebec reasoned for a share of the social development tax. Both requests were rejected by Mr. Benson, but with repeated assurances that this particular decision did not eliminate further discussions on tax sharing.

Mr. Benson's suggestions of additional consideration toward revenue division raised our hopes that Ottawa might be less rigid in its discussions later this week, when efforts will be made to reactivate the tax structure committee. However, there have been clear indications since then that the federal attitude has not changed and may even be more obstinate and isolationist than before.

Summing up this review of federal-provincial financial arrangements, we must continue to hope, despite the odds, that the coming conference will show some progress towards resolving federal-provincial problems and permitting the provinces some flexibility in planning their future financing.

I was pleased, Mr. Speaker, to note that the leader of the Opposition, in his contribution to this debate, has decided in a somewhat gingerly way that Ottawa should give more consideration to the Ontario position on tax sharing. He suggests that the federal government might have provided Ontario with a share of the two per cent social development tax.

I trust, however, that I am quoting the most recent Liberal position on tax sharing. I must confess that I have had great difficulty keeping up with the manoeuvres of the nimble leader of the Opposition on this issue.

I recall that at various times he had advised the government (a) to negotiate vigorously for tax room; (b) to accept the Ottawa position and raise our own taxes; (c) to insist at Ottawa that "we must have cash in the bank"; and (d) to temper our demands.

The press reports I have received on the Opposition leader's position have confused me even more, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal Party, in its dissenting comment on the White Report, disagreed emphatically with the position that the federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements afford much further potential. And I recall the prediction of the hon. member for Brant that we would be blaming Ottawa for the tax increases that he predicted we would impose during this fall session.

Then, on October 23, when he announced his plans for a meeting of the federal and provincial Liberal caucuses, I was encouraged by his determination to convince his federal colleagues of the need for closer fiscal co-operation between our two governments.

Indeed, I did raise my eyebrows, as the report indicated we on this side of the House might do, at his suggestion that Ottawa might be trying to make political capital at the expense of the people of Ontario.

On November 4, in his press release issued during our conference, he accused Ontario of being "too rigid" in our position. I believe he used the words "immoderate confrontation" and "rigid formulas" in that release.

This is not very consistent, Mr. Speaker, when we go back, and I repeat he has advised the government to negotiate vigorously for more tax room, and then he follows along and recommends acceptance of the Ottawa position to raise our own taxes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): But you are still not prepared to take that 17 per cent offer.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Last March, however, and this is recorded on page 1190 of Hansard of the last session, he advised this government to go to Ottawa with "determination and resolve", to "exert initiatives". He talked about a "final confrontation" on fiscal matters and stated that we must not accept a "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude or a "non-negotiable position" on Ottawa's part. We recently heard him say we must not go to Ottawa cap-in-hand. That suggests to me a very nimble mind on these matters, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot accept the hon. leader's dismay over the suggestion that Ontario might introduce fiscal matters into the constitutional conference this month. The Opposition leader, on November 25, indicated that it was "quite unconscionable" to bring fiscal considerations into next week's talks.

But I recall being very interested in hearing the Prime Minister of Canada on television when he announced the cancellation of the constitutional conference, saying you could not effectively have a constitutional conference and ignore fiscal matters.

Mr. Nixon: That is why he had them both planned for this week.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well very well, but you have—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if you will permit me to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, in the form of a question, that the Treasurer would agree with me that both he and his seat mate, the Premier, threatened the government of Canada. In the first case that they would keep Air Canada planes out of Toronto with high fuel taxes on his part, and the Premier was saying that he would opt out—he did not like that phrase—but essentially that is what he was prepared to do, of constitutional discussion unless there was some give on the fiscal position.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member has stated out of his own mouth what I have already said, at that point in time he said it was quite unconscionable, quite unconscionable to do that.

His federal Prime Minister does not think so.

Mr. MacDonald: He thinks the same thing.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He thinks that the division of powers of fiscal responsibility are very closely related, Mr. Speaker.

But, on March 25, exactly eight months earlier, the nimble member for Brant stated in the strongest terms that “we cannot afford to have conferences which exclude these (fiscal) matters.” He urged the Prime Minister to call a special conference and demand the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada, to discuss tax-sharing. I would simply ask the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, just whose side is he on?

I want to return for a moment to the suggestion that our position at the recent conference was “too rigid”, to quote the Opposition leader again. Mr. Speaker, I say to you and to the House, is Ontario being “too rigid” in requesting meaningful discussions on inter-government taxation and finance? Is an appeal to establish machinery for joint priority setting an “immoderate confrontation”? What “rigid formulas” are involved in the request for joint fiscal planning?

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I found it extremely difficult to take the hon. member’s advice into consideration during our discussion at Ottawa. I decided, sir, to stick to the consistent position our government has taken for the past decade: that we want to sit down at the table and work out our priorities and discuss an equitable revenue and responsibility distribution with our federal partners in the interest of a viable federalism, and our position has never changed. That is the sum and substance of our fiscal stance, Mr. Speaker.

I notice, too, that the leader of the Opposition indicates that Ontario is “neglecting possible income sources” by postponing our participation in Medicare. I can only assume,

Mr. Speaker, that he refers to his interesting calculations earlier this year when he suggested that Ontario could make what might be called a “profit” out of Medicare. I believe his proposal—and if I am wrong I will stand corrected—was to reduce our OMSIP premiums by less than the amount of the federal contribution in order to extract from our people more money than the programme would cost.

I suppose that is consistent with the Liberal approach to taxation and government financing. At the federal level that party has unilaterally imposed a universal compulsory programme that not only precludes some of today’s priorities and robs the province of valuable tax room but also has alarming prospects of cost growth for the future; a programme that many provinces feel they cannot afford; a programme that many of the prominent financial leaders of this nation, and the chamber of commerce, have vigorously opposed in fear of the dire economic consequences for Canada. Now, we have the provincial leader of that same party not only urging us to participate in this programme but to do so in such a way that we will get extra funds for our own coffers.

He encourages us, Mr. Speaker, to tax under the table; he advises us to use trickery to get more funds; he proposes that we should compete and connive against Ottawa to achieve selfish ends.

This is not the way this government views fiscal federalism, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker. We will not endorse a costly programme because we see in it underhanded gains for ourselves. We will not treat Ontario citizens in that shabby fashion.

It may be, Mr. Speaker, that we are forced into Medicare and it may be that we are compelled to make the best arrangements possible. But we will do so only after having made every effort to secure reconsideration, to develop a less costly programme, to reduce the mounting financial pressures that the current programme will encourage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the remarks of the leader of the Opposition, may I just say that his agents in Ottawa are not as observant as he may believe. You may recall that he made reference to “the large black cars with flags flying” which, he said, transported our delegation around the nation’s capital at the November conference. I believe the colour actually was red, Mr. Speaker, and the only flags I saw were those attached to the meters inside the vehicles we used, when we used them. I found it rather pleasant,

Mr. Speaker, to walk the five blocks or so from our hotel to the meeting hall, as did the rest of our delegation. He walked with me, morning and night.

Turning now to the remarks of the member for York South, I am constrained to say that I agree with much of his presentation in the fiscal sphere. In many respects, Mr. Speaker, our views are not very far apart and I welcome his support, however qualified, for our Ontario position.

However, Mr. Speaker, while I was reviewing each of his attractive and high-minded proposals for tax reform, carefully spelled out in sacrosanct style, I was surprised that no dollar figures were attached to the changes he advocates. To assist my friend from York South I am going to give you some figures here. I have told you I do not mind the philosophy and principles of what you have said, but you do not mind me quarreling with your figures a little bit, do you? Well, your lack of figures then. You see, Mr. Speaker, I am not very hard to get along with. Sometimes.

Mr. MacDonald: You are almost out of character.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It may not last, you never can tell.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): He is always mellow when he talks about money.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: So to assist my friend from York South, I prepared some rough calculations of my own, based on certain assumptions of course. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that he proposed reforms of the progressive tax fields, and an assortment of reductions in what are generally considered to be regressive revenue sources.

Mr. MacDonald: So far so good.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now let me deal with revenue declines involved in his tax reduction proposal. One suggestion was to lower the highway taxes to between 67 and 75 per cent of traffic costs. Let us estimate it then on a basis of the higher of those two figures, the reduction of 25 per cent in gas and motor fuels tax and transport revenues, and you can chalk up $125 million.

Mr. MacDonald: At least you have equity—

The scope for taxes on capital gains and land speculation is not as large as commonly assumed. Our best estimate, based on the research of Carter and the experience in the United States, is well under $100 million for Ontario and this would not be realized for at least five years after implementation. According to Carter, real estate gains are only a minor part of total capital gain.

Recognizing again that these are rough calculations in the extreme, Mr. Speaker, I nevertheless suggest that they show the NDP proposals would result in a tremendous increase in income taxes, even with whatever revenue might be secured from capital gains and land speculation levies. The total requirement would be close to double the present return. This, of course, does not take into consideration the rising expenditures which must be covered in coming years.

I provide this illustration to demonstrate that tax reform in itself is relatively easy to propose in terms of adjusting the relative weights of various tax fields. However, when one considers the pressures for additional revenues in coming years it becomes increasingly difficult to provide some of the meaningful relief to low-income families that we would all like to see.

The options open to Ontario are these: Failing any significant financial gains at the federal-provincial meetings next week, Ontario will be forced to establish an independent course in taxation and financing. Essentially, two options are open: 1. To continue to develop our priority government services in Ontario and push on with essential reforms; 2. To accept Ottawa's "branch plant" role for the provinces and cut back the level of our services and the range of our reforms.

The first option carries with it some hard decisions. We must be prepared to consider substantial increases in our income tax rates and to derive more sales tax revenues, along with continued concentration on efficiencies and economies. Much higher revenues from the progressive tax fields will be necessary to reform and integrate provincial-municipal tax and expenditure systems toward greater equity and efficiency.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has pointed out, it may be necessary for Ontario to establish our own income tax system. We have taken a close look at this option and find that it offers some distinct benefits to the province and our people, as well as to the efficient conduct of our financial affairs and priority setting, although we are also aware of the problems.

The disadvantages include many of the concerns we have expressed to the federal government, increasingly over the past two years, in our appeals for redistribution of tax revenues. A separate Ontario income tax would fragment the Canadian taxation system, lean toward economic balkanization, tend to increase the level of taxation across Canada and encourage intergovernmental competition and conflict in taxation.

Two independent income tax systems in Ontario would lessen the prospects for fiscal policy co-ordination and comprehensive tax reform. They could frustrate, through counteracting changes in rate or structure, both federal and provincial measures to modify or stimulate economic trends.

To these concerns, we must add the costs of bureaucracy and the much greater expenditure and inconvenience of compliance by the private sector.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, other jurisdictions, including our sister province of Quebec and many states in the U.S.A. operate income tax systems independently of the federal authority. For Ontario, this would offer great scope and flexibility in both reforming our tax system and in securing additional revenue.

Ontario would secure control over the provincial tax base, over the income-class structure. Under the existing collection agreement, we are denied any opportunity to design and use the income tax to meet our own objectives.

Ontario could design its own system to vary the overall progressivity of the provincial-municipal tax system per se, by direct integration of property, retail sales and income taxes. Property tax relief, for example, could be handled much more efficiently through exemptions from the income tax base. Allowances for home mortgage payments could be provided to lower-income families. The regressivity of the federal social development tax, or any other undesirable aspect of federal taxation, could be offset directly by changes in our rates. Under our own income tax system, Ontario could develop new and related tax fields involving capital gains and gifts.

Moreover, the reorganization and integration of our provincial-municipal tax system, with its resulting flexibility, offers immense fiscal and economic possibilities for Ontario. The opportunities to stimulate economic development would be enhanced greatly.

Our studies indicate that the option of establishing our own income tax system must be taken seriously.

In areas where tax reform is not influenced directly by federal considerations, Ontario is moving ahead rapidly. Over the past year we have established the municipal tax reduction programme, now providing effective and welcome relief to homeowners and tenants; taken over the costs of administration of justice and reorganized our fiscal and policy-making machinery. The province is overseeing the reorganization of the structure and financing of our school boards under the programme introduced this spring by the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). The steps toward reorganization of our municipal structure on a regional basis were placed before this House last week by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough). The government has every reason to believe that a great deal of co-operation and understanding will be forthcoming from local authorities in these dramatic and essential reforms.

We are making significant progress in expenditure control and priority setting within the provincial sphere. I point to the accelerated application of programme budgeting, the early introduction of expenditure guidelines to our departments for the 1969-1970 Budget, the developments in management science, the utilization of technical advances. These intensive economy measures will help to reduce the huge financial gap we face for our own budget purposes.

Another vital reform, which has been under intensive study by The Department of Treasury and Economics and The Department of Municipal Affairs, will be complete property reassessment. Measures will be introduced during this session aimed at eliminating the present inequities and anomalies in the property tax base and enabling the new regional governments to develop from a sound and rational fiscal footing.

Finally, with the steps the Prime Minister indicated to you in his speech on November 28 to this House, we are preparing for major tax structure reform. Our specific objective will be to reduce the regressiveness of our integrated provincial-municipal system to the greatest extent possible. We are not convinced, as our federal counterparts appear to be, that our wealthy people are overtaxed. We are convinced that the burden of taxation must be lifted from those families with low incomes, especially those on fixed incomes which have shrunk from inflation.

Our proposals for reform, however, must be delayed until we learn the results of this week's negotiations on tax sharing. In addition, we are very much aware of the federal plans to proceed next year with taxation reforms, including changes in the income tax base. While Ontario is anxious to get on with its own programme, common sense suggests that consideration must be given to the integration of reforms at both levels in deference to the effect on our mutual taxpayers.

Our conclusion, Mr. Speaker, is that the essential interconnections of all these considerations must be brought together in the 1969 Budget, which will highlight their total financial implications. The Budget, with a further refinement of background and explanatory papers, will show how the government plans to meet the financial challenge. As well, the 1969 Budget will set out certain options and underlying plans for long-run structure reforms in our taxation system.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa has a point of order, he states.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a question was asked while I was speaking: did I realize that Mr. Dickie was participating in the negotiations with the Peterborough Examiner and the Newspaper Guild, and I just wanted to point out that in this evening's paper the headline is "Examiner Strike Talks Have Broken Off", so that—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Pilkey: Well I am a little ahead of them; they could have read this earlier tonight themselves.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. member has raised his point of order.

The hon. member for York Centre has the floor.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this Throne Speech Debate and at this time to say that in this first year I have had in the House, it has been a pleasure to work under the leadership and the dignity you have given as Mr. Speaker. Although at times I, with others, have been a little upset with decisions, I felt that you had a delicate balance to maintain and you have done so, making a considerable addition to the respect that this House has earned in this province.

Insofar as the chairman of the committee of the whole House is concerned I could not imagine a man who has dealt with his responsibilities in a fairer manner. Once I challenged him, but I found afterwards that my own facts, which I was quite sure were correct, were not correct and I found that on the whole he has always been as fair as one could imagine.

Mr. Speaker, I was quite interested to listen to the hon. Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) talk about his position in Ottawa. I felt that he gave the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) a lesson in arithmetic but he seemed to be very worried about the responsible position being taken by our own leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon).

One thing that we must remember in this government and in this House is that the proper use and management of what we have in the way of resources—in the form of taxpayers' money and in the borrowing of money—is absolutely of prime importance. As the leader of the Opposition has maintained time and time again, Mr. Speaker, this is where our efforts must be concentrated. I noticed that he has just told us about the 1969 budget and it will be coming before us later in this session. I am wondering whether we are going to see just the usual one year in advance or are we going to start to see five-year budgets? Are we going to see management that is looking ahead beyond its nose and showing us, as responsible representatives of this province, just where they forecast the province's needs are? Are these budgets going to be based upon detailed five-year budgets within each department, or are we still going to have to just muddle from year to year as we have in the past?

This is the type of management, the type of information that needs to be put before this Legislature and I hope that the hon. Treasurer, when he presents his Budget, will give us much more to work on than we have had in the past, to see where we are going.

To answer the member's interjection about the past policy of muddling, we do not have many companies that are in a monopolistic position, as is the government in Ontario, which has no shareholders to really answer to.

The taxpayers do not understand the petty squabbles between Ottawa and ourselves. They look for responsibility, for co-operative co-ordination of the tax base, whether it be the sales tax, estate tax or income tax. The majority of the people look to Ottawa for strong central government. Ontario has got to do the best possible job in managing the resources available to it, which are very considerable.

I was also very interested in the remarks made about unions and the problems they face in this province. Free enterprise works best when strong, well-managed companies are in free and open competition with each other, but free enterprise also works best when its labour force is represented by strong, responsible unions.

A negative approach on the part of management to unions is shortsighted. I was very impressed a few weeks ago when Mr. William Mahoney, of the Steelworkers, commented that one of the greatest needs we have toward better industrial relations, labour relations, is a common research base adopted by management and labour, so at least when they get into negotiations they are working from a common base of facts. It certainly is something that I hope will come into force in the future where management does take a proper and a positive approach to unions. It is sort of like that little brother situation—it is awful with them and it is worse without them. Although as a management representative in the past I found them aggravating and annoying, there have been occasions in one company where the Teamsters showed up weaknesses in our own management, where we were abrogating a responsibility, by means of the type of agreement we were trying to bring into effect. We were really abrogating our own responsibilities and when we adopted their suggestions we found they worked out far better.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Their cash flow was probably bigger than yours.

Mr. Deacon: And in the case of a CIO local, in another union situation when the company was faced with great difficulties, on the whole, the textile industry union took a very responsible approach in recognizing the fact that agreements that were too tough and too onerous could jeopardize the safety of the jobs of those they were representing.

Mr. Peacock: That is why the wages are substandard.

Mr. Deacon: It is a matter of whether there be jobs at all in industry, and in the case of textile unions and of companies, there are times when, with a profit sharing basis, the workers have very good rewards for their work. We hope that by a responsible approach in co-operation between unions and management they will find new techniques which will keep them competitive with textile companies around the world and still be able to pay good and sufficient wages for those that are employed by them.

Mr. Speaker, last summer I was privileged to be a member of the select committee on taxation and I give credit to the tremendous skill and endurance shown by the chairman of that committee, the hon. Minister of Revenue (Mr. White).

There have been times in the past, sir, looking at him and listening to him as he sits in his seat and ejaculates in such a strange manner that I did not really appreciate the talents this man has. I think his work this summer was such that it earned the respect and admiration of all of us who were members of that committee and perhaps we will hear less of these ejaculations that always detract from his status among us.

One of the things that really came home to those of us listening to the many delegations and reading many briefs that came before us, is that we must, as I have mentioned before, make better use of the available resources before us. One of the resources available to us is borrowing. In this day of high inflation, we must recognize the fact that the person who is lending money sees the value of his dollar decline to the extent of 4.5 per cent per annum and, therefore, I, as an investment adviser, and others in that role in the past, have been very loath to recommend that people buy bonds of a government or a corporation or whatever was the borrowing institution, or even mortgages, because at the end of the time when that debt was to be repaid, the dollars that would be repaid would be worth considerably less than the dollars they loaned to that borrowing company.

And yet this province has to have a place from where it can borrow $250 million to $300 million each year to meet the deficit that the Treasurer has outlined to us.

In addition to that, the province has guaranteed each year an additional $300 million or more on behalf of money borrowed by the Ontario Hydro. This means a heavy borrowing load of some $600 million that the market foresees the province carrying out in a single year.

Now I point out that in the state of New York they only have to borrow funds for the needs of the state itself. They do not have to borrow funds or guarantee funds borrowed by the public utilities. In Ontario, we have a public utility in the form of Ontario Hydro that is every bit as highly regarded as an operating institution, and as a well-managed institution, as Consolidated Edison, and yet, the province continues to guarantee the debt that is borrowed by Ontario Hydro.

This means that instead of our going to the market place and saying, "Our borrowing needs this year will be $250 to $300 million," we have to say our borrowing needs and the needs of those institutions that we guarantee are going to be $600 million and this detracts from the attractiveness of the bonds we try to sell.

It is estimated that the cost of our borrowing, as a result, is perhaps a quarter of one per cent higher than it otherwise would be.

I, therefore, suggest and I think we should give consideration in this Legislature to the province changing the form of borrowing done by Ontario Hydro. Ontario Hydro should be able to go to the market with a piece of paper that is as attractive as that of, say, a private company in the States, such as Consolidated Edison.

Over a period of some months, I am sure that the Provincial Treasurer and his assistants could work out a scheme whereby Ontario Hydro could borrow its money without a provincial guarantee, because it is a good profitable operating utility; work out a scheme where it could borrow on the market without that provincial guarantee, and in due course alleviate that burden which is now being carried by the province.

I am told by executives in a couple of the major institutions that it perhaps would cost Ontario Hydro one-quarter of one per cent more than it now is costing them. But we must remember that the province would probably get a similar benefit and lower borrowing rates if it had a relief from that extra burden it is now carrying.

So there is no reason for us, now that Ontario Hydro is a good strong institution, a good, well recognized borrower in the market, to continue this present subsidy as if it were a brand new operation. We need to preserve our provincial guarantees for enterprises that are not, themselves, self-supporting but might be in the future, such as the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

If we were to get Ontario Water Resources Commission moving, and it might require up to $80 to $100 million a year, the provincial guarantee could be much more effectively used there and could produce results of much greater benefit to the taxpayers of this province, and I will go into that later on.

Now this other resource is the tax dollar, the money we get from taxing our people who are now complaining, realizing that whatever they get from government they are paying for. What is bothering them really is the waste and delay and the bureaucratic mistakes that they see in our government. We must remember that as a province our role is one of co-ordination and broad planning, not of making decisions in detail down in local areas. We must delegate responsibilities; give leadership so that our local government becomes as efficient as possible. We need to take a professional approach to our provincial planning, as I mentioned before, by five-year planning in provincial government and we should insist on similar planning by local governments. This is the best way for people to foresee and to predict what is likely to happen to them. It is remarkable to see how, after you do a bit of this five-year planning, you become quite expert at it and you are able to cope with problems that otherwise you are dealing with on a hasty basis and, usually, a very costly basis.

Now the next point I wanted to bring in, is the principle of responsible and local government. I am proposing the franchise principle, as I have mentioned before, not the subsidiary principle that we still are doing in our local government operations.

Too many decisions are being made at Queen's Park remote from where the actual problems are occurring and, as a result, great mistakes are being made. For example, last year we saw a situation with The Department of Health where they, in effect, bribed the local counties to join together into health districts in order to get a 75 per cent grant instead of 50 per cent. Now it did not make any difference to The Department of Health that The Department of Education was co-ordinating the township school boards into county boards and there was just going to be greater confusion in the province by having health districts with different boundaries. They still went ahead with this blind and very costly approach of inducing districts being made up with no proper co-ordination with The Department of Education and The Department of Municipal Affairs.

This is what really annoys the local taxpayers. By working along the lines as recommended by the select committee for the development of regional government, most of whose recommendations the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) appears to have adopted, we would soon co-ordinate these various departmental overlaps, get them where we do have an understandable system of government, co-ordinated on a provincial level as well as the local level.

One of the greatest ways we could improve the responsibility and capability of local government, would be by adopting a recommendation made by the select committee that comparable operating statistics be published by The Department of Municipal Affairs—sometime beginning in March when they have had the year end figures, and I mean comparable operating statistics—for example, coming out one week on the operation of all police departments in the province of Ontario; putting into effect comparison of police departments where they are operating in large municipalities, with where the police departments are operating in smaller municipalities, but doing it on a basis where the taxpayers can see just how efficiently their local police department is being operated. There are many techniques for providing these statistics on a properly comparable basis.

You would then certainly focus attention on the part of the local people, on the part of the local councils, and the local administrators as to how well they are being managed and managing.

Similar types of comparison could be published the next week comparing the assessment departments of municipalities across the province; another week on road departments; and in this way, the taxpayers, the council members, the administrators would really see who was doing a good job and who was not. This is the way to encourage responsibility in local government. And local government is where we should place the power and responsibility—where the action really is.

The next area that I wish to talk about is that of housing. Housing is an area that has been, I think, greatly misunderstood in this province. The major problem in housing, in my view, is caused by land speculation and the cause of land speculation is the policies of this government. If this government would concentrate on bringing the supply of building lots in excess of demand, we would immediately eliminate the basic cause of speculation. We are providing the conditions that are ideal for a speculator to operate in; a controlled supply of building lots which is less than the demand.

It results in an automatic, guaranteed spiral in price. And as a result, we have seen the land prices in the Toronto area rise faster than anywhere else on the continent of North America. It is not the fault of the land speculator, it is not the fault of the people who want housing and need housing, it is the fault of this government.

This government owns many hundreds of acres of land in Malvern and what happened over the 15 or 16 years while it was sitting there idle? Not a thing happened because the local municipality could not put in services, it did not want it, and the excuse we received here in this House last year was that it was premature at the time it was bought by the provincial government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister got regular publicity out of it.

Mr. Deacon: And now there has been a study going on for some time as to the feasibility of proceeding with this. Let the house buyer decide when a development is premature; they will decide whether they are going to buy or not, but let those who want to develop it get ahead with the job. Provide them with the services, make it possible for municipalities to approve their plans, reasonable plans, for development without having another Pickering on our hands—and this is a tragedy itself.

Pickering was a municipality that approved a housing subdivision in a very extensive way, providing lots for builders to build homes in which our people could be housed. As a result of taking this very commendable approach, it found itself in financial difficulties. The same thing happened to Scarborough ten years before. Scarborough was rescued by Metro when the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto was formed and provided services, gave it the balanced base of assessment which enabled it to provide the services needed for those homes that were built there.

And what happened? In ten years' time industry had flowed into Scarborough to such an extent that it too had a balanced basis of assessment. Give workers the homes and industry will follow. But it will not go in there in the first year or the second year; it takes time to bring in that balance of assessment. This is the type of assistance and responsibility that the province should be assuming, not leaving it to the local municipalities.

And I was quite disappointed in listening to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, indicating that servicing and this very important area of balanced assessment were not going to be dealt with as a provincial responsibility in this new concept of regional government.

Mr. Speaker, do you wish me to proceed?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): How long does the hon. member expect to be?

Mr. Deacon: About another half hour.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, we might try it for a little while.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Even without heckling?

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand an advertisement of the water resources commission, of which they sent copies to us in case we had not seen it, showing what the water resources commission is doing to try to eliminate pollution in this province. It is quite interesting to note that this deals with local plans, small situations, all of which are important, but it indicates the role that the Ontario Water Resources Commission has confined itself to. The water resources commission has failed to move into the area of providing a network of water supplies, pipelines, and sewage treatment plants that are not confined to municipal boundaries but are only set out on the basis of what the logical area needs will be.

Imagine if our Ontario Hydro had built up its system by going to each municipality and saying, "We will not build a new power station until you agree to sign up for so many kilowatts of electricity and thus assure us of a revenue sufficient to pay for the debt on this new power station." What if our whole development of Hydro had waited and had been based upon each municipality in effect providing a guarantee for every plant that Ontario Hydro built? It would never have gone ahead. And yet this is the basis on which this province has permitted and actually forced the Ontario Water Resources Commission to proceed. It has not given them the necessary financing base or backing. It has not given them the responsibility for going forward and estimating what the market needs will be in certain areas for sewage and water plants, and then given them the power to put the plants in and sell their services on a basis which, although in the beginning would result in losses, in the long term would provide sufficient revenue to meet the obligations incurred, in the same way as Ontario Hydro has done.

Why has this Ontario Water Resources Commission not been placed in a position and given the responsibility by this province to open up tens of thousands of acres of land and provide services so that when people assemble land or even the province assembles land, we know that the services will be there to service that land and not waste 15 or 16 years as in the case of Malvern before any services even start?

Why should we have to wait 15 years for a pipeline to be build from Lake Huron to London while all the municipalities work out their various agreements? Why do we have to wait years for an agreement to be worked out for a sewage line to Brampton to serve the area there?

It is because this province is continuing to restrict the Ontario Water Resources Commission to making back-to-back contracts before it can proceed with a plan. It should just be necessary for the Ontario Water Resources Commission to have a market study that shows the demand, the needs and the requirements for a plant and then proceed on its own, knowing that in due course the demand for the water and for the sewage treatment services will warrant the expenditure of the project, if undertaken.

I cannot overemphasize this matter of the role of the Ontario Water Resources Commission because, as I mentioned on Friday, the whole MTARTS study, that stands for Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study, was not a transportation study. GOAL's Plan Three was rejected because the development of the area would necessitate plants not located on the lake.

And to think our whole development of this province would be restricted by that basis of thinking shows the 19th century approach being taken by the water resources commission, or whoever is directing them in the government. And this has been a very difficult thing to understand, just who is giving them advice in the government.

For example, last spring, the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) announced a new plant was being approved for the region of Richvale, just north of Thornhill, which was to serve a hospital under construction, a new school under construction, and also some 400 acres of land, developers of which were represented by Mr. Hollis Beckett.

It was specifically stated that no additional land would be served by that plant, a package plant going in on a short-term basis to look after a developer and a couple of local needs. But what is the situation up in that area? We have a plant designed for three times its present capacity located on John Street within the township of Markham.

Because the agreement involves just the township of Markham, only development within that township can feed into that plant, not development on the other side of Yonge Street in Vaughan township. This is because of the way the Ontario Water Resources Commission set up the plant and took over the operation in that area, based on deals within municipal boundaries. And yet the natural drainage area for that whole region up to Richmond Hill and north, should be into that plant located on John Street.

The fear of the Ontario Water Resources Commission is that the effluent of greatly enlarged plants would be far too great for the capacity of the Don River at that point. But, after all, the effluent in those plants actually is quite pure from a human point of view although it is the nitrates and other oxygen-demanding impurities that are still within it which are tough on fish and actually will kill plant underwater life as well as fish.

The actual plan that the water resources commission could adopt in a situation like that, rather than a huge trunk system going across the whole of Metro, would be to build a high pressure pipeline to carry the effluent to the lake or some plant located on the lake. But for us to base our provincial development, Mr. Speaker, only on lake-centred sewage treatment is ridiculous and costly.

As I mentioned before, what about our great inland cities? Are they going to be restricted in their development by this approach? We have seen cities—we know of a city in the United States which actually recycles almost all of the water it uses. The water from the sewage plant actually is drunk again in time, though the citizens may not realize just how soon it does get back into their system. But because of the ability to control or chlorinate the impurities, the bacteria impurities, it is possible for the effluent to be used safely by humans. With proper settling ponds and aeration of effluent it can be restored to the point where fish life can survive quite well and certainly, within five years, it is quite likely developments will occur which will eliminate this present difficult problem of sewage treatment plants, namely, the nitrates and sulphates.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Careful what you are drinking now.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In view of the fact that I now understand there are a number of committee meetings in the morning, perhaps the hon. member would care to move the adjournment of the debate and continue tomorrow.

Mr. Deacon moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:00 o'clock, p.m.

APPENDIX A

Revenue decline	Million
1. Lower the "highway taxes" to between 67 and 75 per cent of traffic costs—estimate reduction of 25 per cent in gas and motor fuels tax, transport revenues .....	$125
2. Decrease reliance on the sales tax and exempt additional necessities— Sales tax @ 4 per cent, loss of $95 million Reduce 5 per cent for exemptions, $25 million .....	$120
3. Change flat-rate premiums for health and hospital insurance to a progressive rate system—calculate 7,200,000 people at $1 per month reduction in combined premium	$ 86
TOTAL DECLINE IN REVENUE	$331

I suggest, and I repeat Mr. Speaker, these figures are rather on the conservative side, it would likely be more.

Higher costs

4. Assume larger proportion of current municipal costs (since Smith/White proposals, estimated at $400 million, are only "token" relief, according to the NDP leader, increase by 50 per cent) .....	$600
TOTAL ESTIMATED COST OF TAX SHIFT PROPOSED BY NDP	$931

Revenue replacement

5. Higher assessments on mining and forest industries—assume double the present return, an increase of .....	$ 18
6. Balance to be raised out of higher rates and modifications to the corporation and personal income taxes, incorporating capital gains and land speculation .....	$913

Present returns (estimated 68-69)

Personal income tax .....	$650
Corporation income tax .....	$315

---

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon our guests in both galleries are students from Beamsville high school in Beamsville.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent settlements or releases from being entered into by accident victims in haste or while in the distress of recent injury.

CONTROL OF FUMES FROM SMELTERS

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Provide for the Control of Fumes from Smelters.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to require every smelter which smelts or roasts nickel, copper or iron ore to adopt and carry out a plan that comprises the best practical means for controlling or preventing the discharge of noxious or offensive gases or fumes; or, where discharged, to render them harmless or inoffensive. Application for approval of a plan is made to the Ontario Municipal Board, notice thereof being given to all interested government departments and municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Attorney General has a statement?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I believe that it may be helpful to the hon. members if I advised them of the opinion which I have today given to the chairman of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, respecting the Lake Shore Raceway.

As the hon. members are already aware, this particular project has been the subject of some controversy in Metropolitan Toronto and certain applications have been made to the Minister of Highways and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and these gentlemen have sought my opinion in the matter.

For this reason, we did consider it advisable that on behalf of the government I advise the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto of our position.

The submission has been made to the government that the action which has been taken by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto in closing the Lake Shore Boulevard requires the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council or a Minister of the Crown.

I have studied this matter in substantial detail and, in arriving at my opinion, I have reviewed all the relevant statutes and other laws of the province insofar as they relate to highways and also to the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition.

It is my opinion that neither the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, nor the approval of a Minister of the Crown, is required by the laws of this province for the lawful enactment of the bylaw relative to the closing of Lake Shore Boulevard.

I have today written to the chairman of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto advising him of my opinion.

The hon. members are, in all likelihood, familiar with the project, Mr. Speaker, but I do wish to say that it is not the intention of this government to interfere in any way with the decision of the local municipality respecting the Lake Shore Raceway. This is a matter which is particularly associated with the ratepayers in the municipality and the municipal councillors who so adequately represent them.

In the circumstances, it is entirely appropriate that the municipality should have every right to resolve the question in a manner best suited to meet the needs of the people who are represented by the municipal council.

I have already indicated the nature of my legal opinion but I do feel that it is desirable that we recognize the local autonomy of the municipality in dealing with a matter of this kind.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the hon. Attorney General would permit a question? The question is this—if a highway is to be closed in any municipality that is on a registered plan, which the Lake Shore Boulevard is, does it not require, in his view, the approval of the Cabinet by means of an Order-in-Council?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I reviewed the section of the Act to which the hon. member, without mentioning it, is making reference and reviewed it very carefully, along with many other sections in the laws of this province, and I assure him that I am confident that the portion of Lake Shore Boulevard which is being closed is not affected by the statute which speaks of a highway on a subdivision plan.

Mr. Trotter: One more short question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand then—?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The rules for—

Mr. Trotter: It is for clarification!

Mr. Speaker: Right. If the hon. member makes clear that it is for clarification and not for debate.

Mr. Trotter: So many Acts are involved. Am I to understand Mr. Speaker, that Metropolitan Toronto, at no future date in so far as the raceway is concerned, will require any type of approval of any kind from the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member expects me to make a speculative situation and say that no matter what the circumstances might be at some future time—

Mr. Trotter: How do they stand now?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have dealt with the question which asked for an opinion of my colleagues the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) and the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) in the situation which confronts us today, and even the courts do not speculate on future situations. I do not think I can make a blanket statement that never at any time would the situation not arise where there would not be possibly some responsibility or involvement, but in the situation as it is here, my opinion is that there is no responsibility on the government and no approval is necessary from the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council or from a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question for clarification?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There are two points:

Will the Minister assure me he is clear in his mind in making his statement that he is aware that local municipalities did not approve it, but that this was foisted upon the local municipalities by Metro council?

Secondly, will the Minister clear it for me because I am rather hazy here, but do I take from the Minister's statement that a municipality, instead of closing a road and then offering it to budding owners as they are required, can now close the road and lease that roadway to other than the budding owner in perpetuity, less one day?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What I said was that the action taken by the council of the municipality requires no approval from the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council or any Minister of the Crown.

Mr. Ben: But please answer the question that is stuck in my mind unanswered by the Minister's statement—can you now lease land in perpetuity less one day?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am dealing with the situation which we have before us, the question on which I was asked for an opinion by the chairman of metropolitan council. I have given him that opinion; I have acquainted the House with the fact of that opinion and the content. I am not going to speculate on future situations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question of clarification?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I see in the second paragraph here that the Attorney General has outlined the problem of whether or not the Lake Shore Boulevard can be closed and he has given his opinion that it could be closed without approval of this government.

For clarification, sir, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) said in this House that racing could not be allowed on such a road. Has the Attorney General consulted with the Minister of Transport as to this other very important point? We agree that the Attorney General's opinion is that it can be closed, but once it is closed, can they legally race on it as the Minister of Transport said they could not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I really think I should put an end to these questions but I would be glad to say this: In my opinion, this point was fully covered. There was consultation with the Minister of Transport. Once the particular portion of Lake Shore Boulevard is closed it no longer is a highway and the prohibitions against speeds and racing do not have effect. That is spelled out, very fully and specifically in the opinion which I gave to Chairman Allen.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has a statement.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): During the sittings last week this House was subjected to a long, rambling, disjointed, confused, wordy dissertation on some departments of government by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman). The Department of Health was given a generous share of his attention and, of course, since he has been named health critic for his group, this was to be expected. I have no intention of answering his criticisms. Were they worthy of attention I would direct that to them at the proper time and in the usually accepted way, via the Throne Debate.

He did, however, make several statements which cannot be let pass, since they were directed against staff members who cannot defend themselves in any way. They feel, and I agree, that the statements of this member have impugned the morals, the integrity, the professional ability and the reputation of every staff member in the hospitals under the direction of The Department of Health. Without doubt, the statements cast a very dark shadow over the reputation of every female student nurse, every attendant and every physician at Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. The member's remarks about those staff members were so vicious, vile and malignant as to cause one to wonder why even this member made them without first seeking to determine if there might be just a shred of fact to substantiate them.

I have already had calls and visits from parents of some of our student nurses, all much concerned and distraught, seeking proof of those statements. And I cannot give them any proof for such does not exist.

If it did exist, I assure you and through you, the people of Ontario, that it would be neither ignored nor tolerated; we would move speedily and vigorously to clear it up and those responsible would surely be dismissed.

Indeed, if such charges came from any source other than the member for High Park, I would already have set in motion a most searching inquiry. Since, however, it came from this member who has already firmly established his own unique creditability gap in his usual sweeping, confused, vituperative manner—

Mr. Shulman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, it—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for High Park has a point of privilege or order.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is a Minister of this House allowed to rise and make a statement and then, in that statement—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Minister does not know the rules.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, is a Minister of this House allowed to rise and make a statement other than on factual matters?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would like to hear what the member is saying and I cannot. Would he please either start again or go back a little bit?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, is a Minister of this House allowed to rise before the orders of the day to make a statement on other than non-factual matters?

May he comment on other members in this House? If he wishes to make such comments should they not be properly made in the Throne Debate?

Mr. Speaker: Not having had any knowledge of the Minister's statement and, therefore, not being able to look over the matters in the Throne Debate concerning which the hon. Minister is making the statement, I can only rely on my memory.

My memory is that the hon. member, in making the statements to which the hon. Minister is referring now, used similar language with respect to the Minister and the people under his control and I would think that if that were allowed, and it was allowed as I was in the chair a good deal of the time, I would think it would only be reasonable that the hon. member should accept return of the same coin.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: This House does not even give courtesy to the hon. member when he is trying to make his point. He could not be heard, and it does not give the Speaker who, not personally but as your representative as members of this House, is entitled to the courtesy that any chairman should have. It is almost impossible to carry on business properly in this House and to expect or receive the rulings, or the hearings, to which the House is entitled unless through some courtesy and some common sense; I should say from all sides of the House.

I have said that I felt that the hon. member had little to complain about as far as the wording and the references in the statements were concerned, but I do believe that the hon. member does have a point—that the hon. Minister is not, at the moment, dealing with matters in his organization, on his department, which are proper for statements before the orders of the day; and that he is engaging in the type of debate which I think does not form a part of statements before the orders of the day.

Therefore, I would request the hon. Minister proceed with his statement but to omit matters which are merely attacks on the proceedings of the hon. member or the hon. member personally.

But I reiterate that so far as the actual wording is concerned, it may not be proper at this time but, from my recollection, it apparently is of the same brand of debate as we have become accustomed to in this House which, in my opinion, is very unfortunate because we are all here as representatives of the people of Ontario, and surely to goodness we can have a little dignity and a little attention to business during the few hours that this House sits.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I have to speak to this point of order. It is my understanding that according to your own ruling of the past, a Minister has the right and the responsibility to make any statement concerning the affairs of his department that are in the public interest or of public concern. In my view, sir, this statement certainly bears on the public interest and it is certainly of great concern to my staff.

Mr. Speaker: It is, but the hon. Minister must not use that statement for attacking the hon. member which is what he has been doing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I suggest the least this member can do to right, in some small measure, the great wrong he has done the staff is to name those whom he claims to know are involved, in order that the innocent may be cleared. But he should name them in such a way that he does not have the immunity of this House—in a place and manner where those charged could defend themselves.

Because of the serious nature of his charges, I feel I must take this means of placing the facts before you and on the public record.

First, he tried to frighten us with the spectre of hundreds of offspring born to "400 adult mentally retarded in our institutions".

Mr. Speaker, note the manner in which he sets this out; he says: "Perhaps it is not 400, it might be 100. I have no way of getting the figures". A call to our department would quickly have cleared this lack.

He has no way of getting the figures? Yet in the paragraph just preceding the one I quoted he says:

I was told by the deputy superintendent of one of these hospitals—I have his name but he asked that I do not use it here in the House—that last year there were over 400 pregnancies among retarded, long-term inmates of our mental institutions.

No wonder the author of that statement did not want his name used. He must have known, if he is even a junior member of the staff, that the figures were dreadfully wrong—in fact, Mr. Speaker, "false" is not too strong a word to use. The fact is, there were five pregnancies last year, not among our mentally retarded patients, but in our entire institutions, which house constantly 26,000 patients.

Of course, even that is too many, but if we are to use modern methods of care to allow great freedom to patients in order that we may try to develop in them some sense of responsibility, then we must take some risks. But compare our experience with any community of similar size and in the main, for normal people, the rate of births out of wedlock will be far greater. Compared with other jurisdictions in this matter our experience is enviable.

Then the member produced some patients' clothing that had faded and shrunk. This was really the coup de grace—this was to be the shocker. Mr. Speaker, I have worn much worse, as I expect everyone of us here has done at some time. But what the member neglected to tell you, sir, is that by his attitude and behaviour, he led a staff member into stealing patients' clothing, the property of the government and then he, the member, received that property. Mr. Speaker, I say to you, election to this House does not give any one of us the right to behave in this fashion and I am sure the member will be pleased to know that I ordered a full investigation of this incident on receipt of the copy he sent me of his letter to Penmans.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister is going to pillory his own staff.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Who pilloried our staff—the hon. member's friend? Even his professional colleagues did not escape the venom of his tongue. He told you, "Pharmacy keys have been withdrawn from all physicians due to the pilfering of drugs".

Pharmacy keys were withdrawn from all physicians, and for that matter from everyone else, except the pharmacist. It was not because of the pilfering of drugs. The pharmacy was reorganized in toto, including the stock inventory, and the pharmacy was renovated and put in charge of the pharmacist.

As part of the change in procedure, it was felt there were too many keys loose around the hospital, and so all keys were called in except the one belonging to the pharmacist and one key which is kept for emergency purposes which can readily be obtained by the physician on duty.

Then later, he states: "Physicians who take up positions soon leave the hospital". On several occasions he spoke of "shortage of staff". Mr. Speaker, at the best of times it is not always easy to attract staff to psychiatry. The very nature of the work makes this perfectly patent. This member, by his scurrilous attacks upon staff, has certainly ensured that it will be even more difficult to recruit staff in the future. Over against that, however, I have cause to hope and believe that the great majority of our people now realize that this particular member is, to put it in the most kindly way possible, highly irresponsible.

Once again, I submit, he has done a great disservice to the public service and the people of Ontario. Let there be no doubt in the mind of any. The staff of The Department of Health, in concert with all the public service, are a credit to us and of them we should be and I know we are, very proud.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, for clarification I would like to ask a brief question of the Minister. Could he perhaps inform the House why he found it quite easy to conduct an investigation as to who was the staff member who gave the clothing to us to expose the poor conditions, but he is unwilling to conduct an investigation as to the basic matters contained in the speech?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer should be perfectly clear even to the member. He wrote me a letter, or sent me a copy of a letter which he had sent to Penmans, upbraiding Penmans for the quality of the clothing it had sold to The Department of Health. I had factual evidence from the hon. member; I wondered how he got the clothing; and, of course, I wanted to know—I am responsible for the care of the department.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, for further clarification—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No more questions, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister inform us whether he has investigated why such shoddy clothing is being given out in the institutions?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I will not answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister says that he will answer no more questions and he is entitled so to do because that is not a question of clarification.

The hon. leader of the Opposition has questions.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health on another matter.

What plans has the Minister to assist medical officers of health to prepare for and combat the Hong Kong flu, which is already disrupting schools and public services?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, there is another similar question. Could I have it, too?

Mr. Shulman: To the Minister of Health:

Will the government consider imposing an emergency distribution arrangement with the local medical officers of health to ensure that the limited supplies of the Hong Kong flu vaccine now available are given to the elderly and the ill?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, rather than attempt to answer these questions in specifics as they are now set out, I thought it would be more appropriate that I read to you and to this House a statement on the Hong Kong influenza.

Influenza, due to the Hong Kong strain of the Influenza A<sub>2</sub> virus, started in the Far East early in July, spread to the United States, and the latest reports indicate that outbreaks have occurred in 30 states. I may point out that we have not evidence that any of these cases have been proven by the isolation of the virus.

The majority of the cases are mild or moderate in degree, and few are severe. It is estimated that between 15 per cent and 30 per cent of persons may be affected, with the typical symptoms being dry cough, headache, fever of 100 to 101 deg., muscle aches, and the average length of time off work, about two days.

While flu-like illnesses have been occurring in Ontario, the incidence is no greater than usually occurs at this time of the year, and no cases due to the specific Hong Kong influenza virus have been identified by the laboratory services. There are many infections of virus origin which have the same symptoms as true influenza, but differentiation is possible only by laboratory isolations. Nevertheless, it can be expected that outbreaks of influenza due to the new virus strain probably will occur here and follow a pattern similar to that in the United States.

A specific vaccine against the Hong Kong strain of influenza virus is being prepared by several companies, but the supply is limited. The level of effectiveness is considered to be not more than 60 per cent when two doses of vaccine are given not less than three weeks apart. It should be restricted for administration to persons in the older age groups and those suffering from chronic heart and lung disease who are essentially the only ones who have any risk of serious complications from influenza. The complications are due to pneumonia caused by secondary infection and usually respond satisfactorily to antibiotic therapy and chemo therapy.

Within the limits of supply, the vaccine is available to private physicians, and it is considered that they are most familiar with the state of health of persons under their care who have the greatest risk of developing complications, and can determine who will benefit most from immunization. Routine immunization of the general population has not proved effective in altering the course of an outbreak of influenza, and is not recommended.

The influenza virus is spread by droplet infection from person to person, and ideally the most satisfactory method of prevention is by avoiding large congregations of people as there may be some members of the group who are incubating the disease. It is also recommended that all persons who seem to be developing an upper respiratory infection avoid contact with other people until recovery has occurred.

Medical officers of health have been requested to be on the alert for outbreaks of influenza-like illnesses and to report to the epidemiology service those that appear to be in excess of what is expected at this time of the year, and to collect suitable specimens for laboratory study and identification of the causative agent. The epidemiology service will then inform medical officers of health and physicians about development and progression of outbreaks as the situation warrants. Our public health laboratory service has received samples of the Hong Kong virus from WHO and is prepared to quickly identify this new strain when it appears.

This appraisal of the situation with regard to the expected outbreak of Hong Kong flu, has been prepared with the advice of professional personnel knowledgeable in the field of communicable disease control.

Mr. Shulman: Does the Minister intend to answer my question?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): That is not the answer.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I guess perhaps the Minister did not hear my question. May I repeat it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has said that he has answered the question and my recollection of the statement read by the hon. Minister was that there was a limited supply of this—

Mr. Sargent: Lots of double talk, that is all it is.

Mr. Speaker: At one of these sessions I am going to take the action which is very seldom taken in any House with the members who insist on disregarding the rules of the House. I would hate to do it and I would not like to do it, but I most certainly will, and this is serving notice on those members who insist in interrupting not only Mr. Speaker, but others who have the floor, and I would hope that I would have the support of the rest of the members of this House when that time comes.

I was about to say to the hon. member for High Park that my recollection, if this is of any assistance to him, of what the Minister said was that there were limited supplies of the vaccine and that it was to be used primarily for the elderly. That was my understanding of what the Minister said; it may have been right or wrong. If the hon. Minister wishes to correct me he is at liberty to do so, and if the hon. member did not get that answer, or if that is not the answer he looked for, then he is at liberty to place a supplementary question.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, what I had asked the Minister was whether he was prepared to impose an emergency distribution arrangement through the local MOH's to ensure that the limited supply did go to the elderly and the ill and the Minister has not answered my question.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, we are not arranging for any emergency distribution. If the need arises we will be prepared to do so.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a point of order. I am sure the Minister would not knowingly mislead the House, and I have here a bottle of Hong Kong flu vaccine which I purchased at Starkman's today and the dosage which the Minister has given is radically wrong. He has suggested that two doses be given and this is quite incorrect. I would suggest through you, sir, that perhaps the Minister should correct his statement.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, may I say to you, sir, that the advisors for The Department of Health are highly skilled clinicians. They do not go by the label on a pharmacist's bottle and neither do I and if the doctor practices good medicine, he does not go by that either. The doctor is responsible for determining the dose of the medicine, not the pharmacist, and not what the manufacturer puts on the bottle label.

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister suggesting that the label—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member need not, and in fact cannot, engage in a debate on this. If he has a matter of professional disagreement with his colleague, I would suggest that outside the House they could settle this very well, and that I am sure the rest of the members, including Mr. Speaker, would be glad to know the outcome of the discussion.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Public Works remaining from yesterday.

Did the government ignore or bypass advice or objections from the Ontario Council for the Arts and the Art Gallery of Ontario in the selection of the $330,000 worth of art now displayed in the new government buildings?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the committee for the arts in the Queen's Park project was recommended by our associate architects in the spring of 1965. That committee consisted of a three-man team from the Royal Canadian Academy and Mr. Fred Fletcher, from the firm of Gordon S. Adamson, one of the associate architects.

During the early studies of the committee's work, a good deal of time was spent in studying the locations for the panels and the pieces of sculpture. In July, 1966, as a result of discussion on this subject with the Ontario Council for the Arts, Mr. William Withrow, director of the then Art Gallery of Toronto was asked to also serve on the committee.

In August of that year, Mr. Withrow delegated Mr. David Brook curator, for it was at that time that the status of the gallery changed to the Art Gallery of Ontario. Mr. Withrow felt time would not permit him to adequately serve. At that time while several necessary decisions had been made, Mr. Brook was brought up to date on the work of the committee and, I am advised, accepted the appointment.

While it has been reported in the press the art gallery finally persuaded him to resign, I am advised he never did so either verbally or in writing to the chairman.

I do not feel advice of the Ontario Council for the Arts was ignored for—I quote in part from a letter to the department from the executive-director of the council dated July 22, 1966:

May I take this opportunity to wish you, Mr. Cleve Home, and the other members of the committee, every good wish for the success of this exciting and farsighted project.

I believe it is natural that the subject of art can quite easily promote controversy. The only area of criticism that I am aware of was the opinion that perhaps the government should have purchased the art after the buildings were completed rather than commission the work for specific locations. Our research indicated the art works at the Toronto International Airport were commissioned up to two years in advance of the official opening, for specific locations, by specific artists who had presented designs to an art committee similar to the manner in which we handled this matter for the Queen's Park project.

The same pattern was followed with respect to the international airports at Winnipeg and Edmonton, and also, I am told, for the international airport at Vancouver.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, if it is government policy to continue to have the 1 per cent set aside for art purposes for all public buildings?

Hon. Mr. Connell: No, that is not necessarily so. It was about that percentage for the Queen's Park addition.

Mr. Nixon: Would it be approximately a similar amount for other public buildings as they are constructed?

Hon. Mr. Connell: No, it is only for that one building. We have not set that up as a policy for other buildings particularly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my first question, carried over from yesterday, is to the Minister of Labour.

With 75 per cent of hotel, restaurant and cafeteria employees not in a position to receive gratuities, how does the Minister justify postponement for nine months of the full implementation of the new minimum wage on the basis that these are gratuity employees?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for York South, the decision was not based on this consideration alone. The survey of the low-wage industries taken by my department late last year revealed that 65 per cent of the employees in the hotels, restaurants and taverns in Ontario received wages of less than $1.30 per hour. This represents the highest impact on any group in the low-wage industry surveyed. In an attempt to cushion the impact, but at the same time ensure that workers in this industry received regular minimum wage protection at the earliest opportunity, we plan to introduce the minimum wage increases in two steps in this industry. The minimum wage will be $1.15 per hour from January 1 to October 1, 1969, and $1.30 thereafter.

Mr. MacDonald: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Health. Can the Minister tell the House whether active consideration is being given at this time for PSI merging activities with OMSIP?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I can not because no indication has been given us that such is desired.

Mr. MacDonald: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Will the Minister take steps to establish an arbitration board for hearing disputes between garage operators and motorists over repair bills, as an alternative to costly court action, along the lines of North America's first arbitration board of this nature going into operation early in 1969, in the province of Manitoba?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I will take question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Since Mr. Phillip Wynn of 680 King Street West, Toronto, appears to be unwilling to return security deposits to his ex-tenants, particularly those who formerly resided at 103 and 105 West Lodge Avenue, offering no reason for not doing so, despite the fact that several judgments have been entered against him, though the plaintiffs have been unable to collect on those judgments, will the Minister instruct his department to take the necessary steps to recover the security deposits and ensure payment, without further expense to the ex-tenants involved?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I shall look into the circumstances of this situation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question of the Minister of Public Works. Today we go down the ministerial list.

Mr. Ben: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question of the Minister of Public Works, notice of which has been given, is:

What is the name of the Cabinet Minister who was refused entry to the Frost Building by a non-civil-service security guard during the past two years? Why have civil-service security guards returned to duty in the Frost Building? How many non-civil-service security guards work at Queen's Park? What is the per-hour cost of non-civil-service security guards? What building in the new government complex was left unlocked last week by a non-civil-service security guard? Will non-civil-service security guards be appointed in the main building; and if not, why not?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Urgent public importance!

Hon. Mr. Connell: Mr. Speaker, we have no record of a Cabinet Minister being refused entry to the Frost Building.

As to why civil-service security guards have returned to duty in the Frost Building, the answer is the civil-service security guards have been on duty in the Frost Building, north and south, since the buildings were occupied.

How many civil-service security guards work at Queen's Park? There are presently six non-civil-service security guards. The cost per hour is $2. What building in the new government complex was left unlocked last week by a non-civil-service security guard? The Grosvenor Street entrance to the Hepburn Block was apparently left unguarded on the evening of Saturday, November 9, 1968. An employee entering the building at 6 p.m. reported there was no guard to challenge him, nor was there any guard in sight when he left the building at approximately 8 p.m. This matter was investigated and it cannot be determined whether the security guard was absent at this particular time. The agency that is responsible for providing the guards has been informed of this incident, and requested to ensure the guard does not leave the door unattended in the future. The provision of the third guard per shift, which was recently implemented, should ensure that this does not happen again.

And the sixth question, when will the non-civil-service security guards be employed in the main building, and if not, why not? It is not proposed to put non-civil-service security guards in the main building. The reason for this is the nature of the legislative function requires permanent civil servants.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a question to the Minister of Health.

Mr. Ben: To the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker:

Did the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Foundation purchase property on May Street in Rosedale area this year? How long has the property been vacant?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the foundation did purchase property on May Street this year. The property has been vacant approximately seven months, during which time the foundation has been proceeding with internal alterations to that building for its use. This includes fireproofing, a new boiler, and minor partitioning. They will start the industrial clinic programme early in the new year.

Mr. Speaker, there was a question of which I took notice last week, placed by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk). Shall I answer it now?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we would let the hon. member for Humber complete his question to the Minister. There is one here, No. 330, dated September 11.

Mr. Ben: Would the Speaker advise me by—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member—

Mr. Ben: November 11—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would take Mr. Speaker's copy.

Mr. Ben: Oh, I have it here now. He did answer that. I believe it is 330. The trouble is that one of the questions was answered in my absence, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it was one of the questions that was asked and was answered without the Speaker knowing it was asked.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would anticipate that the Minister, any Minister, would not answer a question which has not been asked, and if Mr. Speaker's records were not as accurate as his memory or as accurate as it should be, I would suspect that between the Minister and the Speaker, we can sort these things out in the future. This will be taken as—

Mr. Ben: The answer is recorded on page 581, Mr. Speaker, in the right-hand column, last part right up on the page.

Mr. Speaker: Now perhaps in view of that I might ensure that the question to the hon. Minister which has been answered, now has been asked. One from the hon. member for Brantford—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member for Brantford asked:

Will the nurses who have been employed as part-time staff in Ontario psychiatric hospitals up to September 15, 1968, receive their vacation fee as prescribed by The Department of Labour regulations? If so, when? If not, why not?

As of September 30, 1968, The Department of Health employed 273 part-time nurses who may work up to 3.5 days a week, and are appointed under The Public Service Act, as contract employees, unclassified staff. They are not entitled to vacation or vacation pay under the provisions of The Public Service Act. They usually seek part-time employment as a matter of personal preference, or family convenience, although full-time work is readily available for qualified duty. The new Employment Standards Act, 1968, reads that:

Where an employee has completed 36 months of non-continuous employment during any period of five consecutive years, subsequent to the year 1963, he shall be given an annual vacation of at least two weeks, with pay, upon the completion of each 12 months' employment thereafter.

A check of our central record shows that no part-time nurses currently employed, appear qualified by length of actual continuous part-time employment for immediate consideration or retroactive payment. But if individual claims were made within the framework of appropriate legislation, we will seek advice and interpretation of The Department of Labour as to the validity of such claims.

I am pleased to advise that the department has arranged, effective September 29, 1968, to grant four per cent vacation pay to part-time personnel in hospitals as well as other branches, thus according to our staff the same benefits which are now made to employees in the private sector of the economy.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister indicate why these girls were not told that they are not getting vacation pay, as prescribed by The Department of Labour regulations? I have two pay slips here, one before and one after. On the first pay slip there is no indication that vacation pay is not included, whereas on the other one, they do include the vacation pay.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the answer because I do not know what the employees were told when they were hired, but I do believe the hon. member is in error when he says it is provided by The Department of Labour regulations. I believe public service employees are excluded from that, if memory serves me right.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has a question of the Minister in connection with electric shock treatments.

Mr. Sargent: Before that, Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport on a—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of privilege, sir; on a point of privilege. The Minister of Transport last week said that a question I had asked was not in the organized crime report. I would send this across to the Minister marked on page 122, where he denied the fact that clause (d) was not in the report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will proceed with his question of the Minister of—

Mr. Sargent: I would ask the Minister of Transport what steps have been taken—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. member will now place his question of the Minister of Health; he is ready. The member has risen on a point of order, he has sent to the Minister that report—

Mr. Sargent: I am rising on a point of privilege, sir. Will he deny that I was right in my submission—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must now give the hon. Minister a chance to look at the material he sent over to him. So if the hon. member will proceed with his question of the Minister of Health, I am sure that the Minister of Transport will have something to say a little later.

An hon. member: No question about that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Health what consents are sought before electric shock treatment is administered to patients in provincially operated hospitals? Two, what observation procedures apply in the recovery rooms and the wards after such treatments?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I have not got that question.

Mr. Speaker: That question was dated December 12, No. 355, and it has been in my hands for a week now. I am sure that it must be some place in that ministerial—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I take it—

Mr. Speaker: Would you take it as notice and—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Pardon me, I have just been handed a copy of it.

It is the practice within provincial hospitals to obtain written consent from the patient or a responsible relative, prior to giving electro-convulsive therapy. Two, close observation and care is maintained during the recovery period and the patient is retained in a recovery area until he can be safely returned to his room.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Transport, what is his answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Minister of Transport is still busy reading. I will try to remember that the matter has been raised and give the hon. member a chance later to pursue it.

The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Does the Minister agree with the federation of agriculture position on going it alone for the creation of a single general farm organization? Two, will the Minister grant the request for a farmer vote and a check-off for financing?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I do not seem to be aware of the information that the federation of agriculture has taken that position. Secondly, I believe this is purely a hypothetical question in degree.

Mr. Gaunt: I will be in to see the Minister shortly, I am sure—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has a question of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Gaunt: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, if he will accept it.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, has the Minister given this matter any thought?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No; but if somebody asks me to do that, I shall do that—

Mr. Gaunt: But the Minister has not up until this point?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Sargent: Need some help?

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transport.

Will the Minister consider amending section 94, section 2 of The Highway Traffic Act to provide for the stopping of traffic where the speed limit is less than 35 miles per hour—for the purpose of school buses—as requested by the Tecumseh town council?

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I answered a not dissimilar question from the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman). At that time, I said that proposals for amendments to The Highway Traffic Act were now under consideration. But I went on to add that a wide-ranging report on school bus construction, equipment and operation prepared for, submitted to and approved in principle by the recent Ministers' conference, had been distributed to officials in the various provinces and was receiving detailed study, with a view to implementing the provisions of that report to obtain, as far as possible, uniformity across the country on school bus laws.

Mr. Sargent: Who told the Minister that?

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, has the Minister any alternative suggestions for protecting children getting off buses where the speed limit is less than 35 miles per hour?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: Mr. Speaker, I think I would prefer not to discuss this issue in the absence of the whole proposal of the report to the Ministers' conference being considered.

May I return to the hon. member's—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I was going to ask if the hon. Minister was now ready to deal with the point of order.

Hon. Mr. Haskett: I would just like, sir, to return to him the report of the Ontario Police Commission on organized crime, which is the one to which he was apparently making reference in his question to me on December 10, when I said we had not been able to identify the report to which he alluded in his question. I assumed it was the Roach report of December 11, 1961, and the material on page 122 of the report was not germane to his question.

Mr. Sargent: How many reports on organized crime does the Minister have?

Hon. Mr. Haskett: I would be glad to return the report to him and look at a comparable report and discuss it with him on a future date.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. What is the position that a Minister of the Crown, with all the research people he has available to him—

An hon. member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Sargent: The point of order is this, that a Minister of the Crown gets up and tells me I do not know what I am talking about. I give him the report, he says it is not in the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

An hon. member: He does not know the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will resume his seat.

Now the hon. member persists in putting in questions, such as that one to my office, without giving the source of the statements upon which—

Mr. Sargent: I gave the source right here.

Mr. Speaker: Order—without putting in the source of the statements upon which he is basing his question. I very often return—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, you are out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: You are out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the government leader ready to deal with this particular matter because I certainly will deal with it right today? If the hon. member will resume his seat and give silence till I have finished, he will have an opportunity to speak.

What I said was that questions come in from the hon. member and from many hon. members asking questions based on a source of information which is not identified. I usually return it and ask them to identify it so that the Minister, to whom the question is addressed, can have some opportunity of locating it. But the hon. member for Grey-Bruce objects to this and that provokes a very great argument. Rather than have the argument when this one came, I sent it on hoping that it was the Roach report, which it seemed to me it would be. The Minister took that view of it, but it was not the Roach report, which is the organized crime report known to most of us, certainly known to me. Therefore, the hon. Minister had no indication as to the report that the hon. member was questioning him about.

These matters could be very easily dealt with in the future if all members would all do as most do—give the source of the quotation or statement upon which they base their question, and then the members will have an opportunity of getting an answer.

I think the hon. Minister has taken the proper course. He has explained, as I have said to the hon. member, that he was looking at the Roach report and could not find it; it was not there. He now has this one, and he undoubtedly will answer that question when he has had an opportunity of looking at the question again and the report. I think, hon. members, that that is an eminently reasonable way of dealing with this matter. If the hon. member has something further to say in the matter, the floor is his.

Mr. Sargent: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Treasury Board—the Cabinet—look down at us people in the Opposition as people who do not know what they are talking about. I give the name of the report and the Minister says it is not in the report; I give him the report and now he hedges again, and the Speaker sticks up for the guy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Highways.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Highways.

Since service centres along Highway 401 enjoy a monopoly position, has the Minister given consideration to requesting them to accept credit cards from all oil companies, a practice followed by many service stations across Ontario?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, this has been discussed with the oil companies. However, the position is that the company practice insofar as credit and credit cards are concerned is their responsibility, and we believe it is subject to the will of the individual companies.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister a supplementary question—whether or not he might again raise it with them on the off chance they might accept it?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Mr. Deans: Yes. To the Minister of Lands and Forests:

Has the Minister received the results of the studies of the effects of DDT on vegetation and animal life? Two, if so, does the department plan to ban the use of DDT in the province of Ontario?

If I might, Mr. Speaker, the study I am referring to was indicated by the Minister during the last session. He said they were looking the whole matter over, when I asked the question at that time.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Wentworth, we have not received the results of this study yet. This is an inter-departmental study. In our own departmental programmes, we do not use DDT any more.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Gaunt: Has the Ontario athletics commissioner been investigating complaints from the Hamilton area concerning the right of young boys to play for hockey teams of their own choosing, instead of being directed to play for teams designated by the Ontario Minor Hockey Association?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member, I am advised that no complaints or enquiries in this connection have been received by the Ontario athletic commissioner. Under The Athletic Control Act, it is only in cases where a league or body connected with amateur sport operating in Ontario, requests that the Minister hold an investigation that I am authorized to do so. I received no such request in this case.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth has a question of the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, to the Provincial Secretary:

Could the Minister inform the House whether he would consider a change in the appropriate Act to allow people who, of necessity, must eat Christmas dinner in a hotel, restaurant or other licensed establishment, to enjoy the pleasure of an alcoholic beverage with their meal?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Liquor Licensing Board of Ontario to give consideration to this matter and hope to have a report from them very shortly.

Mr. Deans: Not likely by next week, though.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brantford has a question of the Minister.

Mr. Makarchuk: A question of the Provincial Secretary:

Is there any reason why the Liquor Control Board of Ontario does not employ women in its retail outlets?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Has the question been changed? Did the member have "licence board" in his original question?

Mr. Makarchuk: No, I had "liquor control board".

Mr. Speaker: My copy, of which photostatic copies should have been sent to the Minister, says "liquor control board".

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the board has no particular policy; it has just been related as to the duties to be performed. As a matter of interest, with the new self-service stores which we are introducing in Metropolitan Toronto, the liquor control board is in fact giving consideration to the employment of women in clerical and cashier positions.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question? In view of the fact that the Quebec liquor board employs women in its retail outlets, would the Minister see to it that this particular type of discrimination is eliminated in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just in the way that question was asked, the hon. member is suggesting there is some discrimination, which is a very unreasonable way to put a supplementary question. I am trying to suggest that some of the duties which these people have to perform in our stores involve the unloading of trucks and a great deal of physical activity which, of course, would not be commensurate with the physical ability of a lady.

Now, we are finding some ways and some particular positions, particularly in the self-service stores, where we will use women in clerical and in cashier positions. I think it would be unfair to leave the impression that there is any discrimination at all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a question of the Provincial Secretary?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): A question of the Provincial Secretary:

Will the Minister explain the policy of the Legislature in regard to page boys?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps you might have some explanation of this.

Mr. Speaker: From the looks of my manuscript, hon. members, it would appear that I almost thought I was a Minister answering a question.

The hon. member for Rainy River placed a question in Mr. Speaker's office addressed to the Provincial Secretary with respect to legislative pages. Since the legislative pages come under the personal supervision of Mr. Speaker, I felt that it was desirable that the question should best be answered by Mr. Speaker and I have discussed the matter both with the member for Rainy River and with the Provincial Secretary and on their agreement now answer the hon. member's question.

I cannot elaborate upon the practices and policy of previous Speakers with respect to legislative pages. Suffice it to say that pages were provided, mostly from the Metro Toronto area, under personal direction and supervision of Mr. Speaker and his secretary. The first group of pages for the first session of this Parliament were also collected by the then secretary to Mr. Speaker and I believe were an excellent group of young lads.

I am sure that most of the hon. members of this House have taken the presence and services of the legislative pages for granted and really have had little interest in the procurement of the pages and conditions under which they work. I must say that I, as a member of the House for many years, reflected the same attitudes. However, on becoming responsible personally for these young men, I decided that there must be some policy established at least during my tenure of office as Mr. Speaker. I also felt that the hon. members should have some interest in this area of legislative services and the whole matter was discussed by Mr. Speaker's House committee and certain suggestions given and certain problems faced. I, therefore, welcome the hon. member's question.

At present the policy is to have 22 page boys, half of whom are in Grade 8 and half in Grade 7. In this manner there are sufficient pages each morning to bring up to date members' and press gallery Hansards and books; it also provides a good number of pages, all being on duty, when the House first opens each afternoon, leaving 11 pages for duty during the rest of the afternoon while the lads in one of the school grades are attending classes. Each legislative page must have the consent of his parents and of his school principal to be absent from school during the period of his service as a legislative page and must have at least 80 per cent in his scholastic standing.

Of course each legislative page must also, if not a resident of Metro Toronto, have a place in which to live during his term of service. It is further my view and has been my policy that young men anywhere in the province should have the opportunity of serving as legislative pages. For that purpose I wrote each member of the House last spring soliciting their aid. As a result of this I have been able to collect a list of boys interested in service as legislative pages from which, for the next session or two, it will be possible to draw qualified and suitable young men.

As the hon. members will recollect, the second and third group of pages during the first session of this Parliament represented not only young men of Anglo-Saxon extraction but of French-Canadian, Hebrew, Slavic, Canadian-Indian, East Indian and Chinese-Canadian extraction and I think each one of them was a credit, not only to the cadre of legislative pages but to this Legislature. The present group of boys, on the other hand, is drawn from all parts of Ontario and in order not only to have a record in the proceedings of the House but also for the information of the members I would like to list for them the young men who are now serving. They are:

Grade 7: John Boyce of Weston—from the riding of the hon. member for Etobicoke; Andy Curran of King—from the riding of the hon. member for York North; Howard Huston of Agincourt—from the riding of the hon. member for Scarborough North; Philip Netusil of Scarborough—from the riding of the hon. member for Scarborough East; Richard Onley of Scarborough—from the riding of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre; Michael Parks of Willowdale—from the riding of the hon. member for York Mills; Kenton Peterson of Prescott—from the riding of the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas; Simon Prentice of Hamilton—from the riding of the hon. member for Hamilton East; Andy Southcott of Clarkson—from the riding of the hon. member for Peel South; Mark Wilson of Peterborough —from the riding of the hon. member for Peterborough; Andrew Zealley of Highland Creek—from the riding of the hon. member for Scarborough East.

Grade 8: Shawn Cameron of Clarkson—from the riding of the hon. member for Peel South; Stanley Dubickas of Toronto 3—from the riding of the hon. member for High Park; Paul Forsythe of Oshawa—from the riding of the hon. member for Oshawa; David Howell of Orillia—from the riding of the hon. member for Simcoe East; David Irwin of Chatham—from the riding of the hon. member for Chatham-Kent; Malcolm Jardine of Richmond Hill—from the riding of the hon. member for York Centre; Chris Oliphant of Toronto 12—from the riding of the hon. member for Eglinton; Mark Rudolph of Port Colborne—from the riding of the hon. member for Welland South; Mark Stokes of Schreiber—from the riding of the hon. member for Thunder Bay; Randy Templeton of Essex—from the riding of the hon. member for Essex-Kent; and Bill Van Camp of Port Perry—from the riding of the hon. member for Ontario.

The legislative pages are fitted, at government expense, with their uniform, collars and ties but their shoes, socks and shirts are provided by themselves. They are also furnished with an attractive crest for their street clothing and on completing service are each presented with a distinctive legislative page's pin. They report for duty at 9.30 each morning when the House sits in the afternoon and at 8.30 when the House sits in the morning. When there are night sessions the boys are divided into four groups, each group serving in turn until 10 p.m. and they are then sent home by taxi. The duty roster is so arranged that the boys do not serve two night sessions in succession.

The legislative pages are paid $5 for each day that they work and are given supper money and half a day's pay for each night session during which they work.

The pages are given schooling by a retired school principal who holds classes for the Grade 8 boys on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 3.30 to 6.00 p.m., and on Mondays and Wednesdays from 3.30 to 6.00 p.m. for the Grade 7 boys. This leaves the boys free to go home when the House rises at 1.00 p.m. on Fridays, rather than going to school Friday afternoons as had been the practice in the past.

As long as memory can record in the office of Mr. Speaker, the legislative pages have been sequestered in two or three old rooms in the basement of the north wing of the main buildings; they have no washrooms or toilet facilities and one large room serves as lunchroom, dressing room and recreation room with another room available with a ping-pong table in it. These conditions are, of course, intolerable for boys of 80 per cent standing in school and from the ordinary families of our province. I have therefore, with the kind cooperation and assistance of the Minister and officials of The Department of Public Works, arranged that early in the new year they will be moving into quarters which will provide them with a proper schoolroom (their present schoolroom is an old disused vault) and with appropriate dressing room, shower and wash-room and toilet facilities, playroom and lunch-room facilities.

The pages are under the direct control of Mr. Gerald Jordan, one of the legislative attendants, and I would like to express my appreciation to him for the kind and efficient way in which he has, during this Parliament, looked after the boys.

In certain other jurisdictions, parliamentary pages are drawn from the ranks of young men of appropriate height who have dropped out of or ceased to attend school. However, it is my feeling that having a group of young boys of the inquisitive and active age group and school grade that we, in the Ontario Legislature do have, is not only a great advantage to the boys but also to the whole community when they return home and recount their experiences in the Legislature. That this appears to be a reasonable assumption is underlined by the fact that I have on my list of boys anxious to serve as legislative pages, names of over 150 boys from all over Ontario.

From the foregoing and particularly from the hon. members' own experience of the boys in the page groups to date during the life of this Parliament it will be amply evident that race, creed, size or colour have no bearing on whether a lad is acceptable as a legislative page. While the daily pay of $5 and overtime as mentioned previously for night sessions, is not a large return for the boys' work, we have found very little difficulty in recruiting boys as pages from every social and economic position in life. I may say that from the funds appropriated for Mr. Speaker's Office and the legislative services it has been possible for Mr. Speaker to provide, for those boys who must stay in the city and pay board, certain assistance with their board, and for visits home on weekends during their tour of duty.

I have also asked the party caucus offices to arrange a period of discussion with the legislative pages to acquaint the boys with their party aims and procedures. In addition each new group of pages is given an indoctrination period by the Clerk of the House on the traditions and operations of the assembly.

This reply, hon. members, has been given at some length not only for the information of all the members but so that they and interested parents, students and school principals may have it for reference and guidance.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, could I direct a supplementary question to the Provincial Secretary on this? We noticed in your reply that all of the pages are young men; will the Minister act to amend this discrimination?

Mr. Speaker: If I may, with the Minister's permission, answer that. That is a suggestion that has been made and has been considered. If the hon. members will recall what I said about the washroom and dressing facilities at the moment available, they will understand that it is quite impossible at this moment. Secondly, it has been hard enough to find accommodation for boys better than we have. Perhaps when the House Committee is dealing with The Department of Public Works with respect to space in the main building we might do that.

But I am sure the hon. member in question would like the girl pages to be of an age group slightly older than the boy pages.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne by the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the adjournment last night I was reviewing reasons why this province has been playing hand in glove with land speculators and has been the real culprit behind the high cost of building lots and therefore the high cost of housing in this province.

The number one cause in this situation that I was citing is the Ontario Water Resources Commission and its failure to implement a province-wide provision of services for water and sewers, by restricting its agreements to within municipalities, making sure that they back each agreement to the extent of the obligations incurred and thus causing delays in the implementation of construction projects that have been costly by restricting development that might otherwise have occurred much sooner.

I want now to go to one other type of restriction that is definitely part of the Ontario water resources policy and is causing a very severe curtailment in the availability of housing lots in this province.

I cited the Richvale case yesterday where the Ontario Water Resources Commission made, or gave, approval to a plant in Richvale which would serve the new school and hospital there and only another 400 acres—namely land owned by a developer seeking to open up some acreage there, but restricting it to that 400 acres only, completely ignoring the area lying south, and the area east and west which are greatly in need of sewage services.

I sat in on a meeting between the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the council of the town of Markham two or three weeks ago when the Markham council asked for approval of an extension to their sewer plant. That approval was given on condition that they would not build any more than 200 additional homes each year in that municipality.

This is the negative approach that has been taken by the Ontario Water Resources Commission and which has been building up this tremendous shortage of housing lots by not allowing the demand to be met. It is restricting, in the approval case of Markham, to 200 homes per year. It is restricting it, in the case of Vaughan township, to the 400 acres that is designated for that plant to serve. It is doing this instead of taking an imaginative approach, which is required to meet the great demand in this province for housing, by saying, "We shall service whatever land is needed, wherever land is shown to be desirable for a development. Where there is evidence of a need, we shall provide this service."

This is the approach the Ontario Hydro takes.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): The hon. member turned down the municipal equalization grants.

Mr. Deacon: We shall deal with that matter of equalization grants later on. This is the approach that the Ontario Water Resources Commission should take—

Hon. Mr. White: They turned it down, so let them pull themselves up with their own bootstraps.

Mr. Deacon: —as Ontario Hydro does, in an area where it sees a market demand existing. Ontario Hydro does not want to work out some agreement with municipalities for the provision of power before it builds a plant and transmission line. This is the way the water resources commission should be operating—in the way it was originally understood it would be operating.

Now the other factor that I mentioned yesterday was the ridiculous concept of restricting development in this province so that it could be served by lake centred plants.

Why would we restrict our concept or development of this province to that of the lakes only when we have inland cities and desirable development centres which would enable us to open up tens of thousands of acres for development and thus ease this matter of supply? The economics of the problem are this: Last year we saw the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) bring before us, in his annual budget, a provision of $70 million for land assembly. This was on the presumption that this is the only way the province can provide low-cost building lots for people to build on.

The ridiculous part of this is if that money had been set aside as funds available for the development and provision of basic water and sewage plants for homes, then perhaps we would not have just the province owning sufficient land for 18,000 to 20,000 homes and still having to provide the services for those homes, but we would see the situation where we would be providing services for 100,000 homes in this province.

Our annual demand now is about 80,000; we need to provide services for 100,000. Make that provision and make it a stated policy that we will open up and provide services for 100,000 homes in the coming year when we know that the demand is only 80,000. Then we can be sure that demand will be in excess of supply.

The basis of my calculation of this figure of $70 million being required to provide the necessary basic trunk lines, sewage plants and pumping stations is the following: In Metro, the capital levy per home is $125 for the sewer but we know that the actual cost faced by most developers in providing their own package plants and their water supplies, as required by the municipalities in which they are developing, is $400 to $500 in the case of the package plant for the sewage and trunk lines to the development; and perhaps $200 to $300 for the water.

If we take that cost of $700 or so per home, which is required to provide the basic trunks or sewers, and we take that on as a provincial responsibility, where the lowest cost borrowing can be carried out, and where the elimination of all these fights between municipalities can be assured because it is done, not only within a municipality but as a basic service provided by the province that overrides municipal boundaries, then we shall see and we can be assured that these plants and these trunks can be installed with no unnecessary delay.

So let us urge, and hope, that the province will direct its attention toward changing its emphasis from the purchase and assembly of land, to the opening up of land now owned by others but which should be made available and made possible to be developed if those people wish to do so.

Now I have heard this criticism voiced for this plan. As soon as we have announced a new sewage line in the past, or a new water main, land prices in the direction of that line have immediately skyrocketed. Speculators have come in and they have bought that property. But the difficulty is that we have done this on such a small scale. We have never really done it on a big enough scale to cope with the real need.

We have done it on a scale that provides maybe 5,000 homes, or 10,000 homes, but we need to do it on a scale for 100,000 homes and we need to announce that as a definite policy. If we do it for a small number of homes, the speculator, the land owner is still in the position that he knows that within the next year or two or three there will continue to be greater demand than there is supply, and therefore he can continue to expect to get a higher price for his lots. But as soon as he is fearful, as soon as he realizes that the stated policy of this province is to make sufficient services available so that we have an excess amount of serviced land, he will change his tune in a hurry because he will recognize that the market is no longer assured; and that he may face substantially lower prices for the lots when he comes to sell those that he now owns in the form of raw land.

We have seen, as I mentioned, the spiral going up in raw land and as the spiral goes up, we have seen speculators working out what they expect to get in one, two, three, maybe ten years for the land development, depending on how fast the development proceeds they then take the present value of that expected return. On that they base the price of the raw land.

We have seen, in going across the province in connection with the taxation study, that where development is not over 1.5 per cent per annum, the growth is not greater than that rate, then the price of land outside and adjacent to a municipality is not much higher than it is for normal agricultural purposes. That is the case we found in Metro Toronto until the last ten years, but because of our continual restriction which has been due to the lack of services and to another factor I shall deal with shortly, we have always had less availability of building lots available than the market has required.

Thus the price has continued to rise and as the price of those building lots has risen, the raw land has arisen because speculators have seen and have realized that if they can get $75,000 an acre out of the sale of lots, and deduct from that the cost of the services they are forced to provide and the municipal levies that they are asked for, and they take into account the interest and carrying charges of the land in the intervening time, they know they can still perhaps pay $10,000 an acre or more for that land.

Therefore they bid for the raw land at far above its agricultural value and also make it very costly for development to take place in the future. The money that is paid for that raw land, the money that is paid for that speculation, does nothing to provide the basic services or to help the home owner who is willing to buy real services and not just provide a profit to someone who is speculating.

We have found this situation well illustrated in the Malvern project which I mentioned yesterday, where the government has owned land and has not been able to get ahead with the services because of the municipality's problems and the failure of the government to provide the basic services. But we also see it in the case of many private developers who assemble substantial acreages, and who wait years before they can get those acreages developed, sold, and houses built upon them.

I know of one project out north of Cooksville which was assembled several years ago. The developer is not unhappy today, because the price of raw land in that area has gone up through this policy of the government, but he really would have much preferred to have been able to get that land into developed lots within a year at least—no more—from the time he bought the land. He would rather get the fast turnover.

And Centennial city was recently announced. This is the project between Stouffville and Goodwood where a developer assembled about 8,000 acres of land and hopes to be able to proceed with that in the not too distant future. But what probably is going to happen there is that the Ontario Water Resources Commission will delay it as they give consideration as to whether they are going to allow an upstream sewage plant to serve that area; and the municipality will probably delay it as it works out ways to try to prevent itself from getting into financial difficulties because of a big development like this going ahead.

We must change our policy as far as the water resources commission is concerned and give it the necessary funds to really open up and service tens of thousands of acres of land in this province where it is suitable for development.

Now about the municipal problems that the hon. Minister of Revenue just mentioned. I did not support and refused to support the type of subsidy that was proposed by the select committee, and my colleagues also joined with me in that view of the municipal assistance and subsidy. I am not a believer in "mother henning" responsible organizations such as local government.

I do not think any local government wishes to be in the position where it is permanently subsidized. I take the approach in the case of requirements for areas such as Pickering, or in areas close to any fast developing part of the province where there is a great demand and a great deal of residential development going on, that whatever assistance we give should be only on a temporary basis and not on a permanent basis. It should provide the incentive and the inducement for that municipality to encourage a proper assessment balance and to obtain one as soon as possible.

In the case of Pickering township, it experienced a financial crisis because it found that the housing brought about a heavy demand for services long before there was any industrial or commercial balance to help pay for those services that were needed. But if we were to adopt a plan of subsidy that the minority members, the Liberal representatives in the select committee recommended, we would overcome this difficulty in the following form:

The basis of this subsidy, or the premise of such a subsidy is that about 40 per cent of the revenue of municipalities across the province comes from the residents, and 60 per cent comes from the commercial/industrial assessment. Now that is not the ratio of actual assessment but because of business taxes and other taxes, the total revenues received by municipalities across the province, on balance, are 40 per cent from the residents and 60 per cent from the business and commercial interests.

In the case of a new, fast developing municipality, there is no opportunity and there is no incentive for industry to go in because, for one thing, there is a shortage of services to begin with. But secondly, industry and commerce need people, and until the people actually move in, it is very difficult to attract that industrial/commercial assessment. Give the municipality a ten-year period after the time that construction takes place, and it will have attracted the necessary commercial/industrial development, but assure it offsetting revenue equivalent to what it would have had it been fully developed during that period.

My suggestion, and the suggestion of my colleagues in connection with this, is that in a house of which the structure costs less than $10,000, in the first year the province should provide a tax subsidy to that municipality equivalent to 150 per cent of the revenue it receives on that new house, and that amount would decline over the next ten years in an even amount so it would disappear at the end of ten years.

Assume that during that period the municipality would have an opportunity to attract the necessary industrial and commercial assessment, that would put its financial affairs in balance.

I suggest that in connection with homes in the $10,000 to $12,000 cost range, that this be 120 per cent, not 150 per cent of the revenue received from the residence itself. This is not a difficult type of subsidy to manage because in the case of mining municipalities, we now tabulate each home, have worked out the actual mechanics, and subsidy is based upon whether each is a miner's residence or not.

We could easily, in the present day, have assessment cards that run through machines, and we can pull out those homes that have been built one year ago, two years ago, or three years ago, and the necessary subsidy that would be applicable for that municipality could be calculated. The province could provide that subsidy and thus assure that municipality that if it encourages and permits low-cost housing, it will not find itself in a financial bind. I know as a municipal councillor how I looked upon any low-cost proposal for housing; I knew that this was going to endanger our tax base because a home does not carry itself unless it has a much higher assessment rate than those, say, in the 800, 900 or 1,000 square-foot class. Thus, in the municipality of which I am a resident, the policy has been for many years that we restrict our development to a much higher square footage and a much higher assessment value than that which is really needed by the ordinary person, and that the ordinary person can afford. That is what is important, to be meeting that demand.

This new county school board system is certainly going to alleviate the problem to a degree, but it is not enough. I hope we will see this policy of the province designating areas where it sees and wants to encourage the demand for development, institute this form of subsidy, which would disappear over a 10-year period. I do not like to see, as I mentioned before, any subsidy that goes on interminably and has a mother-hen type of approach which was the approach of the majority of the select committee.

Now there is another factor that comes into municipalities' consideration of new development. Municipalities are putting demands on builders that are quite unreasonable in many cases and more than what the actual homeowner himself wants. For example, greenbelt development of acre-sized lots—which is being discouraged by the health services across the province in actual practice has been found to be very satisfactory where the soil is of a suitable type. These homes certainly provide satisfaction to those who like to be out in the country, those who like to be off by themselves, and do not want to have all the fancy services. It is a very desirable type of development for that sort of demand.

Then we have also in municipalities such as Richmond Hill, several streets which are not paved. They have an asphalt chip top but they are not really paved; they do not have storm sewers, and the people up and down those streets do not really want them, not even if the town paid for the storm sewers or the sidewalks, the fancy improvements. They like it the way they have it. They bought it that way; they want it that way. Let us not be so demanding. Let us point out to municipalities that it is unnecessary and not sensible to demand high standards of service that are not going to really help and benefit the home buyer.

I noticed at the Canadian Conference on Housing that in an Ottawa development the actual cost for storm, sanitary, water, road, curbs, sidewalks, housing connections, wiring, streetlighting, was about $30 per foot frontage to that developer. I am sure we can cut that down. But in actual fact many developers find the cost per housing lot for the municipal requirements adds $3,000 to the cost or the amount paid by the homeowner. And these are very high-cost items because they have to go on mortgages with high interest rates.

We should be looking at ways that the province can provide the basic services efficiently, get its money back by the sale of the services in the same way that Ontario Hydro does and thus reduce the cost of housing to what is barely and necessarily essential, the cost of the home itself plus the raw land at not much more than agricultural value. And I am positive we will see this occur if we will adopt a different approach to the development of this province. We must stop working hand-in-glove with speculators and the only way we are going to do that is when we bring supply in excess of demand.

Urbanization is a trend that is going to continue for a long time and it is time this province recognized it by making provisions for services, making provisions for the needs of municipalities, so we do not have a continual restriction in the availability of land for building. We must use our tax revenues and our credit where it is going to do our people the most good.

And so I sum up my comments by saying that in connection with all our provincial revenues the people of this province certainly agree generally with the way the whole provincial economy seems to be going. But they are beginning now to really feel the tax bite and they see government taking over more and more of the services. They expect us to operate and provide these services on as efficient a basis as they would expect in ordinary competition in the free enterprise system.

We must, as a province, look at the services we are providing and ensure that we are providing those things that are best provided by the province on the most economical basis. Stop taking this policy of going ahead too little too late. And I do hope we will see in the coming session not $70 million put aside for land assemblies, but $70 million in the budget of the Ontario Water Resources Commission for the provision of services for 100,000 homes in this province.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate you, sir, on your reelection to the most important position in this House. It is so very important that we have in this chamber a man of your stature and wisdom to keep a fair and impartial atmosphere to the decisions that must be made in this chamber if we are to conduct the affairs of this province in an efficient and meaningful way.

I think I would be remiss too if I did not mention the contribution that has been made in the past by the chairman of the committee of the whole, the member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter). He has done an admirable job and seems to be one of the few free thinkers from the government side; he comes over and chats with us on numerous occasions and I think perhaps there is quite a lot of hope for him. He happened to get his picture taken with a very august body during the opening proceedings of this Legislature and while he protested a little bit too loudly, I think he feels quite comfortable over on these seats here and I have a great deal of hope that in the future we might see him join us.

Mr. Speaker, during the past session I have attempted to impress upon this government the need for the kind of action which will make the people of northern Ontario feel that they are a part of Ontario in a very real sense—government action which will convince people that we in this Legislature are genuinely interested in the wellbeing of all people across this province.

I have attempted to impress upon this government that regional disparities and pockets of poverty must be removed if we are to achieve the goals we have set for ourselves. If this government is to be a vehicle for maintaining unity and a sense of belonging, it must concern itself not only with the problems created by a concentration of all industrial activity between Oshawa and the Niagara River but with the four fifths of the province outside this area which has not kept pace with the economic, social or cultural life of this province.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, most people in the under-developed parts of this province want no part of the problems which this haphazard and unplanned industrial development has caused the people and this government. I refer to the high cost of land assembly and accommodation, intolerable amounts of air, water and soil pollution in many areas, and pre-empting of arable land by industrial complexes and buildings as fast as the job can be done.

Ontario is a province 1,000 square miles from north to south and still more from east to west; 230 million acres full of lakes and rivers, with a seacoast and some good agricultural land. In the early 1960s we had 7.5 million acres under cultivation, or 3.5 per cent of the total. In the agricultural expanse of this continent, the good lands of Ontario form just a dot. Mr. Speaker, I venture to predict that we will pay very dearly for this lack of planning in the future.

People in northern Ontario are beginning to ask themselves whether or not they are or ever were in any real sense a part of Ontario. Professor Arthur Lower even asks the question: "Ontario—does it even exist? Except in a geographic and legal sense, is there an Ontario at all? Utter nonsense even to ask a question, say many people who were born and brought up in Ontario. I would like to quote from an article that appeared in the June edition of Ontario History, of the Ontario Historical Society, and I would like to quote the professor in part.

Maybe when people talk about Ontario, they mean Toronto. Outside the seven counties around the head of Lake Ontario, there are various other regions also part of legal Ontario, some of which have a character of their own.

There is the peninsula between Lake Huron and Lake Erie where most of the rest of the good land lies. It is settled with towns growing into considerable cities. This is the ancient western Ontario, home of George Brown of the Grits, which now has as much claim to the title "western" as the people have to be Grits.

There is the eastern region between the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence, separated from the rest of the province by the tongue of the Canadian Shield which cuts across Kingston and Brockville. There are the old districts south of Lake Nipissing—Muskoka, Parry Sound and Nipissing—which in the century of their existence have never grown populated enough to be given county organizations. They are useful as the summer playground of Toronto people, and filled with characters you will find richly documented in Merrill Denison's series of plays entitled "The Unheroic North".

They once were the north, but now the real north stretches far beyond them, all the way to salt water, all the way from Timiskaming to the Manitoba border. At present, it has something less than 750,000 people in it, and nearly all of these are grouped around North Bay, Ontario Northland Railway mining towns, Sudbury, the Sault, the Lakehead and Kenora. The north is a true frontier region, capable of providing the incidents the reader will find delightfully described in Joan Walker's "Pardon my Parka".

No one will deny that all this forms a large variegated and richly endowed chunk of the earth's surface. But is that sufficient to make it into Ontario? Again, I ask, does Ontario exist?

People in Kenora think of themselves as quasi-Manitobans; at least Winnipeg is their centre. Toronto is just a distant exploiting nuisance. They are 1,000 miles west of that little pocket handkerchief of a county around London, that egregiously refers to itself as western Ontario, and even has the gall to call itself the University of Western Ontario.

That title gives the game away, of course. There was a day when it made sense. That day has gone, but would it make any better sense for Kenorites to think of themselves as Ontarians? Come to that, does anyone think of himself as an Ontarian?

In another part of the article he goes on:

And curiously enough, it is in the empty north that there has risen a sense of identity wider than the town, and not found in the crowded south. Northerners are quite sure they are not southerners. Their spirit and attitude, they maintain, are different. They find more in common with the Prairie people than with those down south. This probably springs from their feeling that they are subject to economic exploitation by the south and that is by Toronto. They are so far removed from the provincial capital, especially those west of the lakes, that they picture themselves more like dependent subjects in an empire than as citizens.

And they are all isolated; even the great ports of the head of the lakes are isolated. These factors create a tension which gives a recognizably common atmosphere to the north. Ontario is a space on the map. It is a legal entity administered from Toronto. It is a section of Canada, but has it any flesh on its bones, or blood in its veins? Does Ontario even exist?

These are questions that a lot of people in northern Ontario are asking, whether they really are a part of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know how strongly this government feels about the north remaining a part of Ontario in a real sense, in a way that will remove any doubt in the minds of its people that they are to share equitably in all benefits that accrue as a result of the orderly and wise exploitation of our human and natural resources. No doubt the result of the last provincial election was a clear indication of the frustration, indignation and disenchantment with this government, in its failure to initiate programmes and policies which will assure proper development in the north. We have the resources and the technology to eliminate regional disparity but this government lacks the will to get on with it.

I would like to quote an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail on October 3, 1968. It says: "ODC Grants Almost $1 Million to Northern Ontario Firms." I think most members in the House will remember that this programme was announced during the heat of a political campaign in the early fall of 1967 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), when speaking to an audience at the Lakehead. During the last session of the Legislature I think it became quite obvious, in many speeches from representatives of northern ridings, that this programme was completely inadequate, and we even have the Prime Minister quoted as saying just that in this article:

Yesterday's announcement brings to almost $9 million the loans granted under the government's Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme. The programme was designed to encourage industry to settle in eastern and northern Ontario. But so far most loans have gone to the east. Loans committed to the north now total about $1.5 million. Eight projects have been assisted, compared with 51 in other parts of the province.

Premier John Robarts said last month that the government would study changes in the programme to make it more helpful to the north. Officials said yesterday that changes in the legislation setting up the fund have been drafted and are being put before Economics and Development Minister Stanley Randall for approval.

When you consider that not one new industry has been created in all of northwestern Ontario with the inauguration of these EIO or ODC loans, I think it is proof that any programme that has been instituted to date has been completely inadequate and completely ineffective. I think it is high time that the government started paying attention to what the hon. member for Sudbury refers to as the four fifths of the province, that is, everything lying north of the French River.

Between May and June of this year 120,000 were unemployed in Ontario. Proof of widespread poverty was well documented in the fifth annual report of the Economic Council of Canada. I could read many letters into the record from constituents who have requested that I find employment for them.

The former Registrar General, John Turner, once said that 23 per cent of the Canadian population are living in poverty. About one fifth of the people living in Ontario, Canada's richest province, are said to be poor.

I could also read into the record letters from constituents requesting clothing. This is a sad commentary on a government in the most affluent province in Canada. Very little progress has been made in relieving this problem. There is nothing in the Throne Speech to indicate that there will be any change during the coming year.

A recent meeting in Geraldton attended by Alexander Phillips, manager of the Northwestern Ontario Development Council, was a good indication of the feeling of neglect that is so prevalent in the north. People felt that communications between the Dominion and provincial governments and municipalities are very poor. Highways are deplorable, the railways almost unused unless there is an accident tying up other lines, mortgage and investment money very difficult to procure particularly in a mining town, and a one-industry town, of which we have a good many in northwestern Ontario.

It was stated that we, the people in the north, hope for some action as a result of the current study, other than allowing it to collect dust and cobwebs as have all the others. Now as you know, Mr. Speaker, there are about six or seven separate and independent studies going on in northern Ontario and one of them was announced just recently by the hon. Robert Andras and I would like to quote an article in the Port Arthur News Chronicle of September 23, 1968:

THE TUNE IS FAMILIAR

Port Arthur's member of the federal cabinet, Robert K. Andras, gave a teasing sort of a speech at the annual meeting of the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce at Dryden last week.

Mr. Andras told the representatives of the municipalities in northwestern Ontario that Jean Marchand, Minister of Regional Development, is directing one of the most important reviews of regional development policy ever undertaken and it was expected the new policy would affect northwestern Ontario directly.

Mr. Andras would not reveal any details of the policy but he freely admitted that it should move in the direction of fully recognizing the human, as well as the physical, resources of northern Ontario. "The essence of a regional development plan is the full and efficient use of all available resources as well as the narrowing of inter-regional disparities", he said.

The delegates to the associated chambers' meeting would certainly agree with what Mr. Andras said. They would have to, because that is what their representatives have been telling the Queen's Park and Ottawa year after year without, unfortunately, getting many results.

They pointed it out many times last year when it was pressed upon the federal government—formed by the party of which Mr. Andras is a member—that northwestern Ontario needed the advantages of being included in the federal government's designated area programme if it was going to have any chance to use its material and human resources to the best advantage.

But the federal government didn't agree. Northwestern Ontario's statistics just didn't fit the recondite federal formula for designated area advantages, no matter how precious the human and material resources might be.

The Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce has been keeping up the pressure on both the federal and provincial governments and it could be that, at last, there is something in the works. It could be, but after all this time the people of northwestern Ontario, who have had one hope after another raised and then dashed, will have to be shown before they believe.

Mr. Andras told his listeners that at present the government is short of data on the resources and a survey is now being conducted. Another survey? Ye gods!

Mr. Andras will probably excuse the good folks in this region if they claim to detect a disturbing familiarity in that old refrain and if they prefer to sit back and wait for some real developments before getting even moderately excited about any further political forecasts or promises.

Now that editorial, Mr. Speaker, is just another indication of the feeling of neglect that the people have been experiencing for a good many years in northwestern Ontario, and I serve notice on this government that if they do not busy themselves with looking after the needs of the people in northwestern Ontario, in a very real and meaningful way, then the people of Ontario—and not only in an electoral way—will take matters in their own hands.

But I need go no further than reiterate what the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) said in his Throne Speech contribution with regard to a study that was being conducted by the Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association looking into the feasibility of forming an 11th province. I do not think that anybody wants to see this happen and I suggest to this government that if the people of northwestern Ontario consider this to be the only alternative to the kind of neglect that they have experienced over the years in the north, I think they are prepared to take this action as a last resort.

Mr. Speaker, the time when elected representatives can sit idly by and let the law of the jungle dictate the course of development of this province has passed. Our people will no longer be content to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. They will no longer be satisfied with polluted lakes and rivers or holes in the ground as their fair share of the economic pie in this province. Natural resources belong to all the people of Ontario, not just those people, residents or non-residents, who happen to have enough ready capital for development.

Now this brings me to another subject—the northern tour that members of this Legislature went on. I think anybody who took the time to take this week-long tour of northern Ontario was quite impressed not only with what he saw when he went up there, but the genial and very efficient manner in which the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) and members of his department conducted the tour.

I think it gave everybody a bird's-eye view of what the wonderful potential is in the north and as the member for Thunder Bay—where we spent two full days looking at the potential—I personally would like to thank the Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, for the exposure that the area I happen to represent got before those members of the Legislature who availed themselves of the opportunity to go along.

It was last September when the 75 members of this Legislature spent a week in northwestern Ontario visiting Longlac, Geraldton, Sioux Lookout, Red Lake, Kenora, Fort Frances, Fort William, Port Arthur, Schreiber and White River. Accompanying elected members were several top-level government officials.

For many of these people it was their first opportunity to view on the spot our great stores of resources in our forests and mines. They also saw from the ground and from low-flying aircraft the beautiful scenery, with thousands of lakes and rivers, which could attract hundreds of thousands of tourists and millions of dollars into our provincial economy through the tourist industry.

Members who visited Longlac saw a company, the Kimberley-Clark Corporation, who have centred their woodlands operation around that community, making it possible for employees and their families to enjoy community life and such amenities that they are able to provide by the commuter method of operation. This company, by a proper method of harvesting, are operating a sawmill which produces in excess of 20 million board feet of lumber each year, selling tree-length poles to other companies and making plywood bolts available to a plywood firm in Longlac. They also maintain a fine tree nursery from which they raise over 1.5 million seedlings each year for their forestation programme.

They maintain a network of good roads, most of which are used by the public for hunting and fishing. They have even built a park on McKay Lake for the public use, complete with picnic tables and toilet facilities. This, Mr. Speaker, is a perfect example of proper forest management and the multiple use concept of our wilderness areas.

They have a very attractive community at Terrace Bay which is the site of the pulp mill. The only thing lacking in this entire operation is a finishing mill where the manufacturing of all sorts of paper products would double the work force and make for a more viable economy in the area.

However, all pulp and paper companies do not operate in this manner. We have the town of Beardmore where Domtar and Abitibi do a great deal of their cutting. Instead of Beardmore being a viable and thriving community, it is slowly dying. If these companies operated in a responsible manner, making maximum use of forest reserves and of all species, Beardmore could be a thriving community with either a sawmill, a plywood or particle board plant—or maybe even all three.

On the northern tour, members saw the town of Geraldton, which depends to a large extent on a gold mine which is now operating on a salvage basis. This town, although just a little over 30 years old, will surely fade away if action is not taken by this government to assure these people that resources in the area are developed before it is too late. Services such as water, telephone, hydro, investments in small businesses, schools, hospitals, churches, libraries and private homes, representing expenditures of millions of dollars, will be abandoned while other towns are sure to spring up in a few years only a few miles away where these services will have to be duplicated at greatly inflated costs. If entrepreneurs are not willing to develop these resources, they should revert to the Crown and be developed by a Crown corporation.

It was most unfortunate that members were not exposed to life on some of our Indian reserves and settlements while on their tour of the north.

An hon. member: Some of us were.

Mr. Stokes: Some were, on their own in little sidetrips, but we did not stay and have an organized trip to them just to see life as it really is on the reserves. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that had this taken place, we would have no further bickering or buck-passing about who has the responsibility for assisting our native Canadians.

I would just like to quote from a couple of articles. One of them appeared in the Port Arthur Chronicle on September 26 with a dateline of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, and it says:

Indians with Grade 1 education and a two-day first aid course have been dispensing drugs in northern Ontario with sometimes fatal results, a former Indian school principal said Wednesday. Mr. St. Jacques, former principal of the Kasabonika Lake Settlement school, 350 miles north-east of Winnipeg—

And that happens to be in Thunder Bay Riding—

—blamed the federal government and said that there had been several cases of sick Indians dying after treatment by these “lay-medical dispensers”. He said no death certificates were issued.

“All the evidence of what we have been trying to prevent and bring to a stop has been buried with them,” he told a service club meeting. “Neither ourselves, nor anyone else will ever be able to tell what happened to them.” Mr. St. Jacques said nurses used to be flown to northern settlements once a month to treat the sick.

"But last year, without notification of any kind our clinics were gradually cut back and even though we asked repeatedly for an explanation none was ever given."

Instead, he said, the federal government selected a person from each community to act as a lay-medical dispenser. Their people were flown to Sioux Lookout for a two-day first aid course and then sent back.

Some were persons that could not read or write English.

"You can well imagine the situation," Mr. St. Jacques said. "There was an Indian lay-dispenser with a Grade 1 education and a two-day first aid course being given the responsibility, and indeed being paid by the federal government, to hand out these dangerous drugs. The result, he said, was pitiful.

The person was responsible for the administration of powerful drugs to the sick—drugs he did not know a thing about; drugs which resembled candies.

Mr. St. Jacques, now on a leave of absence and living in Sault Ste. Marie, said that in bringing the situation to light, he was jeopardizing his job and throwing away 20 years of experience.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you get conditions like this existing in Ontario, right within our border, to citizens whom we like to call residents of Ontario, I think it is high time that this government stopped bickering with Ottawa about whose responsibility it was for looking after the needs of all people of Ontario. I think that without looking any further you can start with the Indian people up on our many reserves and settlements right up in northern Ontario.

Another indictment of this government with regard to the handling of Indians appears in the September 23 issue of the Fort William Times-Journal, and the dateline is London. It says:

The president of the Ontario division of the Indian Eskimo Association Saturday night accused the Ontario government of failing to recognize that Indians have a special status because of their treaty rights.

In a prepared speech before delegates to the association's annual meeting, Rev. John A. Mackenzie of Toronto said that the stated position of the provincial government is "to recognize Indians as one of the many ethnic groups, but to treat them the same as all other groups".

He said the province wants to integrate Indians into Ontario society but fails to recognize that almost all other ethnic groups come from a western culture, whereas Indians have a qualitatively different and perhaps unique cultural heritage.

The first step toward progress is the unequivocal recognition of these differences, which includes the recognition of a special status for Indians because of their treaty rights.

The Indian Eskimo Association has informed the government that it believes that the community development should be removed from direct government control, and a Crown corporation be set up which would be administered in ways which are considered or consistent with the values system of the Indians in Ontario.

Mr. Mackenzie said that another problem arises from the fact that some community development officers continue to operate out of the offices which administer the welfare programme.

These officers, members of the provincial Indian development branch of The Department of Social and Family Services, are identified in the minds of the people as having a particular task which is related to welfare. This places them in a position whereby they cannot relate freely to all aspects of community life.

Mr. Speaker, one matter regarding Indians has had widespread attention in the last few weeks and I would just like to shed some light on it for the edification of this government and this House.

It refers specifically to the town of Armstrong.

I am quite sure that had this taken place we would have no further bickering or buck-passing about who has the responsibility for assisting our native Canadians.

Here was a case, Mr. Speaker, where about 30 treaty Indian families squatted on Crown land on the edge of the unorganized community of Armstrong. There is a radar base about a mile and a half east of the town operated by The Department of National Defence. Children of employees and service personnel on the base were sent to the local school and the cost of their education was subsidized by grants from that department.

There are several Indian children attending the same school but unfortunately there is not enough room to accommodate all of them. This meant that about 35 children were forced to get their education in Sioux Lookout, Geraldton, and the Lakehead and these children were separated from their parents for the school term as many of them could not afford to return home at Christmas and Easter. The Department of Indian Affairs paid the tuition for children sent away but would not make the necessary funds available for an addition to the school at Armstrong. The Department of Education would have no part of it as they said it was a federal responsibility.

The Ontario Human Rights Commission laid charges of discrimination against the local school board. I have met the local board, both individually and collectively, and have been assured that they are most anxious to provide these facilities for these children. Unfortunately, Armstrong being unorganized, is unable to raise the necessary revenues to construct these facilities. The only industry in the community is the CNR, which is exempt from school taxes.

Here we have a group of dedicated local residents sitting on a school board getting criticism for something over which they have absolutely no control. They are being criticized from all sides, creating a very bad situation among people in this community while those responsible argue about who is going to get on with the job. It appears that The Department of Indian Affairs is going to provide the necessary capital to provide accommodation for the next school year, September 1969, but I thought, just to shed some light on it, and with all the adverse publicity that has been given to this story over the CBC and in the news media, that it was time that somebody told the story as it really is and got the local Armstrong board off the hook for being criticized for something over which they had no control.

Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that as a result of the members' tour through the northwest and the annual visits to Toronto made by the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce and the Thunder Bay Municipal Association, the Throne Speech would have contained something more positive. The Throne Speech contained really nothing that indicated to the people of northwestern Ontario that this government was even remotely concerned about the problems in that part of Ontario. If they had said something that would indicate that this government was aware of our problems and was prepared to take action, I am sure that the reaction of people in northwestern Ontario would have been much more favourable than it is at the present time.

Transportation and communication, along with a realistic roads-to-resources programme, should have been given top priority. There was no mention of this at all. A plan of assistance to Indians through the establishment of small Crown corporations oriented to resource based industries in areas near Indian settlements and communities would have provided at least a background or some semblance of a viable, economic unit from which an Indian band or settlement could operate.

I must here pay tribute to the only department of this government which is attempting to do something on behalf of the Indians. It is not general knowledge. You would think that if anything is being done in a meaningful way by this government that it would be through The Department of Health or The Department of Social and Family Services, or the Ontario Development Corporation, or Financial and Commercial Affairs, or Education.

This is not being done at all by any of these departments. Ironically enough, the only department in this government which is really genuinely concerned about the welfare and the well being of Indians is The Department of Lands and Forests. I had occasion to tour many reservations in northern Thunder Bay, and indeed one in Kenora riding, and I got a very good idea of just what The Department of Lands and Forests was trying to do to encourage the Indian people to accept the kind of employment that is provided by this department. It is bending over backwards to assist them in any way possible, both in its reforestation programmes and in its park programmes, and it even went out of its way to do whatever is possible in the way of road building and helping them market their furs, and a good many other aspects of daily life as the Indian sees it in northern Ontario.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer briefly to another problem that exists in northern Ontario with regard to access roads. We do have an access road programme that at one time was jointly sponsored and, of course, underwritten by the federal and provincial governments. Unfortunately, with the federal government withdrawing from this programme, we were left with a budget of $500,000 to try, in some way, to convince the people of Ontario that we were in any real sense maintaining a realistic programme in this regard. The total of $500,000, Mr. Speaker, is just a drop in the bucket to provide access to the huge resources, both in the forest products industries and the mining industries, that we have in the northern part of this province.

The Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle), the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett), the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld), and I believe the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), are on a special committee that was set up to administer this fund. If you talk to any one of them I think they will tell you that the kind of money that is being made available is completely inadequate for the job. I think that The Department of Highways has been abdicating its responsibility in this regard.

When you consider many of our isolated areas where children have to be transported daily by school bus to attend school some 20 and 30 miles away, everybody is looking askance at The Department of Lands and Forests and saying, "Well what are you going to do about it?" because it's the only agency of this government which is represented in the area on a continuing basis, and of course it bears the brunt of the criticism.

Mr. Speaker, criticism for the inaction, the apathy, the lack of concern for people and their transportation out to schools, is the responsibility of The Department of Highways, and they have abdicated their responsibility in this regard for far too long.

When you consider the road off Highway 17 west of White River into the Indian reservation at Mobert, which a good many of us had occasion to see during our brief fishing trip on White Lake, here you have a road where the driving conditions are deplorable; where the parents are afraid to send their children over a bridge that spans a fast-moving river.

Nobody in this government seems to take any responsibility for its repair and upkeep. I know The Department of Lands and Forests is quite concerned about the situation, but this government does not seem to be concerned about it; certainly The Department of Highways is not concerned about it.

Another road that I have brought to the attention of the Minister is the highway between Nipigon and Cameron Falls, where Ontario Hydro has hydro generating installations and facilities at Cameron Falls and Pine Portage. I have called his attention to the fact that this road is in a very hazardous condition. About a year ago he said it was on their list and while it was not given top priority, it was definitely on their list.

I asked him a question a short while ago in this House and he said that he had a survey made of the number of accidents on this road and it said that it was not any more dangerous than any other road in the province of Ontario. Now if this is the criterion that The Department of Highways is going to use and say, "Well prove to us that X number of people have been killed on a given stretch of highway, then maybe we will take action," I think that the department has a very twisted sense of values.

I would invite him to take a drive over that road where you can be driving along and you come smack dab right up in front of one of these great big hydro towers and you have to slow down to about ten miles an hour to make a right-angle turn and go off on another tangent. They even have the gall to call it a highway; I think it is numbered 585 or something like that.

Now this is the kind of inaction that is responsible, to a large extent, for my being here. If the government persists in ignoring the problems that confront people in northern Ontario, I think you know what the consequences will be and I think the member for Kenora—

Mr. L. Bernier (Kenora): Speak for the Thunder Bay riding, not Kenora.

Mr. Stokes: I am speaking for Kenora because I get the odd problem from people in Kenora too, and I get the feeling that there is the same sense of frustration exists in Kenora riding—

Mr. Bernier: Well, even the hon. member was pleasantly surprised at the condition of our highways during his visit to our area.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I saw the ads that were in the paper, too.

Mr. Stokes: Is the hon. member proud of the highways that we have in northern Ontario?

Mr. Bernier: In my riding, yes.

Mr Stokes: Take a look at the highway between Highway 17 and Manitowadge.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I thought the hon. member thought they all should travel by railroad.

Mr. Stokes: Which?

Mr. Nixon: Is the hon. member not a railroad man?

Mr. Stokes: I am a railroad man but there are not too many trains to travel any more; we have to rely on highway travel. If the leader of the Opposition thinks they have trains in northern Ontario just try to get a reservation home for Christmas.

Now this is just a clear indication, Mr. Speaker, that the people in northern Ontario have had just about enough. I think that if this government is really concerned about the welfare and the well-being of all people in Ontario—they really are not—there is an awful lot of elbow room for the kind of programmes that will demonstrate to the people in northern Ontario that this government really cares. If you really want to know the mechanics of it all—how it should be accomplished; what should be given top priority, sir, in spite of what the member for Kenora said, I think that the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight), the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid), the member for Sudbury and certainly for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) and Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson), and I will even invite the member for Fort William if he is so disposed, to sit down with various governmental departments and we will tell them what should be done in northern Ontario.

An hon. member: Jim will not be there. Everything is all cosy up there.

Mr. Stokes: No, I was quite edified at some of the remarks that the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) made in his seconding the motion on the Speech from the Throne. He took a little more moderate and temperate view of what was required in the north than he did last year. I think maybe he has been bruised a little.

Yes I think he has mellowed a little bit and I think maybe the newspapers and their reaction to what he said last session maybe tempered his praise of this government. I think he is becoming a little more realistic. He is even telling the government now that, well maybe there are a few things that you have not done in the north and I think this is all to the good.

So that I would invite even the member for Fort William to sit down with us and—in a united way instead of a bickering petty small way—I think maybe if we all sat down and discussed our mutual problems—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How can you unite absentees?

Mr. Stokes: —I think that quite possibly—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stokes: —I think that quite possibly, at long last, this government might get sitting down and talking about the problems in the north and some of their solutions in a much more realistic way.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my sincere and humble best wishes to you, and in particular, to his honour, the Lieutenant-Governor of the province in this second session of the 28th Parliament of Ontario. The appointment of a new Lieutenant-Governor focuses our attention upon the role of the Crown in our Canadian heritage.

Mr. Speaker, during these days when it is fashionable in some quarters to advocate republicanism and anti-monarchical sentiment in Canada, I feel led to say a few words on the Crown. I personally maintain that silence to this form of talk gives consent. How alien to the views of that renowned Canadian statesman, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, have been the statements of certain members of his party made in this assembly on the monarchy. Similar expressions have been expressed in resolutions advocating republicanism from Young Liberal Association meetings combined with the fact that no reference was made to Her Majesty, the Queen from the recent Speech from the Throne in our federal Parliament. Recently a Toronto columnist stated:

In the 20th century it may certainly appear an anachronism, but over the long years it has proven an institution invaluable to the exercise of an effective parliamentary system.

This province is truly a cultural mosaic of peoples of various racial and religious backgrounds. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, whatever symbols or measures that we as parliamentarians can uphold that will serve as a unifying force in our country, are worthy of being maintained. Similarly I cannot help but feel that the Commonwealth could serve an even greater role in bringing about world peace and social justice in our many areas.

Mr. Speaker, as has already been enumerated by our leader, the chief objective of this government is to improve the quality of life in the 1970s. I would say that it is in the area of the battle on air and water pollution that we have the challenge to make one of the greatest advances. I personally believe that in the interests of greater efficiency and environmental progress, we would do well to take under consideration the merger of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and the air pollution control service, as now operated under the environmental health branch of The Ontario Department of Health. The new body could quite well be named "the air and water quality control commission", or "the pollution commission".

Whether the pollution is caused by a pulp and paper mill or a steel plant, I find it most natural that the same inspector visiting the said plant have the powers to measure its air and water pollution, as their measurements are done in the same order, and their measurement involves the same magnitude of pollutants, and chemical analysis.

Now is the time to consolidate our attack on these two serious threats to our environment under one commission. I find it most discouraging that the federal government has not come forward with strong national air and water quality control legislative programmes. If Ontario industries are to install the necessary quality control devices, then they should not be at a disadvantage in their competition with competitors in other provinces, where pollution measures are not as stringent as those in Ontario.

Similarly, international action is urgently needed to curb those cities and industries on the American side of our Great Lakes water-way that are guilty of flagrant water and air pollution. This was certainly reinforced to the members of this assembly who took part in the recent members' tour of northwestern Ontario, when we flew over Rainy River and the International Falls, Michigan, area and saw the emissions of air pollution belching forth from the pulp mill on the American side of the border.

Mr. Speaker, I know that equipment for air and water quality control is expensive and costly. However, I believe that government, whether at the provincial or federal level, could do much to aid air and water quality control by creating tax incentives for industry desirous of installing pollution control equipment, especially since the same equipment needed to do the job is required by plants of different sizes and different capacities. I do not know if all the members of this House are aware or not, that the only form of tax concession now being received by companies such as Dofasco and Stelco to encourage them to accelerate their fight on pollution is a form of tax consideration on capital expenditures for water pollution control installations only.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) to consider making representation to the federal government to extend the same tax consideration to air pollution control installation as well as to the supply required to operate and maintain all of these pollution control installations.

I am pleased that the steel industries of Hamilton are making a positive contribution from their wealth, which stems from the development and use of our nature's bounty, in the cause of air and water quality control. Over the past eight years Stelco in Hamilton, has spent $60 million on its air and water quality control programme. Other projects involving expenditures of almost $1 million are under construction at the present time.

In a working effort to improve the environment in which it operates, Dofasco in Hamilton has since 1960, spent $6.6 million to control air pollution and approximately $5.3 million to control water pollution in our city. This includes electrostatic precipitators; foundry dust collection, and a dust collection system for the four Dofasco basic oxygen furnaces.

Water pollution control installations include a slurry removal system, hot mill scale collection system, and a phenol removal system, and plants to remove ammonium, sulphate, and hydrogen sulphide from the water. Several other pollution control projects are under way now, and built-in pollution control equipment is planned for the installations included in Dofasco's currently million dollar expansion programme.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these statistics are proof that our major industrial giants in Hamilton are making positive steps in their attack on their pollution problems.

Our universities and technological colleges should be challenged to join this crusade against pollution. Industry and government could do far more in providing research grants and fellowships for the area of air and water quality control study. The major breakthroughs that can be achieved through engineering are perhaps typified by Canada's first hydrochloric acid regeneration plant installed at the Hilton works of The Steel Company of Canada at a cost of $2 million. This was certainly a major breakthrough in water pollution control.

However, Mr. Speaker, let us be mindful that these new measures and techniques are non-productive, nor do they safeguard jobs in the community. This has been well summed up by Dr. J. A. Vance, chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, who has recently praised industry for the way in which many industries are attacking the problem of water quality control:

There has been a definite improvement in industries' attitude and actions concerning the quality of water emissions from industrial processes over the last five years. There are still some problems to be solved, but I must give credit where credit is due. Stelco is making good progress, and has the spirit of co-operation with the OWRC second to none.

Mr. Speaker, I was most encouraged last year by the stand taken by the Ontario resources commission when it pressured the corporation of Hamilton to revise its capital spending budget and to re-insert the $15 million earmarked for a secondary sewage treatment plant which the city had dropped from its five year capital estimates.

The water pollution of Hamilton Bay is surely one of the most serious areas of water pollution in Ontario. At present the city discharges its raw sewage 50 per cent untreated, making, in effect, Hamilton a larger polluter than any bay-front industry.

The secondary sewage treatment plant is an utmost necessity for a city of Hamilton's size. It will cut that pollution to five per cent. Now the planning for the construction stages of this secondary sewage treatment facility has been accelerated. This year, the engineering work for the plant got under way, and the plant should be under construction by 1970.

The city of Hamilton's submission to the federal task force on housing as found on page 10 of their brief stated:

We feel that the correction of pollution problems is a national problem and a national responsibility. The federal government should assume these responsibilities and let the cities get on with the job of providing the services required for a rapidly growing community.

Such a step forward would be relatively easy to police and administer, and it would be easy to define. This does not involve the federal government into the business of municipal government, but only in the removal of a national problem. Not only public opinion, but our future health depends upon greater financial assistance to the municipalities for these installations.

Mr. Speaker, the area of rapid transportation is one which is of great concern to those of us who live in the Hamilton, Burlington and Toronto metropolitan areas. This progressive government was forward in its thinking when it instituted the GO-transit system. However, I believe that the already excellent economic viability of the GO-transit system could be even further improved with minor changes which would further service our total area of half a million population and in adjacent areas of several hundred thousand.

At present, the majority of people in the Hamilton area are unable to make use of the facilities to any degree. I would agree, Mr. Speaker, that in this time of financial consolidation, it is good business to make maximum use of existing facilities generating from them maximum revenues and service.

At present, Hamilton and area are linked into the system by only two early morning departures and two evening arrivals. May I suggest that while these trains are useful for a few, they have little attraction for the vast majority of our area residents who might use the system under other conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) the real need for the GO-transit system to conduct a market research survey in the Hamilton and Burlington area. I am convinced that there is an available market of persons in our community who are most anxious to use this service. Drivers using the Queen Elizabeth Way between Hamilton and Toronto are finding the traffic increasing at a steady rate. Indeed, the heavy transport and bus lines presently using this highway have made it a motorist's nightmare.

I am pleased that the hon. Minister has met with a delegation of the Hamilton chamber of commerce, the hon. member for Hamilton West and myself to hear the chamber's brief for a further extension of service to Hamilton. We desperately need the addition of two later trains as soon as possible.

For the long term future of the GO-system I would like to urge further exploration of their proposal to bring the system to downtown Hamilton, terminating at the T. H. and B. station. It might well be that future developments may allow that the correction of trackage problems now existing at the Bay-view junction might allow the use of this facility.

If this is not the case, Mr. Speaker, and the projected traffic figures of the CNR and T. H. and B. Railway prove this to be so, then I would urge the hon. Minister of Highways to sit down with the federal Minister of Transport and the railways to work out the necessary financing for an additional rail-line—railway tracks from Burlington into the T. H. and B. Railway station.

Mr. Speaker, as a member from Hamilton, I was encouraged to hear in the Throne Speech that there will be new proposals to institute regional government in various areas of this province where sufficient study has been completed. I was encouraged by the establishment of the regional government in the Ottawa-Carleton area, and more recently the developments for the Lakehead regional government.

The Hamilton area was designated some time ago as a possible regional area suitable for regional government, and thus this government established the Steele commission to study all aspects of this possibility.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) too strongly the urgent need for regional government in the Hamilton-Burlington-Wentworth county area. I am convinced that public opinion is far ahead of the government on this particular issue. Already the Hamilton children's aid, the Hamilton-Wentworth Catholic Children's Aid Society and board of health are functioning on a Hamilton-Wentworth county basis.

Our geographical area was once known as the head of the lakes and, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it is my sincere opinion that any regional government for this area should include Hamilton, Burlington and Wentworth county as one regional geographical and economic unit.

The harbour, which some people think separates our two major municipalities, I maintain, joins both Hamilton and Burlington into one region. Any decision for regional government in our region should be premised on the need for a planning area where the majority of the inhabitants work and live. And, Mr. Speaker, I would maintain that this qualifies for the Hamilton and Burlington municipalities.

This regional government, in the final analysis, should be created to best serve the people from a financial and economic position. I maintain that the two communities are so linked as to be so that they are fully interdependent one upon the other, whether everyone recognizes the fact or not.

Perhaps this can best be seen in the present housing needs of our area. Burlington, with its lower industrial assessment, several years ago created a residential-development imposed tax to curb residential housing developments in their community—while Hamilton has put forward no such scheme.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain this situation is utter madness on its original basis and is working against the best interests of our region. When we have one community such as Burlington with adequate serviceable land attempting to stop residential development, while Hamilton, which because of its geographical peculiarities with its mountain, is finding it increasingly more difficult to extend services to the south of Hamilton mountain, and while all this is taking place, our industries are continually creating new job opportunities, with the resulting need for more housing accommodation in our region.

Forty to 50 per cent of the labour force in Burlington work in Hamilton, and an increasingly larger proportion of Hamilton people now work in plants which have moved from Hamilton to Burlington—for example, the Hoover Company. If we are to improve the quality of life in the 70s for the head of the lakes, let us have a regional government that includes Burlington, Wentworth county and Hamilton areas.

This government has been wise in instituting many studies relating to the future developments of this province, and surely one of the most imaginative must be MTARTS study which projected startling growth patterns of our area to the turn of the century. I was very pleased to hear the statement of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs recently, dealing with municipal governments.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge every member of this House not to turn their backs on our cities. We cannot afford to abandon our cities. If a regional government is formed at the head of the lakes, without Burlington, we would be guilty of shutting the door on Hamilton. I hope the day will soon arrive when we have a Hamilton, Burlington, Wentworth regional government.

It is my earnest hope that the municipal politicians of our region will rise above any parochial attitudes that they might be harbouring and see the great potential of this great industrial region in the future development and destiny of this great province.

Those of use who represent the urban regions in this province are well aware of the housing needs in our various cities. If we are to improve the quality of life in our province. We must begin with basic units of the family and its shelter. Much was said during the last session of this House regarding the housing crisis. However, I would like to compliment the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) for the strides that the Ontario Housing Corporation is making by providing more housing for families, senior citizens and students in our area.

As a Canadian citizen, I have noticed, with interest, the great fanfare and harangues that accompanied the federal Hellyer task force on housing about which, Mr. Speaker, I know the members of this House will be interested to hear that initially this body refused even to visit the great industrial city of Hamilton, and it was not until almost "all the king's horses, and all the king's men" brought political pressure to bear on the federal government that it did acquiesce to send three junior members of this task force to hear the city of Hamilton's brief. And I understand that two of the members of this committee only paid the city the briefest of visits. However, out of this visit to Hamilton came a very interesting and worthwhile submission from the Hamilton City Council Task Force Submission Committee, and I would like to share, with the members of the House, one of the key recommendations on page 11 of its submission.

A fresh new approach is required co-operatively among the three levels of government to prevent serviceable land from being withheld from the market at the whim of a subdivider, that is to say, lands to which trunk sewer and water facilities have been constructed.

We know there are many reasons why an owner of serviceable lands may choose not to develop those lands. These include his tax position, the fact that he wishes to keep a store of land available for progressive development over the next four or five years within his company. It may just be that he wishes to participate in creating a shortage so as to profit from inflation.

This is not an acceptable situation! It deprives the community, which has spent substantial sums of money to produce the trunk services, from the development of those lands.

It is our view that the three levels of government co-operating should indicate to the land-holders in the path of development of trunk services, that unless they develop those lands within a reasonable period of time and register a plan of subdivision, the governments will expropriate those lands, and put them onto the market. This will prevent a land-holder, or group of land-holders, from creating an artificial shortage of service land in the face of very high government expenditures which have been made for trunk sewers.

Mr. Speaker, I wish, not only as a member of the Hamilton council, but as a member of this House, to associate myself most strongly with this very positive recommendation. I know that it is very easy to be critical of the housing programme of this government. Nevertheless, I would like to put on the record just what has been done by Ontario Housing in the city of Hamilton, as I believe that during the past few years we have had some action.

Since its formation in 1964, the Ontario Housing Corporation has been extremely active in the city of Hamilton. At the present time there are 1,712 public housing units under administration in 14 Hamilton housing projects, or which eight were initiated by Ontario Housing Corporation. The latest of these is a 159-unit family housing project, which has just been occupied, the 91-unit Cotton Mills family housing project, which is under construction and should be ready for occupancy by mid-1969, and construction is about to start on the 76-unit row housing project on Montcalm Drive in the riding of Wentworth.

The corporation has made tremendous strides in overcoming the lack of suitable rental housing for senior citizens in Hamilton. No fewer than 954 senior citizen housing units are under construction in two downtown projects, and plans for another 199 units, to be located in the vicinity of Wellington and Rebecca Streets, are nearing completion. Occupancy of the largest of the three senior citizen projects, the 557-unit high-rise development at Hess and Jackson Streets, two blocks west of the City Hall, will begin in January. Construction on the 397-unit high-rise senior citizen project, located one block south of the City Hall, is well advanced.

Ontario Housing Corporation introduced public housing for Hamilton senior citizens with a 40-unit project back in 1965, and followed up with the 146-unit Kenneth David Soble Towers last year. When the current projects are completed, Hamilton will have a total of 1,329 public housing rental units for its senior citizens, and another 1,693 family housing units. The combined total of 3,028 family and senior citizen units will make Hamilton second only to Metropolitan Toronto in the volume of public housing under administration.

The extent of the need for additional Housing Corporation senior citizen and family housing in Hamilton will not be known until completion of the corporation's survey of the city. The survey is now in its final stages and should be ready for Hamilton City Council shortly.

If anyone had doubts about the need for serviced lots in Hamilton, those doubts were certainly dispelled on November 28 when Ontario Housing Corporation made 147 lots available for sale or lease under the land development programme of the Home Ownership Made Easy plan. Over 200 persons lined up, in rain, at the Rolston neighbourhood south of Mohawk Road, and the 147 lots were snapped up in just under three hours. That works out to a rate of one lot being marketed every three minutes.

The land development programme to date produced a total of 286 serviced building lots, and 10 acres of serviced land. It is expected that the remaining serviced lots on Hamilton Mountain will be marketed by Ontario Housing Corporation in time for spring construction. The corporation, in conjunction with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation holds 798.5 acres of unserviced land within the city of Hamilton for future housing development. In addition, initial planning has started on Ontario Housing Corporation's over-1,500-acre land assembly in Saltfleet and Binbrook townships beyond the Hamilton city limits.

An important aspect of the HOME plan is the provision of student housing. At McMaster University, the Ontario Student Housing Corporation has started construction on accommodation for 750 single students. Preliminary planning is underway for an additional 250 units.

I think that we might be wise to pay greater attention to the sociological and cultural aspects of our various housing projects for families. I am particularly thinking of the need for pre-school nursery facilities in some of our larger developments for the use of working mothers, and for small recreational type facilities, such as has been built into the Ken Soble towers in Hamilton for senior citizens, where citizens can assemble for passive and active recreational activities.

In our area the problem of landlord-tenant rights is certainly one of the most pressing areas of concern. At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would like to publicly state that there are both good and bad landlords, and tenants. It is rather unfortunate that in this area of landlord-tenant rights, we as elected officials, are so often compelled to bring forward the injustices suffered by tenants, while at the same time so often overlooking the progressive and positive steps being taken by associations such as the UDI in Toronto.

I look with anticipation to the recommendations in the report to be shortly given to this House by the Ontario Law Reform Commission regarding The Landlord-Tenant Act.

Almost 20 per cent of the constituents in my riding live in high rise apartment developments, and in these days when most families spend a minimum of 30 per cent of their monthly income for shelter, I find it incredible that under the present legislation the tenants of our province have basically no rights whatever. I think it is somewhat of an anachronism. For example, in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, there is a section that exists to look after stuffed articles entitled "The Stuffed Articles Section", while complaints regarding security deposits and such are handled under the general title, the all embracing title, of "Consumer Protection Bureau".

Mr. Speaker, I intend to fight for legislation that will protect the tenants and landlords of our province, and whose rights can be governed by a "Landlord-Tenants Protection Bureau" under The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

One of the greatest needs for the tenants of this province is some standard form of compulsory lease. Many tenants are presently unable to secure a lease, and even if they might obtain such a document, it has so many loophole provisions to protect the landlord, that it completely erodes tenant rights. The recent basic shelter tax rebate strongly pointed this fact out, when countless numbers of landlords simply increased their monthly rent in order to recover the shelter tax rebate which morally is completely contrary to the spirit of the legislation; nevertheless possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would maintain that this legislation as it affects tenants actually, "sets many of them up like clay-pigeons" for the landlords of this province. I would like to share with the hon. members of this House the letter which I received recently from a tenant in one of the Garden View Properties Limited, located at 293 Upper Wentworth Street, in Hamilton, which states:

Dear Sir or Madam:

Due to the new Ontario legislation of assessing, collecting of taxes and further rebating of taxes, we, the management, have no other alternative than to increase the rent of apartments. As we the management do not believe in this form of taxing and rebating of taxes we are, in conjunction with the Metropolitan Hamilton Apartment Owners Association, trying to have this legislation removed.

I would like to state here, Mr. Speaker, this particular owner is not a member of the Hamilton Metropolitan Apartment Owners Association. Nevertheless, it shows the length to which some apartment owners will go in order to try and justify rent increases.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this particular developer had already raised the rents earlier this year in order to cover a rise in the municipal mill rate.

Similarly, Dorchar Properties Limited raised its rents on October 31, for its tenants, with the excuse that this increase is due to the unexpected tax rebate law.

Mr. Speaker, such increases would not have been possible had there been a compulsory standard form of lease made mandatory across this province.

Secondly, I would like to suggest that there is an urgent need for a tenant rental review board which would act in the form of a landlord and tenants' ombudsman whenever disputes might arise. Such an ombudsman could very well be embodied in the creation of a landlord tenant bureau in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

And I should think that such a body could work to try and form a voluntary association of apartment owners and developers such as UDI in Toronto, and also assist apartment tenant associations in the execution of their function. Another area of jurisdiction for such a bureau would, of course, be the whole matter of security deposit legislation.

At the present time, hundreds of thousands of dollars are invested by landlords on their income from security deposits, and in many cases tenants do not receive any form of interest on their deposit, and furthermore when many tenants try to regain their security deposit at a termination of occupancy, they are faced with a legal battle as to its return, in whole, or in part.

I, personally, know of one apartment in Hamilton where a crack on the refrigerator door has been used as the excuse for the withholding of a good portion of the security deposit for the last three tenants who have occupied the said apartment. Such abuses could be strictly policed by a landlord-tenants' bureau.

I would call upon my fellow-members, who represent urban areas, to use their influence in bringing about reform in the whole area of landlord-tenant relationships. New legislation in this field would be a worthy climax to 1968, which has been designated as human rights year. I would wish to assure the member from the NDP that I have brought this before members of my caucus.

As a teacher, I am most pleased and elated about the developments which are taking place at the new Mohawk College of Applied Arts and Technology on Hamilton mountain. The college's new campus on Fennell Avenue is rapidly nearing its final completion. I have had the opportunity to visit Mohawk College, at its new location, on several occasions, and have been most impressed by the enthusiasm of its students and staff, where already 600 students are located on the Fennell Avenue campus out of a total enrollment of 1,700.

To date, the construction of the new campus is on target for full occupancy by September, 1969. The engineering consultant to the architect in charge has described the physical plant equipment at the mountain campus as "the most sophisticated in North America".

I would like to enumerate some of its unique features: the building is air-conditioned throughout; each laboratory has its individual air-conditioning unit; the textile laboratories are both air and dust controlled; the metrology laboratory has air showers to remove dust from clothing of personnel; other interesting aspects of the building, are the fact, that it has been designed to permit access for handicapped students including drinking fountains and washroom facilities. The complex will have five lecture theatres, each equipped with rear projection screens, as well as an auditorium that will seat 1,100 people.

Mr. Speaker, this institution has been named after a proud people, who have played such an important role in the history of our country. I am confident the students of Mohawk College are going to live up to this name. Already they have demonstrated their community involvement in their successful mini United Appeal campaigns this fall, which earned them the singular honour of a personal commendation from the Premier. Mohawk College is living proof that this government is doing something to improve the quality of education for young people and continuing students.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most exciting areas of development in the Hamilton area is the dynamic growth which is taking place on the campus of our McMaster University.

McMaster is presently in the process of building a $66 million health and science centre, which will include a 420-bed teaching hospital and medical school. The centre incorporates numerous allied facilities, including research laboratories, nursing education, and an extensive ambulatory clinic for primary and specialized aspects of patient care. It will be three years in construction.

Medical school enrolment is to commence in September of this year. The quality of health services in our province will be greatly enriched by these new facilities and the personnel that it will train.

The health facilities of our region are to be further enhanced by the construction of a $500,000 regional public health laboratory on the grounds of our Hamilton psychiatric hospital on Mount Hamilton. These new facilities will serve the laboratory needs of doctors, official health agencies, and The Department of Agriculture and Food throughout the Niagara peninsula.

As a past member of the Hamilton board of health, I can appreciate the service that this will provide, and in particular to our local hospitals, doctors, and our regional board of health, as it will provide on-the-spot facilities where doctors can send their swabs and blood tests for analysis. Needless to say, this facility would provide a faster and more flexible service than the present arrangements whereby all samples are sent to Toronto.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, Hamilton is coming of age, and I can see in the not too distant future, that we could very well become one of the major medical centres on this continent.

Much has already been said in this House regarding the Hall-Dennis report on the aims and objectives of education in the schools of Ontario. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make mention of Mr. Donald W. Muir, of Mount Hamilton, who was the deputy chairman of the committee. Mr. Muir is one of the outstanding members of our community, and one of those exceptional persons who has many talents and gifts, whether it is in his role as the assistant personnel manager of The Steel Company of Canada; or in his capacity as a member of the advisory vocational committee, Hamilton board of education; or in his many active roles in community involvement—Donald Muir is the most gifted gentleman.

I consider it a particular honour for the city of Hamilton to have had Mr. Muir play such an important role in the preparation of this exciting and forward-looking document.

I found the preface, "The Truth Shall Make You Free," a most appropriate title. I also found it very interesting that by coincidence this very report "Living and Learning" was submitted to this House in this year, when our members of our Japanese community are celebrating the centennial of the Meiji restoration.

One hundred years ago, the Emperor Meiji proclaimed these words, "Knowledge shall be sought for in all parts of the world." As a teacher, I think this report has many worthwhile recommendations. However, I would just like to mention the recommendations under the heading of "library services", for in this area, Mr. Speaker, I believe our local board of education could provide far greater service to our community without any additional expenditures. The pupil grant for the purchase of library books is now making itself manifest in the creation of worthwhile libraries being established in the schools of our province.

The Hamilton Board of Education now has fine library facilities in almost all of its local elementary schools and all secondary schools.

However, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that really bother me is that many of the new schools are not designed so that the entrance and exits to these libraries can be reached without going through the entire building.

Several years ago the Hamilton Board of Education, and the Hamilton Department of Recreation made a major breakthrough in their design of joint recreational facilities and gymnasiums whereby school gymnasiums and other recreational facilities can be opened up to the public, and after school hours without any disturbance or entry through the main school plant facilities.

If we are to encourage our children to stay after school or return in the evenings and weekends for library reading, project research, homework, use of corral centres, TV replays or other cultural activities centred around the library, such as story times, musical recitals, and other cultural pursuits, and so on.

Let us open up our school libraries. I do not think that the Ontario Department of Education should authorize any grant to the school board that does not have its library so opened to the public whenever services are required.

Here is an area where parents and community organizations can play a vital role in the educational development of our young people by volunteering their services for off-hour supervision. Let us create local school policies from this level, which will provide greater access to school libraries in other than school hours. In communities such as Hamilton, we have opened the doors to the children for recreation in our schools in after hours. Now let us do the same in their areas of library services.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to observe the fact that it is approximately seven years ago that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) was sworn in as Ontario's first citizen. On October 25, 1961, he was elected leader of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party at that memorable meeting at Varsity Stadium. Some two weeks later, on November 8, 1961, he became Prime Minister of Ontario.

Since he assumed office, Ontario has undergone remarkable changes. Moving from the solid base, established by previous Progressive Conservative administrations, he has guided this province through a series of enlightened advances, that have made Ontario the flagship province, I believe, of Canada. In a mere seven years, he has achieved unique status in this country. He has become the catalyst of Confederation. A Canadian statesman of the first rank. A statesman who, in a brief seven years, has assured himself an important place in the history of Canada.

He seeks to harmonize provincial needs with those of the whole country. He seeks to harmonize relations between French and English Canada. And, Mr. Speaker, most important of all—he is achieving his high objectives.

I am reminded of some lines by Ben Johnson, in the 15th century, that well and truly apply to the Prime Minister:

That Kings, by their example, more do sway
Than by their power; and men do more obey

When they are led, than when they are compelled.

In all these knowing arts our Prince excelled . . .

Mr. Speaker, as a member elected for the first time last year, I look forward to the continuing guidance and wisdom of our leader, the hon. Prime Minister, for many more years to come.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the tribute to the Premier

(Mr. Robarts) as expressed by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith), but I must confess I was looking for St. John the Baptist across there.

In any event, sir, in rising for the third time in this House, without undue fetters, to speak, I want to convey to you if I might, my congratulations on the job that you have been doing in circumstances sometimes obviously difficult.

If I might make so bold, and I realize I do—because I doubt if there is anyone in this House less knowledgeable than I, obviously in connection with the rules of order and procedure—I do feel and I suggest this most respectfully to your high office, your Honour, that sometimes there are some of us who seem to regard the three words “point of order” as somewhat of an open sesame to carry on debate. Might I suggest, perhaps, the procedure of the federal House as laid down by the hon. Lucien Lamoreaux that the point of order be stated to the chair first and then a decision made, as to whether in point of fact it is a point of order. Then, we can at least carry on some semblance of order and continuity in connection with the debates.

Sir, the main thrust of my remarks tonight will be in connection with the Botrie case. That was the case that precipitated my attempt to lodge with this House, an Act to amend The Law Enforcement Compensation Act of 1967. Having regard to the hour and I must say that this is not, in my opinion, the most attractive hour to begin to digest something that requires some degree of concentration because it is a question of the application by a tribunal of words of great sensitivity and meaning, I will hold that until after the dinner hour, with your permission.

If I might just make a few remarks in connection with my year here in the House. I say this most sincerely, that a person recognizes the privilege and honour of being elected to this House but one cannot imagine the degree of camaraderie that envelopes us all, notwithstanding our particular partisan affiliation.

I had occasion to write what I considered this summer a rather strong letter to the hon. Premier of the province and I did mention there, the fact that we, each of us, are beholden to our parties and happily so. This, of course, is the cornerstone of the democratic process but really notwithstanding that, the majority of us do rid ourselves of this veneer of partisanship and do develop a true sense of fellowship with each other.

I will say, with respectful words of limitation, there are times that I have found that some of my colleagues on the other side, relatively close to home; when they pat me on the back I find a sharp sense of piercing between my shoulder blades and I wonder whether it is all in good fun. But it is most enjoyable, sir—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You always hurt the one you love.

Mr. Bullbrook: I must say it is really enjoyable. I cannot think in my wildest expectation that I would enjoy a day so much as I do on Fridays when I have the opportunity of driving back to Delaware where I let off my true friend and colleague, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Spence), because we all in this House recognize what a splendid gentleman he is, really, and we do enjoy ourselves, I must say. What we do, sir, is I start out driving and he sits in the back seat, and we go half way—

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): That is the way this House is run.

Mr. Bullbrook: We go half way and then I get into the back seat and he drives, and we go the rest of the way to Delaware. We don't speak to each other. What we are doing is practising being Cabinet Ministers. That is the purpose of that really. But that man has a great deal of acumen, I mean that. I am going to get into the question of the spend-thrift aspects of this government, but this gentleman from Kent has a great deal of acumen, because, I want to tell you something else.

The other day we were driving and it was really a bad day for driving and a car passed us, a chauffeur-driven car. I said "Is that the Prime Minister?" and the hon. member for Kent corrected me and said, "No, it is the Premier". And I said, "It is hard to tell from behind, because we look at his face so much. Maybe in three years when we are probably in the rump and he is in the Opposition, we will know his back a little more and we will know who it is who is passing." In any event, we had quite a discussion. I said to my colleague, "What kind of car is that?" and he said, "I don't know, but I can tell you one thing, it is not a Volkswagen." So it should be, that is the way it should be.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): It is an Ontario-made car.

Mr. Bullbrook: On a serious note, the one thing I have really noticed in connection with our duties, functions and responsibilities in this House is the lack of amenities that we enjoy as members. I suggest to you that the government, in sincerity and in those words of a predecessor of the Premier, "in the fulness of time," are going to do something about it. But it is a shocking situation.

We are elected to represent something in the neighbourhood of 70,000 people, and it is time that there flowed from this House some idea of the fact that essentially we are public servants. It is coming through to me every day, as one entertains 20 calls on a Saturday and a Sunday, that essentially you are a public servant, and how you can possibly be expected to responsibly carry out those duties sharing an office with six other members, albeit fine gentlemen, with no degree of privacy and with secretarial availability of the worst kind. And I do not mean so far as talent is concerned, these ladies are dedicated ladies, but how can you expect three to four to five girls to undertake the dictation work of 28 members of this House.

I suggest this to you: money that would be well spent in the public interest and in the interest of our individual constituents would be money spent for the allocation to each member of this House of a secretary. That is the essential ingredient. The day of the pool resource is finished. This government recognizes as well as we do that this is no longer a glorified county council, when you are spending over $3 billion. Surely to goodness you can apply, as I say, these significant amenities.

One other thing I suggest that should be available to us, and I really think we would all perform a better function here, is a research assistant. Then I think we could adequately digest the problems that come before the House. I know, as I said before, truthfully and fairly, that there is a sincere attempt to try to rectify these things, but one has to stand in wonderment when you hear about the 25 years of progress in this great province of Ontario and come in now and find that the sincere attempt is only being begun now.

There is one other thing of a distasteful nature—and I might as well rid myself of my vitriolic aspects now before supper—that bothers me in connection with our duties as members. As I mentioned before, one can expect a degree of partisanship and this is part of the game and it is really the greatest game in the world or we would not be involved in it; but yesterday something happened to me that was an exemplification of the fact that really when you are in opposition, they do try to hide things from you. They do.

Yesterday I stayed in my riding for the sod turning ceremony at the Lambton Community College—a very happy day for all of us in the city of Sarnia and Lambton County—and the Assistant Deputy Minister of Education was there to bring greetings from the Minister of Education. He brought those great greetings from the Minister of Education and we all received them well, and then he turned over to my colleague from Lambton (Mr. Henderson) the opportunity to say a few words, and he brought greetings from the Minister of Education.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He did not bring a cheque, did he?

Mr. Bullbrook: No—I can tell the members another story about that in connection with bringing cheques—but I was not called upon. Perhaps the people there wanted to hear the member for Lambton and not myself, but the bothersome thing about it, Mr. Speaker, is this, that he made an announcement as to a new appointee for the Lambton College of Applied Arts and Technology. Tomorrow I am going to put a question before the orders of the day as to whether there was any discussion between The Department of Education and the hon. member for Lambton in connection with this appointment. I really feel the time has come that in situations such as that, the veil of partisanship should be drawn apart.

I see no reason, when we are appointing someone to a board to govern a community college—approximately 75 per cent of the population referable thereto I represent—that really the government or its departments cannot, without undue fettering of its self-perpetuating devices, permit it to discuss with me who might be a responsible person to be on that board. I do not think that is too much to ask, and I do not ask for any fiat of any kind. Heaven forbid that I should be the one to say this man or that man goes on the board—that is the duty of government. They are there for that purpose but surely it is not too much to ask that they could not only have the common sense but the courtesy to discuss with us members in the Opposition the possibility and feasibility of the appointments concurrent with these boards and commissions in our own ridings. It is not too much to ask.

It is of no consequence that I stand there amid 70 or 80 responsible people in the city of Sarnia and not be asked to speak. Any embarrassment on my part is of no consequence to this House, but what is embarrassing is that I do represent 70,000 people who were not asked to speak, and I do represent 70,000 people whose viewpoint was not considered in connection with that appointment.

I am not going to talk about the loading of the board. I am not going to talk about that because I cannot take a holier than thou attitude. Four years from now that might be my attitude, I hope not, but I do not know, I am not clairvoyant. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), in interjecting previously brought something to mind. I was not going to mention it, but I will make this comment in this House.

I had a call about four months ago from the city manager of the city of Sarnia—and he has been the city manager, I am guessing of the top of my head, about eight years. He said, “I have just gotten through from the provincial government the first cheque I have ever had, other than the usual unconditional grant cheque” or something of that nature. And I said, “What do you mean?” He said, “They always send it through to the representative. He brought it up and got his picture taken with it”. That is the absolute truth; his words to me.

I used the words self perpetuating devices. If the public wanted to know how they are in power for 25 years. We should get into The Department of Highways and if that is not an instrument of self perpetuation, I have never seen one. But we have a good critic of that department.

I want to discuss a local issue if I might, and that is the question of the Ontario Water Resources Commission take-over of the assets and, I say, the responsibility of the municipality of the city of Sarnia. Now we have had in our riding on many occasions, my friend the hon. member from Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), vice-chairman of the commission. I must say that he has always attempted to carry on any hearing of which I was a participant or in the audience in an eminently fair manner. I think he is only deserving of these comments, and so any remarks that I make, of course, do not reflect upon my friend from Wellington-Dufferin but upon the very concept of the provision of water.

We have had the opportunity today of hearing a very lucid exposition of the requirements of the OWRC, how the proper thrust can be made by this commission in connection with the lessening of our housing problems, and the provision of potable water throughout the province.

I really must say, in fairness, that I do not see that there is any necessity, in order to provide potable water to the people of the province of Ontario, that the municipal autonomy must be fettered so unduly—and that is the essence of the matter.

I do not think we are selfish in Sarnia in saying we want to provide ourselves with water; we want to provide our neighbours with water. We say that we are not going to provide water 40 miles away, and we say to the OWRC, and I invite correction, if I am wrong, that we shall provide the filter processes, and the raw water product for you, and let you transport it 40 miles away. But what is wrong with a municipality being able to continue to provide, as they have in the past, good quality water to its citizens and, with an enlightened council as it now has, good quality water to its neighbours?

Why must there be a possibility of a designation of the area? There are many technical ramifications. The city of Sarnia, in effect, had hired engineers at a cost of some $26,000 to be able to meet on an even plane with the Ontario Water Resources Commission, and I think my friend from Wellington-Dufferin will say, Mr. Speaker, that they did meet on an equal plane of knowledge and technique.

But the matter becomes this as far as I am concerned—again, the rural urban involvement, something I talked about last year; always the polarisation of rural and urban.

Let us go back to the section in the secondary schools Act, calling for the election of the board, where there will be elected the number of integers taken to the fraction of the next highest integer of the equalization between the residential and farm assessment, etc. Nothing more than taking away that very novel concept called representation by population. A very strange thing, it seems to me, always for the purpose of creating this great delineation between rural and urban. I took up this matter, Mr. Speaker, in the committee on education last year, and perhaps I was naive in my attitude, but I said, in effect, that I like to believe that whether a man is a farmer, a professional man, a fireman, or some other type of vocation—and we exemplify this in this House, that the people, if he is good, will elect him, and it does not make any difference whether he lives on the farm or in a mansion.

Now that might sound naive, but I think that does carry forward with this very philosophy of representation by the population, and so I digress for a moment from the question of the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

The main point I wish to make in connection with that heading of my speech is this: That surely to goodness, for the good of the entire province, which is the responsibility and the purview of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, we do not have to take away municipal autonomy when they are able to provide for themselves.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has found a suitable point at which he can break his remarks at this time?

It being 6:00 of the clock p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1968

The House resumed at 8.00 o'clock, p.m.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, prior to the calling of the dinner hour, I had been dwelling for a moment on an issue of significance to the people whom I represent. That is the present difficulty between the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the city of Sarnia.

I think, sir, that although I would like to say much more, not only in connection with this particular problem but also on other matters of local significance, I do feel that having regard to the overall length of the debate and our general desire to come to the vote in this connection, perhaps I should pass on. I really am passing on.

I think it is only appropriate that, with your indulgence and the indulgence of the House I make mention for a moment of what in my mind, and perhaps to my narrow approach, is the most significant factor as far as the people of Ontario are concerned at the present time. It has to be the question of taxation.

We hear talk of a fiscal nightmare. This has been mentioned many times. I do not know if it results from the somnambulation of the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) or not, but I must say this—and I do not hold myself out as knowledgeable in this connection—I find it very difficult, as I read authors in connection with federal-provincial fiscal relationship, to come to a conclusion other than this.

In 1940, I believe it was, we had the Rowell-Sirois report. And the essence of that report, sir, as I see it is a recommendation of fiscal co-operation with a view to a strengthening of our great confederation. I think there has been a sincere attempt. We went into the wartime tax agreements from 1940 to 1946, the post-war agreements and the tax rental programmes; and they went on and on.

The thing that comes to my mind is that these are agreements. Provinces are taking a position in this connection, but in point of fact they have agreed. I do say this, in my semi-ignorance, there is a bilateral aspect to that.

I find it very difficult to comprehend as day in and day out in this House, and outside the House more importantly, we seem to find that this existing administration wants to blame, at all times, the federal government for a lack of co-operation. But in point of fact, as I understand the constitutional aspect of this matter, if this administration felt sincerely and forthrightly that the agreements were not adequate and proper and in the best interest, not only of this province but of the confederation as a whole, all it had to do was to invoke the constitutional powers that it had.

But in this kind of fiscal nightmare it is suggested to us that: (1) Everything is the fault of the federal government; and (2) Maybe now the time has come that we must go our own way, as we have done in succession duties, that we must go our own way in the income tax field.

Surely to goodness the people of the province of Ontario have more intelligence than to accept this type of fallacy as far as the reasoning of the government is concerned. I do not!

I think that what really is burdening the people is expenditure. Taxation is one thing, but it is a bilateral thing. But expenditures, with the exception of the open-end programmes which this government is prepared to accept, expenditures really are their expenditures. They are the authors of the money that is spent in the province of Ontario.

I want to talk about one programme, if I might, that I think is probably the greatest fiscal fraud that has ever been perpetrated by any government on the people they serve, and that is the tax shelter programme.

As I see it, there was a need. Smith saw the need, but we did not need Smith to see the need. There was a need for municipal assistance. That onerous burden could not be continued on the real property owner any longer, and as I see it, all that had to be done was an elevation of the unconditional grant structures to municipalities as far as residential assessment was concerned.

There were refinements that were required. But that was not politically expedient back in September of 1967. To say we are going to elevate the unconditional grants by $150 million so that there would be this direct benefit to the residential property owners in Ontario. It was nearly as attractive as saying, we are going to give you a cheque; we are going to give you your own money back.

But I will accept that. I will say in effect that if you are looking to be elected, although I do not like gimmickery, I suppose it is part of what we expect, what the public expects—some attempt to enhance them to your political position.

But just consider for a moment. We have the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) who has agreed, in answer to a question from one of my colleagues, that the cost thus far is something in the neighbourhood of $450,000. This is what we have spent thus far in educating the people of the province of Ontario in connection with this programme.

Now that does not take into consideration—it takes into consideration some of the additional administrative expenses on the provincial level—but nobody can fathom for one moment the additional administrative costs on the part of the municipalities concerned.

And what about the programme itself? I am not going to talk about the collateral aspect in the rental field. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith) discussed that himself, an intelligent young man who could see what is happening in his own constituency.

But you know, not far from me there was a cheque went out and it went out to the governor of Michigan, Governor George Romney. He has a cottage in the township of Bosanquet.

I just cannot for the life of me understand the universal application of this plan. Can you imagine a governor of another state—not a citizen of this jurisdiction; a man whose wealth I do not know, but having regard to his background and abilities one would equate perhaps in the millions of dollars—getting a cheque out of the largesse of this government.

No matter how you attempt to rationalize yourself out of it, that cheque could have come from the taxation sources resulting from the regressive increase in motor vehicle fuel tax.

The 30-some dollars that we pay in this province to Governor Romney could have come from the gasoline tax that a man earning $5,000 a year, a citizen of this province with eight children, had to pay to run his car. This is the fact of the matter and you cannot get out of that. If you funnel taxes in that way and they go out that way, there is something radically wrong.

Surely, we are going to come to a conclusion here in the province of Ontario—and the people are now, they are coming to this conclusion—that they are not going to accept this type of bribery.

If I might, with your permission, just read quickly a letter I received November 22:

I recently received a letter from a provincial Minister with a magazine enclosed. The entire parcel was put into an envelope and sent first class at the cost of 34 cents. We in this office are using a method which cuts the costs exactly in half of this type of mailing.

By putting the letter into a No. 10 envelope, with first class postage on it and taping it to the large Kraft envelope which is unsealed and contains the printed matter, third class postage is put on the open envelope. We refer to this as first-third.

At this rate the mailing from Toronto would have been six cents for the letter and 11 cents for the magazine.

Very picayune, as the hon. member says, but how many of those things do we receive? I counted up last week; it came to $1.98 in postage. Everything from table mats from the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle)—

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Eighteen cents for them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Everything from them.

Now basically then, I polarize for the sake of example, there is a saving right there available to this administration of $450,000.17. It is available to them.

What happens is this. They sit there in their smugness, they really do, they sit there in their smugness and they really do not care about this. But the people of Ontario are going to have their day, and they are going to have their day very shortly.

Now, sir, as I have mentioned—you were not in the chair at the time—what I wanted to discuss at some length, I will try not to be too long, is the Botrie case.

I had the opportunity of lodging with this House, as I mentioned, an attempt to amend The Law Enforcement Compensation Act of 1967. You properly ruled that out of order, sir, and properly ruled out of order some of the comments that I made subsequently. I had occasion then on December 9 to write to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), and I wrote as follows:

Dear Hon. Sir:

You might have been in the House on Friday morning when the Speaker justifiably ruled against the introduction by me of an Act to Amend the Law Enforcement Compensation Act of 1967. Also I was properly ruled out of order in my attempt to exhort the government to initiate such legislation.

It is not necessary for me to explain to you in detail my purpose in attempting to put forward such an amendment. From digesting all the comments by yourself and other members of the House at the time of the introduction of the bill establishing the law enforcement compensation board, it would seem that the intention was to cover situations where citizens were assisting in arrests during unlawful conduct, or in preserving the peace whether or not a police officer was present.

Might I exhort you, sir, to entertain consideration of such an amendment. If you would feel a personal discussion of this matter would be of benefit, I would be at your disposal.

Yours respectfully.

Now I want to digress for a moment, and with a full stomach I must say I have no invective in me, but I just want for a moment, in fairness, to discuss the intrusion—the justifiable intrusion—of the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) in the submission of my bill. Because you will recall I lodged this bill for first reading and immediately thereafter, without having the opportunity of looking at the bill, he brought up with you the question of whether the bill was appropriate because of the possibility that it called for the expenditure out of the public purse.

Now I breach no confidence I believe when I say that you and I had discussions about this matter. I had discussions with legislative counsel; with the Clerk of the House. I do not think it was an easy decision for you to make. I am not going to go into the merits of that decision, but I say to you on the face of it that it was not an easy decision for you to make.

It could not have been because there was a thin line involved as to whether this was purely a procedural matter, or whether it did, in fact, call for the enlargement of the appropriations that were envisaged in the original statute. So when you ruled against me, sir, the hon. member for High Park left the House and went out and said the the deputy leader of my party: "You had better teach your boys the rules."

The point I want to make to you is this. What pomposity, when you and I as fairly, I think, intelligent members of our profession, had difficulty coming to a rational conclusion after some discussion, that anybody could have that clairvoyance to know, without even looking at the statute, that there was something wrong with it. In essence, I just want to record that for the House. I could go much further but I think frankly all of us in this House are fed up to here with the irresponsibility from that hon. member.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Bullbrook: I trust this will be a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think it unjustified for the member for Sarnia to say that all of the members of this House feel anything. I think that if the member for Sarnia wishes to express his own opinion, he is entitled to do so.

Mr. Bullbrook: I apologize. I would like Hansard to record that if I said all of the members of this House I did mean myself.

Now if I might, sir, I did digress!

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Will the hon. member state for the record how far is "to here".

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, let the record show, as we say in the courts, that my hand was at my brow.

If I might, sir, and I did digress, I hope that you can recall the contents of my letter. The hon. Attorney General was kind enough to reply to me on December 12 in which he said:

I wish to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of December 9 in which you advised me of your views for extension of the principles contained in The Law Enforcement Compensation Act. I do believe that your interpretation of the circumstances which would permit an injured party to be entitled to compensation are somewhat more liberal than that contained in the Act.

And if I might be permitted to digress—exactly right, much more liberal and again happily so.

However, as I have indicated, this Act is under consideration again in light of the recommendations of the McRuer report. I would indeed be pleased to discuss this matter with you further.

And then he goes on to say that one of his officials is having an intensive review of it at the present time.

The point I want to make is this—and I think it is my obligation as the Opposition critic in this House—we are blessed in this House with a fine gentleman—I have said this so many times and I said I would not say it again—but we are blessed with a fine gentleman in the Attorney General. But in effect being a fine gentleman in this portfolio is not sufficient. You must be absolutely zealous in the guardianship of the rights of the people, absolutely zealous. I want to show you if I might, how a few words can change the intent of legislation, in my respectful submission. I would like to refer you, sir, to the time that this legislation was originally conceived and brought forward in this House. This is the Throne Speech, sir, I read from Hansard, page 6, of Wednesday, January 25, 1967:

My government will bring forward legislation to provide compensation for those who are injured while assisting the police—

The significant words I ask all my colleagues and you to keep in mind, are the words “the police”— —in maintaining law and order.

That was the intention. Subsequently, sir, the hon. Attorney General on Thursday, May 25, 1967, as recorded on page 3781 of Hansard: referring to the bill to provide compensation for inquiries to persons aiding police officers:

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for compensation for injuries to persons while assisting police and for compensation for their dependents where death results.

On June 1, 1967, at page 4204 of Hansard, the hon. Attorney General says in, as I see it, a relatively heated debate on the application of the very point that comes up in the Botrie case as to whether a police officer need be physically present or not:

I would just say this carries out the undertaking which was stated and set forth in the Speech from the Throne.

That I read, to you.

Now, if I might, sir, in the Botrie case, the decision was handed down by the law enforcement compensation board on October 15 of this year. It was the only case that had come before the board in connection with the application of this statute. My information is it is the only case that has come before the board. I am going to take, if I may, a moment of your time to read the background.

The victim, Larry Botrie, was shot and killed between five and six o'clock on the afternoon of April 26, 1968, at the Shell Service Station at 4576 Yonge St. just north of Highway 401 in Metropolitan Toronto.

These are the circumstances. Three youths, Dennis Robert Boyd, 23 years, now deceased, Clifford Gordon McGregor, 15 years, and Melvin Edward Polasek, 14 years, all of the city of Toronto, decided on April 25, 1968, to leave home, mainly for the reason they were not getting along with their parents. They conspired to rob a taxi driver of his vehicle because they had no money.

It was at first agreed that the McGregor boy would try and bluff his way through by taking the taxi at knife point. Dennis Boyd later decided that he would take with him a 30.30 calibre lever action Winchester rifle. This rifle belonged to the McGregor boy's older brother, Mark McGregor, 16 years.

At about 5.00 p.m. on Friday, April 26, 1968, the three youths hailed a taxi driven by Larry Botrie, and owned by the applicant, Alfred Botrie, at the corner of Winchester and Parliament Streets and asked to be driven to the city limits. Botrie arrived in the vicinity of Highway 401 and Yonge and asked for his fare. One of the three youths told Botrie they had no money. Botrie then drove on to the Shell Service lot, informing the trio he was going to call the police.

McGregor, who was sitting as the front passenger, produced a butcher knife from his clothing and held it against Botrie's chest. While doing so he shouted to the boy who was seated behind the driver to get the gun. Botrie, after a short struggle with McGregor on the front seat, was successful in taking the knife from him. The taxi driver, Botrie, started to get out of the front seat, with the object of taking the gun away.

Botrie shouted “Police” and while attempting to get the gun was shot by a bullet. Botrie fell to the ground and as he tried to crawl away from the taxi was shot twice by a boy who remained in the taxi. He subsequently died.

Those are the essential ingredients, and I think it is necessary to read in detail the section, the applicable section 31.

The essence of the case was this, that the board found, as a matter of fact, that he was not assisting a peace-officer. The significance is this, that throughout the Throne Speech, throughout the exhortations of the hon. Attorney General, as I read Hansard the words peace-officer were not used once. But you find in the statute it says:

Where any person is injured or killed by any act or omission by any other person occurring or resulting directly from assisting a peace-officer.

This is what happened in effect, and I agree with the decision for what that is worth. If I can shorten it for you.

This is what they said:

The ordinary interpretation of the words "assisting a peace-officer" is to give support to an identifiable peace-officer.

And there is the difference. Because it is a peace-officer in the statute, the board found as a fact that it was incumbent upon the claimant, there was an onus upon him, to prove that he was assisting an identifiable peace-officer. No such incumbency exists if the "police" was used, in my respectful submission; and the word "police" was used throughout the argument in this House; throughout the Throne Speech and, more importantly, throughout everything that was said by the Opposition members in this House at the time. But the government would not change it.

In point of fact I put this to you, sir, as a prime example of the great obligation of an Attorney General that he must be very careful, he must be very careful, to see that statutes put forward exactly what the intention of the government is. There is no doubt in my mind that that was the intention of the government.

I do not blame the Attorney General personally for the unhappy circumstance that here are parents whose breadwinner has been shot down brutally. This government intended to compensate them but they can never be compensated because of this statute. The Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) intimated during the Throne Speech that I might have the opportunity to rectify this situation. I exhort every member on the government side to rectify this situation. Because it happened once and it could happen again. More than anything else the time has come in this House that we have to give significant deliberation to every word.

I had the situation last year on at least three occasions, as I have mentioned before, where I had members of the profession on the other side say to me, "I think you were right", afterwards. But that does not help the victims of our lack of pliability in connection with changing the words in statutes to get through our intentions.

I do appreciate very much the time that you have given me. Before sitting down, I just want to say one thing, if I might.

I was not in the House on November 28, when the hon. Prime Minister of this province made the comment, in effect, in speaking to my leader, that perhaps the hon. member from Sarnia might look down with envy upon that seat. I want to say for a moment, if I might, that the Prime Minister is quite right; but it is not the seat that I look down on with envy, it is the individual who occupies the seat.

In any event I am in no position, sir, to quote from a poem, such as was done by the member for Hamilton Mountain; I guess we don't have talented writers as they do. I want to say this one thing to you. I envy not one tittle that seat. I envy the man who occupies it. There is the greatest leader that any party has in this House. And there is no question in our minds as to whether he has the will to win.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, I endorse all the congratulatory remarks that the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) made about you and your deputy, but I shall not take the time to repeat them. I cannot, however, refrain from expressing my delight that the member for London South (Mr. White) has finally become "Honourable".

I should like to express a few brief remarks on a subject which I hope will no longer be of current interest by the time the next Throne Debate rolls around. The subject of Vietnam. Very briefly, I shall not dwell on the horror of the war, I shall merely try to convey to the hon. members some idea of the astronomical cost of the aerial hardware involved. Not the food, nor the clothing, nor the ships, nor anything else; just the aerial hardware.

The total tonnage of bombs dropped by the United States on both Vietnams up until the end of October this year was almost 3 million tons. I have the exact figures, but I am going to use round ones. Tons not pounds. If figured in pounds, the total would be almost 6 billion pounds.

At 50 cents a pound, this means that almost $3 billion were spent on bombs alone. In aircraft almost exactly 1,200 fixed wing and 1,200 helicopters have been lost. The planes cost approximately $2 million each, and a helicopter, $250,000. Thus, we have another $2.4 billion for the fixed wing aircraft and $300 million for the helicopters. For these two items alone, bombs and aircraft, we have a total of $5.7 billion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the cost to United States' families in human lives, and the cost to the Vietnamese people, in the countless killed and maimed children and adults will never be assessed. Never were more dollars blown away in a more useless and more unjustifiable cause. Billions of dollars can be found for war on other human beings abroad, but very little can be found for the war on poverty at home. Man's inhumanity to man seems to be on the increase. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, if God is dead, I think I know the cause of his death. He has died of a broken heart.

Turning to the other aspect of life, I should like to pay a very brief tribute to Dr. E. Abbott, Scarborough's public health doctor, who left recently for Biafra and Nigeria to organize a 15-man medical relief team to aid the war refugees on both sides. There is nothing unusual in this for Dr. Abbott who has served in similar capacities in India and China. But this time, he will be separated from his family, and I feel that the Legislature should at least have it on record that he has undertaken this noble task. Of Dr. Abbott it may be truly said that, "while others preach, he practices".

Mr. Speaker, I forego this part of my speech, or would you like to hear it?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): It is the part about the despicable conditions of the jails.

Mr. Burr: I wish to speak tonight on the report on pollution in the Port Maitland area, tabled last week by the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). I intend, first, to prove that humans in the area were suffering from fluorosis; and second to show why the committee did not come to that conclusion.

Fluorine poisoning or fluorosis may be classified in three ways—acute, crippling and chronic. In the Port Maitland area there is no question of acute poisoning, which results from one excessive exposure to fluoride, nor of crippling fluorosis. There is no question of crippling fluorosis which takes many years to develop, sometimes as much as 30 years. The fluorosis in question in Port Maitland is chronic fluorine poisoning.

On page 45, section 133 and 134 of the report, "chronic fluorosis or chronic industrial fluorosis" is made to appear identical with crippling fluorosis", and this permitted the committee to say in section 305 on page 111:

In order to diagnose adequately chronic fluorosis in humans, it is necessary that more than one of the following conditions be found to be present.

(a) A history of lengthy exposure to relatively high concentrations of fluoride in the air, food and/or water; (b) Severe mottling or staining of the permanent teeth; (c) Radiological evidence of exostosis of the bone; (d) High fluoride concentration in the dry bone ash; (e) Above normal concentration of fluoride in samples of urine taken over a period of time.

The recognized authority on fluorosis is Kaj Roholm about whom the report on page 35, section 105 says:

His descriptions still provide the classic account of severe human fluorosis due to the inhalation of fluoride.

Hear what Roholm says on page 130 of the March, 1937, Journal of Industrial Hygiene and Toxicology. He says, and Mr. Speaker, this is very important if members are going to understand what I have to say in the next five minutes—I am quoting:

Chronic fluorine intoxication has peculiar and very characteristic symptoms which either are localized in the dental and osseous system, or are of a more general nature.

The Port Maitland committee's experts have talked only about the "either" and have completely ignored the "or".

What are these alternative symptoms described by Roholm? They are the very symptoms that many of the Port Maitland victims—and I intend to call them victims—have exhibited. There are six groups of general symptoms. And I am quoting Roholm:

(1) Gastric symptoms, mainly acute. Lack of appetite, cardialgia nausea, vomiting.

Three of these symptoms are transitory, says Roholm. In other words they are not chronic. I quote again:

They develop after working for some time in dusty atmosphere and disappear again after a short period in the open air, the poor appetite being the last to go. It was often stated that the appetite for the first two meals of the day (before commencing work and after two and a half hours' work) was decidedly better than that of the later meals. It is of great significance, however, that the workers do not experience much discomfort from these symptoms; they distinctly become inured. The rule is that for a period of some few days to some few weeks after starting at the factory the worker suffers from these acute gastric attacks, whereafter they disappear, especially the nausea and vomiting. Thereafter, some of the workers tolerate the dust without observing the symptoms; others will still have transitory symptoms after holidays or if the dust quantity temporarily becomes especially high.

So says Roholm.

Symptoms of the second group, about which the Hall committee does not tell us, are intestinal and I quote:

Intestinal symptoms, mainly chronic: Disposition to diarrhoea, constipation.

Mr. Speaker, 15 of the 28 persons interviewed or examined by Dr. Waldbott, that is 54 per cent, had the characteristic symptoms referable to the stomach and bowels.

In Roholm's experience, 80 per cent had gastric symptoms and 33 per cent had intestinal—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, did I understand the hon. member to refer to a Dr. Waldbott?

Mr. Burr: That is right. A Dr. George Waldbott.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is he considered to be quite an expert in this field?

Mr. Burr: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I see.

Mr. Burr: I read all his credentials back in the spring.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member mind if I ask him a question?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Why doesn't the Minister debate on his own time?

Mr. Burr: The Minister is going to slow down the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would just wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. member realizes that this same Dr. Waldbott was one who many of us tried to get to testify for the purpose of avoiding—when we were discussing it in Toronto city council—the fluoridation of water supplies. Many of the experts, most of the medical profession—I am not too sure whether that included the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman)—considered Dr. Waldbott a crackpot because he was against it.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Absolutely not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And I will bring the evidence in.

Mr. Shulman: It is nonexistent.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what I call a mischievous intervention.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: I did not hear any question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Please ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister did ask a question, if the hon. member was aware of the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

I think that we might reasonably allow the hon. member to continue. If he wishes to ignore the hon. Minister's question or if he has answered it, he is quite in order.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, back in the spring I began to put the doctor's credentials on the record, but the chairman at the time indicated that the House would not accept these. They would have taken about 10 minutes to put on the record, but I have them handy with me. If you would like me to find them and bring them to you, I will be glad to do it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Are they upstairs?

Mr. Burr: I think so.

The 15 of these 28 persons interviewed or examined by Dr. George L. Waldbott, one of the world's best known allergists, a recognized authority on fluorosis—I did not think it was necessary to put that in—had the characteristics and symptoms referable to the stomach and bowels.

Now I come to the third group of symptoms, Mr. Speaker, about which the Hall committee was not informed, and these are:

Symptoms from circulation or respiration: Shortness of breath, palpitation, cough, expectoration.

Now Dr. Waldbott reports that 10 of the 28 individuals had respiratory symptoms and that, Mr. Speaker, is 36 per cent. Roholm reported 51 per cent of his patients with respiratory or circulation symptoms.

The fourth set of symptoms ignored by the so-called experts who testified for the Hall committee—remember, Mr. Speaker, that not one of these instant experts had ever diagnosed a case of fluorosis—is described by Roholm as, and I quote:

Symptoms from bones, joints and muscles:
Feeling of stiffness, indefinite or localized rheumatic pains.

This is Roholm, the great authority. Twenty-three out of the 28 persons interviewed or examined by Dr. Waldbott, that is 82 per cent, had pains in the spine and muscular pains in the arms and legs.

It is rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Correctional Services is talking about fluoridation, because I used to read the newspapers and read about how he was opposed to fluoridation. Our newspaper, the Windsor Star was for it, and during the investigation committee's proceedings it came out in the newspaper that the hon. member had been made a Minister without Portfolio and the Windsor Star cried great crocodile tears—well not crocodile but great tears—and said that this shows that the report is going to kill fluoridation.

But you see they were wrong. All it meant was that the Minister was being promoted to the Cabinet as an inducement that he would not carry on his fight against fluoridation, and he never said another word about it, ever.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And I quoted Dr. Waldbott.

Mr. Burr: And I can document that if the Minister would like.

Mr. Deans: Mind you, it is the only thing he said nothing about.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): I just thought they were looking for a court jester.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I heard about—

Mr. Burr: Symptoms of the fifth set, if the Minister of Correctional Services is still interested in the symptoms ignored by the Hall committee's non-experts, are described by Roholm as, and I am quoting:

Symptoms of nervous character:
Tiredness, sleepiness, indisposition, headache, giddiness.

Although Roholm had only 22 per cent of his patients reporting symptoms in this group, 11 of Dr. Waldbott's 28—that is 40 per cent—had headaches alone, some of them persistent and severe. Incidentally, six of the 28 had hemorrhages including frequent and persistent nose bleeds.

I was speaking tonight in casual conversation with the member for Welland South (Mr. Haggerty), who is closely acquainted with people who work in this factory, and he happened to mention—he did not know I was going to say this—that some of his colleagues in the plant often came out of the factory with their noses bleeding and he wondered what was going to happen to them in a few years time.

So there are six of the 28 people with frequent and persistent nose bleeds. I did not ask Dr. Waldbott about tiredness, but I note that, from pages 75 to 88 of this report, of the nine patients whose cases are summarized there are five with this one symptom alone. The last symptoms as recorded by Roholm, the sixth set are those of the skin and all he says is:

The skin: Rash.

Now, Mrs. A. L. Farr is the only one of the nine cases summarized in the report who had dermatitis, and that makes 11 per cent. Strangely enough, Roholm also reported 11 per cent.

Now as you read the report, Mr. Speaker, beginning at page 75 you will first come to Mr. William Warnick's case, and he has at least ten of the symptoms described by Roholm including, and I am going to number them so there can be no mistake about them: 1. stomach weakness; 2. tiredness; 3. sleepiness; 4. stiffness; 5. diarrhoea; 6. coughing; 7. dizziness (Roholm says giddiness); 8. loss of wind (Roholm says shortness of breath); 9. run down condition (Roholm says indisposition); 10. muscular pains.

Now, the committee, after listing in their summary of the case these 10 symptoms and some others which are now recognized by modern experts as adverse effects of fluoride, tells us in section 240 that there are no clinical signs associated specifically with a diagnosis of fluorosis; that urinary fluoride was normal; that x-ray examinations showed no bone abnormalities associated with chronic fluorosis.

Now let us consider, Mr. Speaker, this x-ray testing of the bones. It would have been really amazing if the x-rays had shown any bone changes because, if you read the literature, you will find that crippling fluorosis takes from 10 to 30 years to develop.

Frada, the Italian scientist at the University of Palermo in Italy, says that he has observed abnormal x-ray findings in bones after 18 years. Roholm sets 9.3 years as the average period of exposure to relatively large amounts of fluoride before increased calcium deposits in bones was demonstrable by x-ray. Furthermore, Kettering laboratory scientists in Cincinnati showed by animal experiments in 1943 that:

Early skeletal changes of fluoride poisoning are not always detectable by x-ray.

Therefore, it will be seen that, inasmuch as the severe pollution at ERCO began in 1965, it is virtually impossible for any bone changes to have developed sufficiently to be detected by x-rays in 1968.

In regard to the negative findings of urine samples, this proves absolutely nothing one way or the other because, as the report itself notes on page 35 near the end of section 105:

When a population ceased to be exposed to a high fluoride intake, fluoride excretion rates continued at a high level for a considerable time.

Now, I am going to read that again: "When a population"—that actually is the town of Bartlett where they had eight parts per million fluoride in the water, and as soon as they found out about it they took it out and reduced it to one p.p.m.—

When a population ceased to be exposed to a high fluoride intake, fluoride excretion rates—in the urine, that is —continued at a high level for a considerable time.

This brings us to a very important, and I think interesting fact, Mr. Speaker.

As you may be aware, the ERCO factory partially suspended operations at Port Maitland at the end of April this year. If the inhabitants were exposed to high fluoride intake, then they should reasonably be expected, as the report has indicated, after the air contamination was reduced, to excrete a high amount of fluoride in the urine. That is logical.

Now, in July of this past year, about 10 or 12 weeks after ERCO reduced or, as it claimed, stopped its pollution of the Port Maitland air, Dr. Waldbott took urine samples of four of the inhabitants and had an analysis made by an independent laboratory. The results showed that fluoride levels ranged from over seven milligrams a day to over 12 milligrams a day. As you will see by the table on page 110, about a half a milligram is considered normal.

There is only one possible conclusion to draw from this, the victims had been exposed to a high fluoride intake while the ERCO plant was in full operation.

To summarize that part, Mr. Speaker, when the committee's experts found the urine analyses negative and the x-ray findings negative, this proved absolutely nothing. They were looking in the wrong direction. They were looking eastward for the sunset, and when they could not see the sunset, they declared it did not exist. But it was still there in the west.

If they had looked for the alternative general symptoms described by Roholm they would have found them in great abundance because they have recorded them in their report.

Now, I do not suggest, of course, Mr. Speaker, that everyone who has any of these symptoms is suffering from fluorosis, but in the Port Maitland area, where cattle have suffered from fluorosis; where auto finishes have been damaged; where windows have been etched; where some of the inflicted individuals were drinking water which according to government reports contained between 15 and 38 parts per million of fluoride; and when the dust which covered nearly everything in the neighbourhood contained about one per cent, or up to 11,000 parts per million of fluoride; and when the victims have far too many of the recognized symptoms of fluorosis; this report is adding insult to the injury already suffered by the Port Maitland residents, whose health and livelihood has already been seriously damaged.

Dr. Waldbott interviewed 18 persons on November 11, 1967, and 10 more in November, 1968. Of these, five were examined in Detroit and three of them were hospitalized. In at least 17 persons the symptoms of this disease, says Dr. Waldbott, were so characteristic that there cannot be any doubt of the diagnosis.

Now, Dr. Waldbott is a genuine expert with gilt-edged credentials, who has studied scores of cases of fluorosis, not only in the United States but also abroad. By contrast, one of the experts at the Port Maitland hearings said that although he had never met a case of fluorosis, he could recognize it as easily as he could recognize leprosy.

Another medical witness, Dr. Mills, when asked whether he felt competent to make any comments on the symptoms of fluorosis answered: "I do not". Nevertheless his testimony was sought for 17 pages of the hearings concluding with the following question,

So I take it, Dr. Mills, that the effect of your evidence is that neither in your capacity as medical officer of health nor as a general practitioner in the area, do you know of any evidence of any person suffering from the results of fluoride?

To which, of course, Dr. Mills replied: "I do not". He had already said he did not feel he was competent to talk about it so they asked him for 17 pages and then he gave his verdict "I do not know".

It is a pity, Mr. Speaker, that Gilbert and Sullivan are not still alive. They could have made a delightful musical out of this farce.

Now I have searched the list of witnesses on pages 336, 337 and 338, but I can find no reference to the family of William Warnick, the first man who is mentioned at some length in the summaries and you will remember he had ten of the general symptoms listed for fluorosis by Roholm.

What of the other members of his family which live about a half mile northeast of the factory? Were they unaffected? Well, two sons, Robert, 11 and David 13, had continuous stomach trouble and headaches, and were considerably underweight. Both were frequently absent from school as a result.

The mother had ulcers in the mouth, a painful left leg, usually in the morning before rising—it improved with activity. Weakness and numbness in the fingers of both hands made her drop things from her grasp. She had frequent nosebleeds and visual disturbances, two symptoms common to several of the 28 persons studied by Dr. Waldbott.

When examined in February, 1968, in Dr. Waldbott's clinic in Detroit, she still complained of the pain radiating towards the foot. She complained of marked tenderness in the lumbar area of the spine and limitation of spinal movements.

Now, it is of medical significance, Mr. Speaker, that when Mr. Warnick underwent an operation for cancer of the prostate gland, a piece of muscle from the abdomen was tested for fluoride. The normal amount for this muscle is about one part per million. Mr. Warnick's contained 116.4 parts per million. His cancerous prostate gland contained 92.2 parts per million although the normal amount is about one part per million.

This fluoride analysis was carried out by one of Europe's most competent chemists. I have his name and address if it is required. The Warnick family, Mr. Speaker, is suffering, as are many others in this vicinity, from something in their environment. What is this elusive factor? It is not, of course, fluoride air pollution, we know this, the Hall committee has told us so.

Now, why did the committee not seek the opinion of those scientists who have had experience with fluorosis? Why did they invite non-experts who had read up on part of the subject?

Mr. Speaker, if you thought you had some disease say, TB, and you went to a physician who said: "Well, I have never met a case of TB myself, I am sure I can recognize one when I see one; but my colleague in the next office is an expert, he has had all kinds of experience"; which doctor would you consult? The one who had never met a case or the one who had had great experience?

Well, the committee chose those who had never diagnosed a case.

In the instance of Mrs. Ethel Parke, Mr. Joseph Casina, Sr., Mr. Ted Boorsma, all of whom were hospitalized and given all manner of tests, no expert was able to give a sure diagnosis. Is that not strange?

On page 82 a tentative diagnosis was given for Mr. Casina. It was called "gouty diathesis", and although he was given treatment accordingly there was no response to that treatment.

For Mr. Boorsma, page 87, a tentative diagnosis of sarcoidosis was made, but it could not be confirmed. So the report says: "The only diagnosis we can make is hypercalcemia due to an unknown cause." An unknown cause, but not, of course fluoride.

For Mrs. Parke, page 86, one expert: "Felt that she did not suffer from rheumatoid arthritis." This expert was an expert in rheumatoid arthritis, and felt that she did not have that. The evidence, "Indicates that she is suffering from something more than one clinical condition"; but: "We were unable to arrive at a diagnosis which explained all her symptoms."

So there we have, Mr. Speaker, three mystery ailments, all from the shadow of the ERCO factory. In each case, because of the negative urine analysis and the negative x-ray finding—and I quote page 86:

The evidence conclusively shows that she is not suffering as a result of excessive fluoride exposure.

Now the committee reports on the fourth patient hospitalized. Mr. Vanderbeek, with considerable confidence. They felt they knew what this one had, especially on the fact that he did not have fluorosis.

I wish to point out to the hon. members, however, that according to page 84 of the report, and if any members have it with them it is worth their while opening page 84 of the report. Dr. Wightman is quoted as saying about Mr. Vanderbeek:

There was certainly no evidence in the x-rays of the kind of change that is seen in those bones when fluoride intoxication over a long period has been present.

Now, the committee may have been unaware that x-rays could not detect any bone changes between 1965 and 1968, but Dr. Wightman certainly knew and he said so. I will read it again:

There was certainly no evidence in the x-rays of the kind of change that is seen in those bones when—

Listen carefully—

—fluoride intoxication over a long period—over a long period—has been present.

For this statement I take off my hat to Dr. Wightman. How unfortunate that the committee did not appreciate the significance of what he was saying.

Perhaps I should mention that I was a founding member of an international association organized in 1956 called the Society for the Prevention of Fluorosis, which was intended to parallel the other organizations trying to prevent heart disease, cancer, arthritis and rheumatism and all the rest.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I have had a long-time continuous interest in this disease. And from my reading of the subject, I am aware that the symptoms of fluorosis vary in different countries and in different persons, in different individuals.

For example, in India where malnutrition is widespread, palsy of the arms and legs is more prevalent among fluorosis sufferers than anywhere else. In southern Italy, where people live largely on fish, fruit and spaghetti, about one-half the cases are afflicted with stomach and bowel disorders, whereas palsy is rare.

In North Africa, where dates and bananas are the staple food, early skeletal changes are almost the only symptoms that you find mentioned.

The hon. members, I am sure, must wonder why there is so much medical doubt, confusion or ignorance about fluorosis, and I shall try to explain this briefly.

For several decades, fluoride air pollution from at least 50 different kinds of industries has caused proven damage to crops and animals in the neighbourhood and suspected damage to human health. Consequently, millions of dollars have been paid out, sometimes very quietly, to avoid publicity, and sometimes after prolonged lawsuits, to those farmers and ranchers whose crops and herds have been damaged or destroyed. Consequently, the industrialists have felt constrained to enlist the time and talent of legal and research brains to protect themselves from huge financial losses resulting from damage to crops, livestock and humans in the neighbourhood of the polluting factories.

One obvious step, Mr. Speaker, was to build up a vast library of research studies of the kind that would minimize, in a legal sense, the toxicity of fluorides and this effort has been so successful that the polluting industries, led by aluminum companies, have extended their sphere of influence to include the United States Public Health Service and, through generous grants, to the research departments of many universities. I can document all this and I will prove some of it in a few minutes.

Consequently, there are now several thousand articles—somewhere around 8,000 I believe—on fluorides, and recently a 786-page book called "Fluoride in Chemistry" was published containing a bibliography of over 3,200 references. The purpose of this, as of other similar publications, is to provide legal ammunition for court battles fought over damage done by fluorides. Naturally, but inevitably, all the scientific papers that have been published by the independent researchers showing the extreme toxicity of fluorides are excluded or at least, or at best, soft-pedalled.

Now this book, it is true, does cite a number of papers which present detailed cynical evidence of fluorosis detectable by means other than x-rays. But these papers are not discussed, they are merely cited.

These modern papers—Roholm wrote his classic "Fluorine Intoxication" in 1937—describe the symptoms of the incipient and milder stages of chronic fluorosis with which, of course, we are concerned in the Port Maitland affair. They include the symptoms recorded by Roholm, plus a few others. It is easy, unfortunately, to attribute other causes for these symptoms.

The symptoms include such familiar complaints as migraine, epigastric distress, spastic colitis and ileitis, arthritic pain especially in the lower spine, paresthesias in the arms and legs, visual disturbances, frequent episodes of pyelitis, polydipsia, polyuria and various skin disorders.

And I apologize for the bad language, Mr. Speaker!

Incidentally, this list contains several symptoms listed for the Port Maitland victims in addition to those that were already mentioned by Roholm. But the modern experts have found that fortunately these symptoms clear up without medication when and/or if the patient is removed from the fluoride environment—or vice versa, and the symptoms recur whenever the patient becomes subject again to more than a minimum of fluoride.

We have, then, the familiar story of the vested interests on the one hand versus every other consideration on the other, and that is what is at the back of all this problem.

Before I conclude this matter, Mr. Speaker, I should not like to leave the impression that I believe any of the so-called experts who testified before the committee had any vested interests to protect. I suspect that they had merely done what almost any other physician who wanted to know more about fluorosis would do. They undoubtedly sought information from the U.S. Public Health Service, which, as I indicated before, fell under the influence of the fluoride air polluting industries many years ago. Almost all of the information they gave at the hearings concerning fluorosis, Mr. Speaker, you or I could have given. You or I could have obtained it merely by writing to the U.S. Public Health Service. And with only this information to go by, you or I, Mr. Speaker, would have reached the same conclusion.

In case you do not believe this—and why should you?—let me offer one instance as evidence.

In a speech in 1952 Dr. John Knutson, chief of the Division of Dental Health in the United States Public Health Service gave a documented speech or paper, which minimized the toxicity of fluorides.

And I want to quote his exact remarks:

When fluoride is present in concentrations of 12 parts per million or more there may be signs of undesirable changes in bone structure. Such situations, however, are invariably alike in one respect. Whenever they do occur, it is always in communities where the drinking water contains at least 12 or 15 times the quantity recommended for controlled fluoridation.

Later one of the independent researchers challenged the veracity of this statement, claiming in a medical journal, and I quote:

Knutson cites six references in support of his statement. You would reasonably expect that they would support it. You would be wrong. In the first place, to call what they describe—as Knutson does—“signs of undesirable changes in bone structure” is perhaps the understatement of all times. In the second place, one of the references tells that serious chronic poisoning was found in 12 per cent of adults where the water contained only 1.2 parts per million of fluoride.

Now what was I to believe? In order to learn which one was telling the truth—the independent researcher or the minimizer of the fluoride toxicity—I managed to purchase from the Armed Services Medical Library in Washington, D.C., at considerable trouble, a photostat of the reference quoted by the independent researcher. He was right. The United States Public Health Service official was wrong. The original article which was in an Indian medical journal even contained a map showing the position of each well and the fluoride content of each well marked on the map.

One well contained 1.2 parts per million, another 3 parts per million, a third 0.6, a fourth 2.2 and a fifth 5 parts per million.

On reading the article I discovered:

Affected children, apart from dental conditions noted—

That is mottled enamel.

—do not appear to suffer in any way from the intake of fluoride and there would appear to be an interval, extending from childhood to about 25 or 30 years of age, during which few or no ill effects are exhibited.

About 30 years of age, however, the first symptoms of intoxication appear.

Now I will not take the time to read into the record what the terrible symptoms are—it is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that in an instance like this we could not send what we would like to spend the time reading down to Hansard and have it put in, instead of taking up the members' time, but I will sacrifice the description.

I will refer to the pages so that if anyone in The Department of Health wants to find them they can do so. This is an article by Shortt—S-h-o-r-t-t—it would almost take less time to read it, wouldn't it?

Well there is a photostat of it! At any rate I have found that. It is the Indian Journal of Medical Research, Volume 28, No. 2, October, 1940. It is called "Endemic Fluorosis in South India—A study of the factors involved in production of mottled enamel in children and severe bone manifestations in adults."

An hon. member: Read it!

Mr. Burr: Well, I will probably never get another chance, Mr. Speaker, so I am going to inflict the description on the members. I apologize for doing it, but you may understand that it is worth hearing.

About 30 years of age, however, the first symptoms of intoxication appear. This is evidenced by a recurrent general tingling sensation in the limbs and over the body in general. Pain and stiffness next appear, especially in the lumbar region of the spine but also involving the dorsal and cervical regions.

The stiffness increases until the entire spine including the cervical region, appears to be one continuous column of bone, producing the condition of poker back. Such patients to turn the head must turn the whole body, in fact, the spine loses its flexibility almost entirely; accompanying the spinal disability, there is stiffness of various joints due to infiltration by bony material of the periarticular tissues, tendinous insertions of muscles and interosseous fasciae. This leads to various other disabilities such as loss of the power of squatting. The bony skeleton of the thorax is markedly affected and the ribs become rigidly fixed at their junctions with the spine. This results in their complete inability to allow expansion of the cavity of the thorax and breathing becomes entirely abdominal, while the chest assumes a barrel-shaped outline flattened anteriorly. By the time this condition is reached, the individual is between 30 and 40 years of age and the latter and final stages of the intoxication are imminent.

This is almost nauseating, is it not?

The patients exhibit a definite cachexia. There is a loss of appetite and general emaciation. Symptoms of pressure on the spinal cord may appear due, as will be seen later, to bony encroachment on the spinal canal. There is loss of sphincter control in the later stages and impotence is common.

Did the Minister of Correctional Services hear that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am on the hon. member's side.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Would the member read the list of accreditations for the doctor for the Minister of Correctional Services?

Mr. Burr: I do not think—

Mr. Martel: Yes, give it to him, he wanted to question, he can wait around for the answer.

Mr. Burr: I do not think that is the right place is it?

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): I think the Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) should be here for this.

Mr. Burr: "The patient's symptoms of pressure"—no, I have lost the page—"impotence is common."

An hon. member: It might be common over there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do not look at me!

Mr. Burr: "The patient is finally completely bedridden while the mental powers are impaired."

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): That is not them!

Mr. Burr: "Then death usually occurs due to intercurrent disease."

Now I have quoted this at length partly because this is the condition to which Doctor Knutson referred as signs of undesirable changes in bone structure—and the independent researcher says about this—partly to emphasize the fact that with usual levels of fluoride dosage and in the absence of impaired kidney function, this is a disease which requires many years to develop and the fact that children slated for toxic manifestation may show no signs of what is to come except in regard to their teeth.

An hon. member: What happens to their teeth? Is that why the recommendation—

Mr. Burr: Well the teeth are merely mottled in childhood, that is the only sign.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Merely?

Mr. Burr: Well, this list that I have here is just a very, very short one. However, I will read it because this was written many years ago, I think:

Doctor Waldbott is a graduate of the University of Heidleberg.

This is for the special information of the Minister of Correctional Services.

He graduated in 1921 from the University of Heidelberg, Germany, with the degree of MD and came to this country in 1924. He is a fellow the American College of Physicians, the American Academy of Allergy, the American College of Chest Physicians and American College of Allergists. He is a former president of the Michigan Allergy Society and former vice-president of the American College of Allergists and an honorary member of several European allergy societies. He has published more than 125 medical papers.

This is close to 200 now.

Most of them original research. He founded, and at one time directed, allergy clinics at the Children's Hospital, Harper Hospital, Grace Hospital, St. Mary's Hospital, all in Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. Shulman: Pity the government has not got a Minister of Health like that.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Every one of his papers have been discredited.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member did not get my point?

He does not have to be bona fide to doctor, I agree with him. The point I was making, if the hon. member will permit me—the point I was making—

Mr. Burr: I am sorry I have not time. I do not want to keep the members here all night.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Suppose that government—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Why did the doctor not come and give evidence before the commission?

An hon. member: He wanted to, but they would not hear him.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: He refused to come.

Mr. Shulman: He wrote them letters and while they were here they would not hear him.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is not fact!

Mr. Deans: Why did he not come to someone who might listen to him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The supporters of the member's party did not let him come when he wanted to speak against fluoridation of water supply in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Burr: Unfortunately, this incredibly false statement of the chief of the dental services was news which any newspaper in the United States would probably print, whereas the medical article written by the independent researcher may have been actually noticed by a few dozen physicians and probably read by a mere handful.

Now two years later, in 1954, another issue of the public health reports had an article again minimizing the toxicity of fluoride and I am quoting from the public health reports, Volume 69, No. 7, July, 1954:

Prolonged exposure to fluoride in quantities over 10 parts per million of fluoride in the drinking water has been responsible for chronic fluorosis characterized by rigidity of the spine, stiffness and immobility of the joints, symptoms similar to those recorded by Roholm. The effects, attributed to excessive waterborne fluoride, have been observed.

Then he gives four of the same references given by Knutson.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, when you look up the references, you see that everything is true except the amount of fluoride actually in the water. The fluorosis occurred not at 12 parts per million or at 10, as this article says, not at 10 or 12 parts per million, but among those drinking water from wells containing mostly one to three parts per million, with one well having .6 and the highest well having six parts per million. I have a map of this in the photostatic copy so it could not have been a misreading of anything. It is there. It is as clear as the nose on anyone's face. It just could not have been a mistake, an honest mistake.

Now, building on these false data, a whole library of articles, papers and books have been published minimizing the toxic nature of fluoride.

There are very few physicians in America, I am sure, who are aware of this but in Europe, free discussion of fluorosis is the rule rather than the exception.

The English-speaking medical world gets almost all of its information on this subject from the United States Public Health Service, but scientists in the rest of the world are not so hampered. I want to give one example, a short example, as evidence of this. On page 70, the committee refers to the uterus of a pregnant woman: "Where the passage of fluoride from maternal to fetal blood is restricted by the placenta".

Putting that in words the layman can understand, Mr. Speaker, that means that the placenta has always been considered a kind of protective barrier for the unborn child against any toxic substance that may be in the mother's system.

I am sure that whoever wrote this part of the report had never heard of the five newborn infants in Czechoslovakia in whom post mortem showed—I will call this stomach hemorrhage—as the cause of death.

Further investigation showed a large amount of fluoride in these babies, these new-born babies who had died.

The fluoride had passed through the placenta from the mother to the child and further investigation, this is the interesting part I think, Mr. Speaker—showed that all five mothers—and I am quoting from the report which I have here from Czechoslovakia: "lived or worked in an environment polluted with fluorine".

What a pity it is, Mr. Speaker, that these five babies were not born down in Port Maitland, Ontario, where "an environment polluted with fluorine" does no harm to any human being. If they had been born down there, they would have been saved. The Hall committee tells us so.

This brings me to one other most important point. I have never used the expression "opening a can of worms", but it is a delightful expression. I have heard it so often lately. I think I am going to open a can of worms. I begin it with the question: How many milligrams of fluoride a day can be safely taken into one's body from soil, water and air? I wonder how many hon. members know the answer to this question.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): Yes teacher!

Mr. Burr: I know that the hon. Minister of Health knows the answer because he gave it in a prepared statement reported in the Globe and Mail last October 26. He said:

More than four milligrams of fluoride would have to be ingested daily on a continuing basis by a person before fluorosis would occur.

Was the Minister correctly quoted in his prepared statement?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No he was not.

Mr. Burr: He was not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What was the time on that statement?

Mr. Burr: There was a time on that? All right. Well the hon. Minister put the estimate rather high according to some other authorities.

Krepkogorsky, who is a Russian authority, sets 3.2 milligrams as the maximum safe daily intake. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration, back in 1963, said:

About two milligrams a day of total intake of fluorides can cause tooth mottling in sensitive persons.

Two milligrams a day from total intake—that is not from water, but from food and from air.

It would be impossible to state a safe amount for supplementation by an individual without knowledge of the amount of fluorides already being consumed by him from such sources as drinking water and food grown in soils that are rich in fluorides.

This is "Health, Education and Welfare", of the Food and Drug Administration.

More recently—and I have not the date with me, Mr. Speaker—but more recently, this is the way they put it. They said:

Two or three milligrams a day would probably be considered a safe concentration for fluoride ingestion from all sources.

I repeat:

Two or three milligrams—probably.

Now that is important enough to read again:

Two or three milligrams a day would probably be considered a safe concentration for fluoride ingestion from all sources.

There we have three opinions: Two or three milligrams probably safe; 3.2 milligrams the limit of safety; and then the four milligram estimate of the Minister of Health—which he is retracting apparently. So take your choice. It is in there somewhere, is it not? It is somewhere around three.

There are several directions in which I might take off from here, but actually I am going to take you to the Toronto General Hospital, just across the way, to which one of the Port Maitland men was sent back last Wednesday on December 11, after a kidney attack. A month ago he had had an attack of appendicitis. Now this man is Mr. Ted Boorsma, who had been hospitalized there from November, 1967, until April, 1968—five months—in a vain attempt to discover what was causing his serious ailments.

Mr. Boorsma, strangely enough, believes he is suffering from fluorosis and the circumstantial evidence, Mr. Speaker, certainly supports his contention. During his five-month stay, the Toronto General physicians could not account for his illness. The only thing about which they were certain was that his condition was not caused by his exposure to the fluoride air pollution at Port Maitland.

As a result of enquiries at the Toronto General Hospital I learned that Ted Boorsma is now on a high fluid diet. He is drinking almost two gallons of water a day. Each quart of Toronto's water now contains one milligram—one milligram—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Burr: Just listen to the arithmetic; you can figure it out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: A cancer expert would not promote cigarettes, so I think by implication you have my answer, Mr. Speaker.

To get back to the arithmetic which the member does not seem to enjoy, each quart of Toronto water now contains one milligram of fluoride, so two gallons contain eight milligrams.

Ted Boorsma is being given almost eight milligrams—let us cut it down a bit, call it six—of fluoride per day, despite the fact that the circumstantial evidence is strong that he is already suffering from too much fluoride in his body. He lived in an area where cattle suffered from fluorosis, where vegetation suffered from fluorides, where the evidence is very strong that many humans are suffering from fluorosis. And then they let Ted Boorsma drink almost eight milligrams of fluoride a day, when all the authorities say that around three milligrams a day is the limit that we human beings should be exposed to.

What do government authorities say—and actually this gets more interesting and more revolting, whichever way you like it, as you go along.

The United States food and drug regulations say that the maximum daily safe therapeutic dose of fluoride is one milligram a day. Canada's food and drug regulations are much more strict, or much more cautious. In Canada the maximum daily safe therapeutic dose of sodium fluoride for a healthy adult is 0.1 milligram. In other words, one tenth of a milligram is a daily dosage. One tenth of a milligram is what the Canadian food and drug regulations say is the maximum safe therapeutic dose for a healthy adult. Then, of course, as any physician knows, these drug dosages are cut in half for children up to about 15, and in quarters for up to about seven or so. When you get down lower than that they say nothing at all without a doctor's prescription.

So, when you realize that the fluoride part of the sodium fluoride is just a little less than half the total, then the amount of fluoride that is permitted is really one twentieth, not one tenth.

And there we have poor Ted Boorsma being advised to consume almost six, seven, eight milligrams a day.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Burr: I cannot joke about it, Mr. Speaker, I cannot joke about it. If a druggist or a doctor dispensed even one milligram of fluoride a day for a patient, in Canada, he would be breaking the law. And this seems incredible, but it is true. The irony of Ted Boorsma's situation is that he has left his home in Port Maitland where he was breathing too much fluoride.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Burr: The hon. member has made some good speeches, I agree.

The irony of Ted Boorsma's situation is that he has left Port Maitland, where he was breathing too much fluoride, and he has come to Toronto, where he is now being told to drink too much fluoride. Irony lies also in the fact that Toronto gets this fluoride compound from the ERCO factory in Port Maitland. I am not sure what the compound is called, but it is like hydrofluorosilicon. Something like that. But it has silicon in it, and that is one fluoride compound that has absolutely no industrial usage. So they cannot possibly use this stuff in any way except by selling it to Hamilton and Toronto to put in the drinking water—

An hon. member: To kill the people!

Mr. Burr: No, to cure this man of his kidney ailment.

So the report—and I am just about through on this, Mr. Speaker, you will be relieved to hear—the report certainly condemns the government for allowing pollution to develop, to the detriment of crops and livestock, as the hon. member for Scarborough (Mr. T. Reid) said the other day. But in the matter of damage to human beings, the report amounts to a whitewash. Now, green is the colour of fluoride in some forms, so perhaps we should call this the greenwash.

I should like to express my deep appreciation to the CBC for bringing this disgraceful situation to the public notice, and I deplore the committee's attempts to intimidate the CBC in doing its duty to the public. No one else had been able to get any action and the CBC got it, and they should be given all the credit for doing so. I wish to make two recommendations. Dr. Waldbott has made at least five recommendations which the hon. member for High Park passed along to the government last Wednesday. I think if I give them just two, it would be easier to remember and perhaps they can do something about it.

The first one is that ERCO should move the most seriously ill persons out of the area, into a fluoride-free environment, and give them financial assistance. Secondly, the government should have a thorough survey of the health of every citizen residing near the ERCO factory made by physicians who have had wide experience with fluorosis; wide clinical experience. These physicians must be independent, free from obligations or attachments to industry or government. And, Mr. Speaker, this Legislature should settle for nothing less.

I have all this still prepared, but I think I will save it for the Budget debate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Burr: Well by popular demand, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson asks me to continue. Is that right?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Burr: I promise, Mr. Speaker, not to give this speech again in the Budget debate.

I wish to make a few remarks on educational TV. I received this letter from a Toronto teacher regarding educational TV.

Dear Mr. Burr:

As a Metro teacher, I wish to express my concern over the state of educational television in Toronto. At a time when there is a hue and cry on every side to limit the spiraling cost of education this sacred cow—ETV—remains largely immune. This, in spite of the fact that the Metro Education Television Association's own survey shows that it is used hardly at all.

The solution to this, according to the Scarborough board's audio-visual experts, is to educate the teachers in the use of these programmes—Toronto Star, November 18. This would cost even more money and would improve the situation very little.

The difficulty which seems to elude the experts and the empire builders alike is a practical one. The programmes themselves are of excellent quality. Most teachers would like to make more use of them. However, the programmes are not geared to fit schools' timetables, neither subject nor period. Nor do they fit into a teacher's curriculum, except occasionally.

I had the good fortune recently to use a programme which had a bearing on our current classroom work. In order to do this, I had to withdraw my two classes from one-half of two periods each. That is I took away half a period from four other teachers.

If I did this once a month, and if every other teacher did it once a month, the school would cease to function. Of course, this is not the fault of META, although they occasionally sound as if they expected us teachers to adapt our courses to their programmes in the manner of the tail wagging the dog.

But in fact, the solution is ridiculously easy. There is no need for expensive TVs and administrative chaos. The programmes should be put on 16mm films and a copy distributed to every school. At the moment it is very difficult to get films because they must be ordered through the board, and usually are not available.

In this way, the teachers could use the film when it was relevant, without upsetting the school. This might be less glamorous than TV in every classroom, but it would save a lot of money, and both teachers and students would get a lot more value into the bargain. Yours sincerely,

Now, I was interested in The Ontario Department of Education booklet of January, 1968.

It was a statement on educational television to the standing committee on broadcasting films in assistance to the arts. Sir Alec Clegg a British educator, is quoted as follows:

For the majority of children, this eagerness to learn is much more likely to come from a carefully contrived experience on the principle that what I hear I forget, what I see I remember and what I do I understand.

Now with these three observations, we can all agree. But the third observation, "What I do I understand", far from being a reason for endorsing television, is actually a cogent indictment of it as an educational medium.

To use a simple example: The only way to become a proficient adder is to take a paper and pencil and practise adding. It would be almost impossible to learn arithmetic by passively watching TV. The same applies to reading and writing as well as arithmetic.

Only by doing can a person understand. Only by getting into the water can one understand what swimming is. And only by speaking can one learn to speak; not by hearing and seeing alone, but by doing, by speaking.

The new president of San Francisco's State College, recently posed what I consider a shrewd question. He said:

The child who watches television for four hours daily between the ages of three and 18 spends something like 22,000 hours in passive contemplation of the screen, hours stolen from the time needed to learn to relate to sibling playmates, parents, grandparents or strangers.

Is there any connection, he asks, between this fact and the sudden appearance in the past few years of an enormous number of young people from educated middle-class families who find it difficult or impossible to relate to anybody and therefore drop out? I assume he means drop out of society as well as out of school.

What the world needs most, Mr. Speaker, are mature human beings who can communicate, one with another—about the problems of the real world, about brotherhood, about the age of famine into which we humans have now entered, about the complexities of life—rather than teen-agers who have been over-exposed, perhaps brain-washed, by the over-simplified Madison Avenue fantasy world where there is a panacea for everything, where a certain deodorant will produce charisma, where a new car will enable a young man to attract beautiful girls, where cigarettes will enable a girl to attract handsome men and where an elixir will cancel out all the ill-effects of gourmandizing.

Such communication will never be learned by passive contemplation of the TV. It can be learned only by active discussion, or if you will by participation and involvement. And I cannot help wondering whether the hippies, who are certainly a phenomenon peculiar to the present generation, are in revolt against the real world of the 20th century or against the fantasy world that TV has led them to believe exists.

Now those young people who are rebelling against the world that permits the immoral and unjustifiable non-war in Vietnam and against a civilization that allows soulless corporations to exploit the natural resources of the earth for the profit of a few, the ones who are revolting against the materialistic society which preaches love and practises hate, which praises truth and profits by falsehoods—these young people most of us can understand for they are rebelling against the real world of the 20th century.

But the hippies—most of us of the older generation cannot understand. We had drop-outs, our failures, our alcoholics, even suicides, but we thought at least that we understood them.

I draw to your attention the theory that the hippies are children who have been brought up, one might almost say raised, by the TV. And finally, when because of their age they enter the real world that exists outside their school and their living room, they find themselves bereft of the pleasant hours of escapism with which they whiled away their non-school hours.

The real world is a cold world for which they have not been prepared by their mother substitute—perhaps we should call it their foster parent—the TV set in the living room.

Now it may be pertinent to ask where this demand for educational TV originated. It did not come from the teachers. If we could look behind the scene, we would find the educational equipment industry hard at work creating a market for its hardware.

During the 1930s everyone knew that ammunition workers had no scruples about creating a demand for their product and the tobacco industry today has absolutely no scruples about persuading our children to shorten their lives by smoking cigarettes. Their motto seems to be: "Promote or perish".

The fact that the expression Cui bono?—roughly translated "who is profiting?"—is a Latin phrase, underlines the fact that the selfishness of human beings individually or corporately, is not a recently developed human trait.

Madison Avenue can sell anything. ETV is just the latest in a long series of unnecessary gadgets and gimmicks developed, not for the interests of the consumer—in this case the pupils—but in the interest of the newborn educational equipment industry.

And I predict that if anyone has the temerity to indulge in prolonged criticism of the social value of this new industry, there will be no dearth of hatchet men who will arise to try to scalp him. There will be enough audio-visual experts and broadcasting buffs who will see a pathway to fame stretching before them if they can attain the status of experts in this new field.

Now, what can educational TV do that cannot already be done at infinitely less cost by movie films and film strips with which most school systems are already equipped? For the pupil, ETV is essentially a passive experience, even more so than is the case with classroom film strips and movie films.

The film strips and even the movie films, being under the control of the teacher, can be interrupted.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Is this the official position of the member's party?

Mr. Burr: No, these are all my own views.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am sure they are happy about it.

Mr. Burr: That may well be.

Mr. Deans: We have freedom of speech in this party.

Mr. Gisborn: We would be happy if the Minister would announce the results of that review he is making.

Hon. Mr. Welch: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Burr: Film strips, Mr. Speaker, and even movie films, being under the control of the teacher, can be interrupted whenever and for as long as the teacher or the students wish for the purpose of clarification or discussion. But ETV, being remotely controlled, cannot.

Film strips and movies can be fitted into the timetable and the individual teacher's individual course with a minimum of difficulty. ETV cannot.

In some schools, almost every room is already equipped with a screen and some kind of projector. Is it possible that the educational equipment makers have exhausted one market and are now trying to create another?

This came to my attention only today; the director of the Ontario Institute of Studies and Education, R. W. B. Jackson, recently made the following observation:

The new technologies and teaching aids—and even those now available and generally used poorly—hold great promise. But we do not yet know how to utilize them properly and for what purposes. It may take years of study, experimentation and trial, before we are in a position to advise teachers about their use. Classroom teachers have neither the time nor the technical knowledge to study and assess the value of such aids, and indeed, even school boards need some protection from the blandishments of salesmen from those commercial firms which are hungrily eyeing the vast educational market.

So apparently I am not alone in my views, Mr. Speaker, on this subject.

And to sum up my views, sir, on educational television, an occasional videotape used when the teacher wishes it may be of some value in the educational process, if only as a change of pace or a means of stimulating interest and adding variety. But to build up a complex, elaborate system in which ETV dominates the school programme, and in which huge investments in equipment and programming are involved, is of doubtful educational value and could become an educational white elephant.

Finally, I should like to warn the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) that there are four classes into which ETV enthusiasts may fall:

First, those who sincerely believe in its potential good; second, those who see it as a means of self-aggrandisement; third, those who have vested interest in making and selling the hardware and the programmes; and fourth, the inevitable inveterate compulsive empire builders.

I should like to warn him that there are two or three other groups who should be considered—namely, the taxpayers, the teachers and perhaps even the pupils.

Mr. Speaker, you have all been so kind and I think I will spare you the rest of my—no, there are other members, Mr. Speaker, who would like to speak and I will give the rest of it—well, Mr. Speaker, I have never boasted about my own constituency, my own home town, so I will give you just—what is that, about three minutes?

The motto of the Windsor Board of Education, Mr. Speaker, is: "Windsor schools excel". Although comparisons are said to be odious, I should like to relate to the members of this House one aspect of education in Windsor to which this motto certainly applies truthfully.

I refer to the adult evening school programme under the adult education committee of D. A. Lacey, D. T. Watson and L. S. Patterson, chairman. The total enrollment is about 6,600, which is very good for a city of about 190,000. Recently a Toronto newspaper pointed with pride, to conversational French evening classes attended by about 860; but Windsor, with about one-tenth of the population of Toronto, has 280 enrolled in such a course.

Outstanding success is being achieved in what may be called the creative arts division of the adult evening school, in which 2,400 of the evening students are registered. This department, supervised by Mrs. V. Nighswander, offers 50 different courses and will organize additional ones whenever and wherever a need can be shown and suitable accommodation and able instructors can be secured.

As yet, Mr. Speaker, there has been no request in Windsor for any courses in witchcraft.

Some of the newer courses include: Music for fun; gourmet cooking, for men only; delicious meals for dieters; entertainment unlimited; decoupage. Short courses are held on such topics as—this is quite light I must admit—cake decorating, six weeks; candy for Christmas, four weeks; yeast baking, five weeks; antiquing, eight weeks; and gift wrapping, four weeks.

Basic bridge, elementary chess, know your automobile, the parents' role in sex education and painting in oils, are a few of the other courses offered. The fees range from $4 to $15.

There are some aspects of this creative arts department which are of unusual interest educationally, Mr. Speaker. These are the aspects—the real reason I bring this to your attention. Almost every teacher in these night courses has been personally invited and recruited to teach.

Before being accepted each teacher must outline, in considerable detail, the entire course he or she would like to teach and Saturday morning teacher training periods are provided. Most of these teachers are dedicated and enthusiastic about the courses they are presenting and many devote countless extra hours to unrequired preparation, because to them their subjects are almost a way of life which they are teaching to others.

The success of these courses can be measured by the number of drop-outs. There are scarcely any drop-outs, even in the 61 sewing classes. A truly remarkable record for any night school, Mr. Speaker, and sound evidence to support the claim that, "Windsor schools excel".

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, this is a little strange for me tonight, because at the last session we had 40-some new members and, of course we wanted them all to have their say if at all possible. So we refrained from taking up the time of the House at that session and, of course we feel that our constituents might feel that we are not looking after their affairs if we remain silent much longer.

I heard the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) over there a moment ago, and I understand come the next time around there will be a few reeds shaking in the wind.

Today, in my Throne Speech, I will be speaking on a broad range of matters. It used to be when a member spoke in this House he stuck to the matters that concerned his riding only. But our country has now, so to speak, grown up and, because of modern-day communications, one must concern himself or herself with a wider range of problems. Not for one moment can he forget his constituents, the people that sent him here, and the local and personal problems. He must concern himself with the problems that lie on the local doorstep, but he must also concern himself with provincial and national matters and even, at times, world problems. Because today they all can be interrelated and interwoven.

In this I am reminded of a speech that Edward Burke made to the electors of Bristol almost 200 years ago:

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests; which interests each must maintain, as an agent and advocate against other agents and advocates: but Parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole: where not local purpose, not local prejudices, ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member indeed: but when you have chosen him, he is not member of Bristol, but he is a member of Parliament.

And so it is here today, we must be as versatile as Edward Burke felt he should be two centuries ago.

Since this House last adjourned one of the hon. members who sat here some years ago passed away in the person of Mr. John A. Craig, of the village of Calabogie. Mr. Craig sat for the riding of Lanark North from 1929 to 1934, and then again for the combined riding of Lanark from 1934 to 1937.

One of the interesting things was the tour made of northwestern Ontario by a great number of the members of this Legislature last September. I think it was a worthwhile tour. We saw something of the vast country of northwestern Ontario—and a vast country it is. It was easier to realize how gigantic the undertakings of this government are when you look at the vastness of that area.

On that tour we had the privilege and the pleasure of meeting the son of the first member who sat for the riding of Renfrew South, in the person of Kenneth MacDougall of Red Lake. His father, John L. MacDougall, sat for Renfrew South, both in the Legislature and in the House of Commons in Ottawa from 1867 to 1871.

Something of local interest in the riding of Renfrew South. On October 9 last, our Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) assisted by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett) and our second vice-chairman of Hydro opened the Mountain Chute generating station in the vicinity of Calabogie. A beautiful day it was and when they pulled the switch, of course, more energy was released for power-hungry Ontario. Barrett Chute and Stewartville are two more projects that are getting a face lifting, or are being enlarged, on the Madawaska. It is all part of our orderly programme to develop hydro facilities on the river.

We are very hopeful too, that in the not too distant future, officials of Ontario Hydro can be convinced to further develop on the Madawaska in the vicinity of Highland Falls, near Griffith, Ontario.

I recall about a year and a half ago the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) took a journey up into the valley one weekend and I think he was talking about the orderly development of hydro on the Madawaska system. I want to tell this House tonight just how orderly the development of hydro facilities on the Madawaska system has been since those awful days previous to 1943 when this government took over.

Right now on Bark Lake on the Madawaska system we have had going for the past three summers a clean-up job. This is the result of an order-in-council the Hepburn government passed in 1940 or 1941, allowing the Hydro to do what they willed on the Madawaska system. They built a storage dam on Bark Lake and flooded it before the clearing operations were half completed. Consequently, they ruined the lake, for all intents and purposes. It is this government, through The Department of Lands and Forests, that is now engaged in cleaning up the mess that this group left.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, just hold on.

I might say that the people of eastern Ontario have pretty good memories, elephant memories in fact. The leader of the Opposition was back down there not so long ago. He was there in the first week of the hunting season—in the Cornwall area and the Ottawa area. He was being many things to many people. He was wearing a coat—some thought it was a hunter's coat, but I am told it was a Joseph's coat, a coat of many colours. The Bible defines Joseph's coat as a coat of many colours.

But I might go on to say that, although it was the first week of deer hunting season down in eastern Ontario, the hunting was not very good. Because, as I told you a moment ago the people down there have elephant memories and it will be a long time before they forget about those awful days previous to 1943. We—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): They have not had much to remember since you were elected. What about your roads?

Mr. Yakabuski: Do not tear up that history—do not tear up the provincial history from 1934 to 1943 and stash it away because too many people have not forgotten and still remember. You cannot bury it. It is there.

In Renfrew county, half of which I represent in the House, we have a very progressive county. We have many firsts insofar as county work goes in this province. We have here a new study prepared for Renfrew county on the tourism possibilities of that county. I understand this was prepared by Duncan M. Anderson, who is with the geography department of Carleton University in Ottawa. I understand that it is the first county that has produced such a survey and plan insofar as tourism is concerned. Another first, of course, for Renfrew county.

Of course, we have many ARDA projects completed in Renfrew county. More are on the books and as a matter of fact sometimes in Renfrew county we feel we are moving too fast for the ARDA director.

I might mention, when we are still talking about our county that, as in all other counties, the new school board elections were held on December 2 last. The thing that disturbs me, though, is that some of these new boards already want to rush into posh administrative buildings.

Up in our county we have, in the village of Eganville, a former high school that is about to be vacated. This school would provide an excellent facility or excellent accommodation for the board that soon will be in operation, that is, after January 1 next year.

The point I want to make is that I feel that this board should seriously consider using the building I mentioned, because it is there and will be provided without cost to the board. Whereas a new administrative building would cost plenty of money, of course.

But I say to these people in the county that would advocate not using the facilities in Eganville and are seeking out facilities in the town of Pembroke, that most county councils are always telling this provincial government—and probably do likewise in other provinces—that we should be decentralizing at a faster pace. I say to the board in Renfrew county, that if they want to put into practice what they feel the province should be doing, they should decentralize from the county seat in Pembroke and use this accommodation that is available in the town of Eganville.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Why does the member not write them a letter?

Mr. Yakabuski: We have to get it on the record, the member knows that.

Mr. Sopha: Write them a letter.

Mr. Yakabuski: This past summer, in 1968, marked the 25th anniversary of the Progressive Conservatives in Ontario taking power.

About that time the Ottawa Journal saw fit to write an editorial pertaining to the present government and it was entitled "Robarts Kept His Pact With Ontario."

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): He kept the faith.

Mr. Yakabuski: Kept the faith is right.

An hon. member: Who wrote that, Gratton O'Leary?

Mr. Yakabuski: No, Gratton is gone from the editorial staff, has he not? We will just read a little of it for the record:

The Premier Robarts government was entitled to have Lieutenant Governor W. Ross MacDonald say, on proroguing the first session of Ontario's 28th Legislature, that this was one of the most productive in years.

Mr. Nixon: I think John wrote that himself.

Mr. Yakabuski: I continue to quote:

Twenty-five years ago on August 17 next, George Drew became Premier of Ontario and this began an extraordinary, unbroken series of Conservative governments in the province. Robarts' achievement is to have given a vitality and freshness to the provincial party.

So as to the vitality and freshness in the present Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, I think that you people over there can look forward to more successive administrations by the Progressive Conservative Party in Ontario.

Somebody a moment ago was talking about Gratton O'Leary and the Ottawa Journal, but we have here, something from a Renfrew paper and this one is not noted for supporting the Tory Party. Let us see what they have to say. It is entitled "25 Years"—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What did the Globe say about the north?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, can you not stop this heckling?

Mr. Yakabuski: The second last paragraph says:

The disturbing fact to P.C.'s, as well, is that after 25 years of Conservative government the Liberal Party in Ontario is unable to offer an alternative acceptable to the voters. The Conservative Party is the establishment and firmly entrenched. The Liberals are so disorganized that there is no change in sight. After 25 years one might expect changes.

And the last part; this from the Liberal Renfrew Advance:

Yet Ontario voters will go Liberal as "all get out" for federal candidates. It would almost seem that performance, not party, is the quality the voters remember in the polling booth.

Mr. Nixon: What is the hon. member's performance?

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, I would not say that the member's has been that good as leader of a party. Not too much is expected of us on the back benches. But I will tell you one thing. There is talent on the back benches here that you could use on your front benches over there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: As a matter of fact, he would be making an awful smart move if he moved his entire back bench to the front bench.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: There is that reed shaking in the wind again.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, we are getting to it.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The Minister is blushing.

Mr. Yakabuski: The other day after the Dominion-provincial conference was postponed due to Premier Bertrand's ill health, Premier Bennett of B.C. called a news conference to make public the presentation he had prepared for the conference. One of his suggestions was the consolidation of Canada insofar as the provinces are concerned. He suggested that the framework and the geography of provincial Canada be altered, and that five viable provincial units be established. They would comprise B.C., the western provinces, Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritimes.

I feel that this is a very reasonable and progressive suggestion. Ontario, B.C., and Quebec are viable units in many ways. The eastern provinces have long entertained the idea of a Maritime union for some time. We know that Manitoba and Saskatchewan have many problems stemming from their lack of wealth; and that more recently Alberta has begun to feel the economic pinch. All in all, a lot of what Premier Bennett suggests is what many people have been thinking for a long time. The same problems that face municipalities confront the provinces, too, on a larger scale. We are striving to overcome some of our municipal problems by implementing regional government. It is only reasonable to state that some pattern of regionalism on a national basis can cure at least some of the provincial ills. In my mind, Mr. Bennett's suggestion should be pursued on a national level just as vigorously as we are pursuing the implementation of regional government here in this province.

Our greatest problem here in Ontario is a financial one, because we do not get a large enough slice of the tax money generated here. We are being asked by the great pharaohs in Ottawa to pick up—in other words, to pay—too large a share of the national or family budget. When I say family, I mean our family of provinces. You do not have to be an economist to know that Ontario is the goose that lays the golden eggs insofar as Canada is concerned. But Ottawa is snitching too many of Ontario's golden eggs! Ottawa is not leaving us enough to hatch or multiply! Ottawa is depriving Ontario of the golden eggs required to foster a climate of growth and expansion that is the number one requirement if we are to meet our commitments to the people of this province.

It would be sheer stupidity—utter suicide—to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. That is just what Ottawa is doing. The time has come when the people of this province should be made more aware of the federal government's unilateral attitude.

The federal government called the conference, and before it begins the Prime Minister of Canada sends a directive to the province saying what their policies or terms are; such as they did on fiscal matters and the off-shore mineral rights. They put the lid on discussion before the conference starts.

Mr. Sopha: Is the member going to Ottawa with the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton)?

Mr. Yakabuski: No, I hardly think so, but when I hear from the hon. member for Sudbury I am reminded of this, which appeared on the back page of that edition commemorating Sir George Brown's birthday, and this is on the back page of the issue from George Brown College, I believe it was, and it said—

Canadians have been weary of the stereotyped politicians; the backslapping, baby kissing babbits, who blather banalities, and the Bible thumping country bumpkins, who look upon the possession of a law degree as a certificate of uncanny wisdom and oracular power.

When I read that, Mr. Speaker, I could not help but look over at the member for Sudbury, sir.

When our Prime Minister here in Ontario hosted the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference a year ago last November he opened it up to the press and public. It was his first time around, and he showed great courage in doing so. But the Prime Minister of Canada and his "just society" have been reluctant to open the Dominion-conferences to the press or public. These "just society" people would like to conceal the facts from the people of Ontario and Canada! They do not want a knowledgeable public! It amounts to the suppression of news—and in a sense, censorship in peacetime!

Let them open the conference to the press; and the public too, if it is at all possible. Let them show good faith. Let them not only preach, but practise too, the principles of a "just society".

I was pleased to receive the other day a copy of "Journey to Biafra", and I want to thank the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) for making it available to me. As you know, it is a collection of first-hand information on the Nigeria-Biafra civil war. It was compiled from observations made during a recent visit to Biafra, and other knowledge the hon. member for Scarborough West has gathered from working there some years ago.

I must commend the member on his dedicated work and his intense interest in the unfortunate people involved—the victims of perhaps the greatest tragedy of our time, Biafra. I do not have any knowledge to speak of when we discuss Biafra—certainly I cannot speak with the authority the member for Scarborough West can! He has spent time there working with the people before the war began, and has revisited while the most unbelievable calamities were taking place. But I can think of no other tragedies since the atrocities of World War II which have touched the hearts of so many people so deeply.

That is why I believe it merits mention even in this provincial Chamber—even though it is mostly a federal matter insofar as government in this country is concerned.

Let us review briefly the sequence of events which led up to this great tragedy. I speak with scant knowledge—only that which I have learned from talks with missionaries who spent some years there. Some of what I say will be repetitious, and certainly I cannot tell it in the authoritative and able manner the hon. member has in his so well documented booklet "Journey to Biafra".

In the 18th and 19th centuries, slaving ships plied the Niger River and the natives withdrew from the banks as the slave-traders approached. They eyed the white man with well-founded suspicion. It was not until 40 years after slavery was abolished in the United States that the Christian missionaries were able to break through the wall of fear the Hausas and Ibo tribes had of the white man.

The Ibos gradually embraced Christianity—but the Hausas who are Islamic rejected it. As there were no schools with the exception of those provided by the Christian mission, the Ibos had an opportunity to acquire some education, while the Hausas tribe remained largely illiterate.

It was not until Nigeria became one of the emerging nations that a system of state education was begun. Consequently when Nigeria was founded, the Ibos were the only people capable to some degree of taking the places in the civil service of the government of that nation.

There are approximately 40-odd million Hausas, and only 10-odd million Ibos in Nigeria. Because of the religious differences of the Hausas and Ibo tribes; and because the minority people more or less govern the country, the ancient antagonisms that festered in the minds of the Hausas tribe were opened anew. The Hausas, who vowed long ago to drive the Ibos into the seas, laid their plans for genocide.

They learned from men like Hitler or Stalin and the heads of other states in the communist bloc that to totally subjugate a people you must first do away with the educated and the intellectual. This the Hausas did when, in the dead of night without warning, in one swoop they murdered 30,000 Ibo civil servants in July 1967. Biafrans or the Ibo are not fighting so much for separation from Nigeria, but for their lives and the lives of their women and children. They know that death on the battlefield is not as horrible as the death they would endure at the hands of the Nigerians should they be forced to surrender! Nigeria will not be satisfied with anything less than annihilation and total massacre of the peoples of Biafra.

The tragedy of Biafra is further complicated by the interference of Britain and the Soviet bloc on the side of Nigeria. Only De Gaulle of France is helping the Biafrans. Imagine Britain—that once great nation that we all loved and revered—being part of this genocide! She cannot look after her own people and those who count on her for assistance and direction; yet she, without shame, can contribute to this tragedy!

We are all grateful that the hon. member was able to journey to Biafra, observe and return safely to create a full awareness here of the terrible conditions there. Yes, we are all pleased he returned safe and unharmed, because he has made a great contribution to humanity. He could have been killed. Killed by a bullet or a bomb made in the U.S.S.R. (socialist Russia), socialist Czechoslovakia, or by the trade unions of socialist Britain!

Where does the tragedy of Biafra leave us? The Canadian government last summer refused to recognize the desperate situation. The Prime Minister of Canada, when asked about Canada's position, replied in a smart-alec fashion. His words were, "Where is Biafra?" He did not get away with that attitude for very long, because the moment the federal Parliament met—and even before that—he was forced by the loyal Opposition to backtrack! He made a feeble attempt to provide some aid, but allowed our efforts to become ensnared in international diplomacy. The International Red Cross has been rendered ineffective in the dragnet of negotiations. Up until a short time ago only Caritas—a Vatican-sponsored organization employing Swedish pilots flying by night—was getting any amount of aid through. The United Nations has refused to act, and the countries belonging to it are too meek to speak. That is not surprising, because as far as I am concerned the United Nations died with Dag Hammarskjöld.

I was pleased our government made a gift from the people of Ontario which arrived in Lagos on November 14. Our Prime Minister said on October 4, when the gift was made, that this government was deeply moved by the privation and miseries the Biafran war had cost.

Surely our so-called "pockets of poverty" appear relatively insignificant when compared with the conditions in Biafra. At a time like this men must stop being trivial. A short time ago, Lord Snow, speaking at Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri—where 22 years before Winston Churchill uttered his famous "iron curtain" phrase—spoke on this very matter.

I quote from an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal, entitled "Stop Being Trivial", Lord Snow said:

We have to stop being trivial. Many of our protests are absurd, judged by the seriousness of the moment in which we stand. We have to be humble and learn the nature of politics.

He went on to say:

Let us be honest. Most of us are huddling together in our own little groups for comfort's sake.

The Ottawa Journal, in its editorial, finished as follows:

Student power, police power, the disaffection of the young, these and all the clichés of the modern protesters, shrink into insignificance beside the stark question of life and death Lord Snow puts before us.

We can, as a nation and a people, do much more toward preventing genocide in Biafra than we are doing. Let those who are commissioned to direct our efforts do so without delay. My purpose in speaking on the question today is to attempt to create a better awareness of the problem and to supplement in my small way the efforts of the hon. member for Scarborough West, and men like Senator Edward Kennedy of the U.S.A., who is devoting considerable time to this very matter.

Much has been said in recent weeks about the provisional master plan for Algonquin Provincial Park. No doubt more will be said and Algonquin Park will always be a place of great interest to the people of this province and thousands of others living beyond the borders of Ontario.

The park was established in 1893 largely on the recommendations of Alexander Kirkwood. It consisted of 1,466 square miles but with additions over the years, it now comprises almost 3,000 square miles.

The objectives in setting it up were: (1) to preserve the headwaters of the parks' river systems; (2) to preserve the native forests; (3) to protect fish and game, birds and fur-bearing animals; (4) to provide an area of forest experimentation; (5) to serve as a health resort and pleasure ground for the benefit, advantage and enjoyment of the people of the province.

We note here that the establishment of the park was strongly supported by the lumbering companies who were permitted to continue operations. I believe that the objectives set out at its creation have been more than achieved.

Lumbering began in the area of Algonquin Park a half-century or more before it became a park. From around the 1850's to the 1940's, the pine forests that were at home in the Ottawa Valley and extended into the park were taken first in the form of square timber and then in the form of the finest lumber ever produced anywhere in the world. I can remember 40 years ago seeing the log trains puffing through Barrys Bay with Algonquin Park pine and later the cars and cars of 3 in. by 12 in. pine boards without a blemish being sawn at the Omanique Mill for the J. R. Booth Co. I might say this was all for export at a time when this nation had little else to export.

The lumbermen were not engineers but built a series of dams to slush logs downstream. These dams, although originally built for the purpose, later became recognized as wonderful conservation dams. So much so, that some of them are still maintained; others have been rebuilt and play a large part in our conservation programme for the area. On the Muskoka watershed, nine such dams are under the control of The Department of Public Works and in the eastern watershed 18 are under the control of The Ontario Department of Lands and Forests. The romance and the daring of winter logging and the spring river driving passed away several decades ago and with it a colourful era in lumbering history.

Lumbermen in recent decades have been conservation-minded. I cannot say that, perhaps, for the earlier operators because they only took the cream or choice timber.

Fire is the lumbermen's greatest enemy and he has always practised extreme fire precautions. You will not catch a lumberjack leaving a fire that has any chance of re-blazing. Of fires that have burned in Algonquin Park, over half of them resulted from careless campers and most of the others have been caused by lightning.

I feel that I can safely say that the lumberman has preserved Algonquin Park for the people of this province. If it were not for the lumberman, much of our forests would have been destroyed by fire. The network of roads that they built for their operations attributed largely to the efficiency of The Department of Lands and Forests fire-fighting methods. The fact that they had men readily available for fire-fighting duty saved hundreds of thousands of acres. These were the days before the water bombing technique was developed. Water bombing in itself does not provide a complete answer to the forest fire hazard. Fighting fire in our timber stands is much the same as waging modern warfare. First, in a military operation, comes bombing or shelling to neutralize the enemy positions. This must be followed by the mobile infantry to hold, consolidate and clean up. The same in fighting forest fires. Sure, you can water bomb a fire and slow it down or neutralize it to some extent, but if you are unable to put men and machines in to extinguish it, it may only be a delaying action. To get the men and equipment in, you need a reasonable network of roads. The lumbering roads in the park have served and will serve this purpose well. For the most part, the outdoors visitor and lumber people get along very well. These visitors enjoy a learning about the forests from these people. They like the lumberjack's tales of logging, fishing and the great outdoors told with a local flavour. For over half a century, they have worked and played together. They are allies, not enemies. The tourist industry and the lumbering industry in our area have been happily married for over half a century and one assists and complements the other. Now, you would tell them that they are not meant for each other, that they should separate and fight each other.

The people of our area depend entirely on the lumbering and tourist industries. Our area, because of its geographic location and its marginal soils, is not one of rapid growth. We are having great difficulty in providing for our people because of these factors. Our people are untrained to live by other means. Therefore, at least for this generation, they must depend solely on lumbering, tourism and farming (that is in the better farm lands in the eastern part of our county).

I have spoken for these people and I have defended their rights on many occasions. Today, I do so again in this Legislature. Two years ago this government commissioned a group of so-called experts to do a study on Algonquin Park and to produce a new overall plan for that great tourist mecca.

The purpose, I believe, was to review the first seventy-five years of existence and to recommend a new policy with new purposes and objectives to fit the present era.

Here it is—the provisional master plan for Algonquin Park of which I am sure all members have a copy. It was completed in late September and the members of this Legislature bordering the park were given a preview of it on October 8 last. We were requested to keep what we saw and heard in confidence until it was released to the public on November 4. This we did.

On going over the plan at the preview meeting and then later upon the official release, we found it in many ways to be an excellent document. When I say many ways, I certainly would not want to leave the impression that we agree with it in its entirety.

I think that what most people lose sight of is that this plan is still a proposal and not yet at least government policy. All members have a copy of the plan and know that there are multiple use zones, a primitive zone, a natural zone, a historic zone and recreation zones proposed.

As I said earlier, many of the proposed restrictions in the use of the park are good proposals that will contribute to the use of the area it was created for. But there are three recommendations that are unacceptable to our people and for very good reasons.

The first is the reservation on lakes, rivers and streams for a distance of 1500 feet where the no-cut rule applies. The second is the proposed restriction on logging in July and August. The third is the restriction on road building during July and August and the location of these roads.

Now, before I deal with these matters, let me tell you about a strange happening in this connection. When the plan was finalized and printed, the no-cut reservation read 500 feet. But before the plan was released, an extra page was inserted moving that limit upwards to 1500 feet.

The people who proposed the limits originally are knowledgeable people and they said 500 feet was sufficient. But someone else who, I am sure, has a very limited knowledge of Algonquin Park and lumbering in an area of that type has seen fit to make the change.

The point I am trying to make is that there was no valid reason for changing the limits, especially increasing them to a degree where they become unreasonable and ridiculous.

There have been many briefs and verbal representations made to The Department of Lands and Forests pertaining to the plan. Some say it is not restrictive enough, while those whose very lives depend on it maintain—and correctly so—that the amendment I am proposing should and must be made!

I attended a meeting in Pembroke on November 21 where over 700 lumberjacks braved an extremely stormy night—that is, weatherwise—to attend. On November 26th I was present at a hearing in Pembroke; and again on November 28 I attended another hearing here in Toronto.

The people affected by this plan felt that they were not allowed sufficient time to prepare their case, but I understand that the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) has agreed to receive submissions for some time to come.

I respect the views of others insofar as the plan is concerned; but the plan must be modified if that area of our province is to survive.

We maintain that the main purpose of Algonquin Park can be sustained and fostered, and yet not disrupt the lives of a single person in the area. We base our reasoning on the following:

The 1500 no-cut reserve should be rolled back to 300 or 400 feet, with severely restricted cutting allowed even in that portion.

Because it is only a good forest management practice to remove trees that should be harvested.

No canoes or outdoors people venture more than a few feet from the water's edge when travelling the waterways of the park.

The Lands and Forest people even remove fallen trees, etc., from canoe portages to make the going easier. Why, then, advocate a jungle along Algonquin Park waterways? Some of the most valuable timber stands are in the no-cut reserve area. As you leave the waterways and proceed to higher ground, the timber is sparser and of a much lower quality.

Rather than create a jungle along the waterways, let us put to use good forest practices, whereby trees that should be taken are taken; and in this way we can beautify rather than destroy the forests. Let me quote from Mackenzie Porter's article of July 30 last in the Telegram entitled:

THE RAPE OF ALGONQUIN PARK IS ROT

The theory that Algonquin Park is a victim of rape is rot. The logging companies are removing only the mature trees. In this pursuit they are providing the younger trees with more light, more water, more air, and so enriching the foliage.

It is not widely known that trees resemble men in their aging. There comes a time in their life when it is better for their kind that they should be removed. I learned in Algonquin Park that trees reach a peak of life and then decay.

It goes on to say:

I returned from Algonquin Park with a new view of one of my own hemlocks. Eight years ago it was a magnificent tree. For the last three years it has begun to seem to die from the top downward. I blamed the squirrels, the woodpeckers and the wisps of smog creeping up from the city. But now I know that I was wrong.

My hemlock is a very old tree. It is like a very old man. Its time to die has come. And soon I shall go at it with my chain saw, and without compunction.

Only the English oak and the Pacific Coast redwood, I hear, live on and on, for hundreds of years. Lesser trees must be thinned out at maturity for the sake of arborial hygiene.

The removal of trees in the so-called "no-cut" reserve area is approved—in fact strongly recommended—by professional foresters, lumberjacks who have spent their entire lives in the woods, and by Lands and Forests timber experts themselves!

Let me substantiate this by quoting from volume 21, no. 36, of a Department of Lands and Forests newsletter dated November 1, 1968, page 3. This is entitled "Initial Cutting of Temagami Timber Will Begin This Year."

Foresters working in The Department of Lands and Forests North Bay District have warned Lake Temagami cottage owners that continued opposition to cutting the lake's timber stands could end in economic losses and aesthetic desolation.

Much of the white and red pine around the lake is now about 250-years-old and about 2 per cent per year is dying solely from old age. Very little reproduction is noticeable due to the lack of light and competition. Also, trees of this age produce relatively little seed.

In a recent letter from North Bay District Forester, W. L. Sleeman, to the Lake Temagami cottagers and other interested parties, it was pointed out that an initial cutting will take place this winter at the extreme east end of Shiningwood Bay, when some 200 trees will be removed. Next year, during the 1969-70 operating season, cutting in the Obabika Inlet area will remove about 25 to 30 per cent of the trees beyond 100 feet from the shoreline.

The main purpose of these operations is to assure a continuing shoreline of white and red pine. At the same time, a portion of the 300 million board feet can be utilized without perceptively interfering with the present beauty of the lake.

Lands and Forests Timber Branch chief, A. J. Herridge, says this is an excellent example of the department's overall concern for multiple-purpose management.

Any new test methods used will be strictly supervised by the department in co-operation with the Temagami Lakes Association. They will be limited to small areas to start, and assess the best methods to suit different areas of the lakeshore.

So you see, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, Lands and Forests themselves, who have considerable experience in this area, strongly advocate the taking of trees that should be taken.

The lumber companies in the past decade or more have operated under the watchful eye of The Department of Lands and Forests. They must abide by the very tight regulations pertaining to logging and lumbering in Algonquin. They can take only the marked trees. They must lop and trample down the limbs, etcetera, of the unused portions of the trees as a fire prevention practice. They are told how much they can cut and where they can cut it. Very often they are forced to cut and haul to the mill trees that have little or no value at all. I know of one lumberman who closed out his operations there because his cut was not of the type on which he could make a profit. He had to cut and haul 60 or more miles to a sawmill logs that, when sawed, produced no marketable lumber. The fire dues, recently hoisted, are almost prohibitive to say the least.

With regard to the summer operations, they are now the "make hay" months of a lumber operation. Lumbering before mechanization was primarily a winter-time operation, with the summer a time for the sawing of lumber. Now, as in every other industry, the trend is to bigness in the lumber industry as well. If you do not have a sizeable operation you cannot compete. Because, although the cost of lumbering equipment has multiplied by four times in the past 20 years, the price of this product has increased only some 20 to 30 per cent. Cutting is now done almost every month, with the exception of the spring months. Sawing takes place ten or more months of the year. June, July and August are the months most suitable for the building of roads, as the spring and fall are usually too wet in the woods for the equipment required today.

The lumberman has worked toward a full-time or year-round operation for a century or more. Now with assistance from our mechanical and technical age, he has almost achieved that goal. He can now provide his men with almost full-time employment. To curtail summer logging in Algonquin would be a backward step. We must face the facts and the demands of this mechanized age. Besides, a great many park visitors look forward to the opportunity of seeing the logging operations. This is substantiated by the fact that over 100,000 visitors last summer toured the logging museum which is situated near the east gate of the park. If this museum were located near the west gate, where most visitors enter, I am sure that figure would be close to half a million. If we are to close down summer lumbering operations because a very small percentage of park visitors do not want to see them, or prefer absolute solitude, it is just as reasonable for us, who live in that area, to say close down all industry in the Golden Horseshoe of Ontario because our children, who often visit relatives down here in the summer months, do not want to be subjected to the pollution that fouls the air of southern Ontario. In my mind, gentlemen, this may be an absurd request, but it is just as reasonable as the one made by the Algonquin Wildlands League.

With regard to the location and building of roads, I can only say that this should be left to the operators. After all, who knows better than the lumberjack where a road should be built? He can locate and build it to a minimum standard to serve the industry. I am afraid if roadbuilding is left to The Department of Lands and Forests it will be the provincial taxpayer who will suffer. The roads will most likely be wrongly located and built to too high a standard. The cost of building and maintaining it will be excessive.

On December 1, last, in the midst of all the controversy over the Algonquin Park provisional master plan, the CBC entered the debate through their infamous programme, "The Way It Is", hosted by John Saywell and Patrick Watson. On that occasion, they were assisted by one John Livingstone, who on the Sunday previous had made much of the destruction strip mining in Kentucky had done to the countryside there. He endeavoured to compare the destruction wrought by strip mining in Kentucky, before laws governing that type of operation were introduced, to what would happen to Algonquin Park if lumbering were allowed to continue. As a matter of fact, the previous week, Mr. Livingstone had gone to Algonquin provincial park for a first-hand look. He was there all right and came back with his distorted picture. In truth, the programme, "The Way It Is", centred on the night of December 1, was one of complete distortion in every facet. So much so that it prompted Mackenzie Porter, writing in the Telegram two days later, to take it apart, piece by piece, and expose these distortionists for what they are. John Livingstone returned from Algonquin Park and gave to the viewing public only what he wanted them to see and hear—the slanted, biased version of lumbering operations in Algonquin Park.

He did not mention that Department of Lands and Forests personnel were with him on that journey and that they had made him aware of their tree marking programme, the selective cutting regulations and all the other regulations that a forest products producer in Algonquin Park must adhere to.

Around the end of their presentation, these extremists from the CBC stooped so low that they questioned children, in many cases whose entire knowledge of parks is what they may have seen operated here by the Metropolitan Toronto Conservation Authority.

They were so intent on selling their biased, slanted version to the viewing public that they overdid it. So much so, that even viewers with little knowledge of Algonquin Park, or who are against logging there, were not taken in by their presentation, and in the interests of fair play, loudly disapproved.

Certain of these people employed by the publicly-owned corporation, the CEC, feel that they do not have to answer to anyone. They feel that they can create, distort or destroy and they care little who may be injured in the process. Is it a just society when a tool as powerful as the CBC is left in the hands of this irresponsible minority?

Another good example of CBC reporting can be taken from the pollution affair at Dunnville. I believe the CBC called it, when presented, "The Living Death". Only a few days ago, a commission appointed to look into the Dunnville pollution affair reported back that the CBC had presented an untrue picture. They had not even consulted local doctors or the medical officer of health for that area. At the time the programme, "The Living Death", was shown, they created a mass hysteria by their one-sided presentation.

I recall some thirty years ago when, on a Sunday night, Orson Welles starred in a radio programme on which it appeared that the planet Mars was attacking the eastern seaboard of the United States, that a mass hysteria was generated south of the border.

But Orson Welles was only acting out a fiction story for the entertainment of the public and not presenting what the public would be asked to take as fact. After creating the hysteria he did, Mr. Welles at least was gentleman enough to apologize to the American public if his presentation was so real that many citizens had believed it to be a fact.

I have long felt that the CBC should be sold to private enterprise. The CTV network, owned and operated by private enterprise, has developed into a fine network in a few short years with better programmes of a higher quality.

It is the old story of private enterprise versus socialism. There is just no comparison. One of my reasons for suggesting the sale of the CBC is because it would be in the national interest. The CBC is the greatest threat we have to national unity. The greatest contributor to discontent, alarm and mass hysteria and, as I said earlier, the findings of the Dunnville commission point this out very strongly. It is not in the national interest that it function any longer.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Who would the hon. member sell it to, Lord Thomson?

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, if we let private enterprise run it, it would be run properly. If the CBC was sold to private enterprise, many of its personnel would be jobless. Business corporations would not allow them to squander its funds as they do with the Canadian taxpayers. This talent is of a type we wouldn't mind exporting. It is the kind of brain drain we would welcome.

If the proposals, such as the 1500 foot reserve, the banning of summer operations in July and August, are retained in the original plan, great hardship would be placed on many people. Not only would the area that depends on this operation be affected, but many other sections of the province as well.

So, therefore, the problem regarding this plan that confronts us today is not a local one, but is one of almost provincial magnitude!

The furniture industry in Kitchener-Waterloo, Stratford, Elmira, Meaford, Southampton, Hanover, and many other localities would be forced to curtail their operations because of a shortage of raw material. Places like Trenton, with a pole-treating plant, would be in jeopardy.

Our export market would suffer, and our foreign exchange and balance of payments would be affected.

Only last night I talked to some truckers from the state of Kentucky, who were hauling large loads of our Algonquin Park maple to the town of Winchester in that state. The Algonquin Park hardwood has a well-accepted name, not only on this continent, but throughout the world.

Getting back to the effect that this plan would have on various parts of this province, I must say that the thousands of people in our area who know no other work but lumbering would be displaced. These people could not move to another locality to seek employment.

They would be in no position to work in other industry, and could not afford a home or accommodation in the industrial part of the province. The family unit as it pertains to these people would be destroyed. The government would be saddled with an additional and great welfare burden.

The economy of the whole area would be destroyed. The claim that increased tourism will in time take up the slack is "wishful thinking." I say this, knowing that the Muskoka area, that is half-a-century ahead of the area east of Algonquin Park in tourist promotion, is just as concerned as we are over the effects this plan would have if adopted.

The government of this province receives in revenue from the Algonquin Park lumber operators almost $1 million dollars per annum; but this is relatively unimportant when you take into consideration that that million generates a $25 million dollar lumbering economy in the area, and towns like Arnprior, Pembroke, Eganville, Killaloe, Barrys Bay, Chalk River, Mattawa, North Bay, Kiosk, Whitney, Madawaska and Huntsville, would be pretty desolate places without it.

With regard to the commercial establishments, that is, youth camps, tourist operators, etc., in the park, I feel that they should be phased out. They do not contribute to any great degree to the magnetism of Algonquin. They often exploit local labour, and take advantage of students who seek summer jobs there.

As a matter of fact, I feel that the department should review very carefully their agreements with these people, and make themselves aware of some of the practices employed by them!

This statement can be borne out by a paragraph contained in a brief prepared by the grade 13 biology class of the Madawaska Valley District High School, entitled: "Comments on the Proposed Master Plan for Algonquin Park." I quote from paragraph four of that brief:

Greater government control should be exercised over the concessions for visitors' services in the park. Students in our school who worked in concession establishments in the park during the 1968 summer season claimed that wages and working conditions were not satisfactory; and that certain unfair practices existed.

Youth camps I feel should be phased out. They do little for the youth of this province. They cater only to the few elite—and many of their guests are from other lands. I do not want you to feel that we should not share our blessings with those from other lands, but this can be done in many other ways.

The member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps) has a motion advocating the setting up of a department of youth in Ontario. I feel that when this is done—and it should be done—the new department, in conjunction with The Department of Lands and Forests, should make available to the youth of Ontario in an ever-expanding way the facilities of Algonquin Park.

Youth should be encouraged to take advantage of our great outdoors! High school and university classes in some instances could be taught right within the confines of that park and other parks. Our junior ranger programme should be expanded—or perhaps revamped to encompass a larger segment of our youth.

It could take on many more shapes and forms. In this way, our young Ontarians could learn first-hand of the many facets of our province that hitherto were shut off from them.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Lands and Forests has received well over a hundred briefs concerning the plan. I know that companies such as Consolidated Bathurst Limited, Murray Brothers Limited, McCrae Lumber Limited; Canada Veneers Limited; Hogan Lake Timber Limited; The Chamber of Commerce in Arnprior, and countless others by groups or individuals, have been submitted.

I have read them all, and I have attended hearings and heard many of them being presented. They are all fine briefs that spell out in better wording and more clearly than I, the matter that is at stake.

I was particularly impressed with the brief presented by Mrs. Dorothy Picard of Deep River, Ontario, in which she outlines the effects certain proposals would have on the family unit. Let me quote just one sentence from that brief:

I consider that the total implementation of the aforementioned plan to be a serious threat, not only to the economic security of many families, but perhaps an even more serious threat to the family as a basic unit in our Canadian society.

Mr. H. Ladd, of the International Woodworkers of America, also presented a fine brief on behalf of his organization. He said at one point in his brief, when referring to the 1500 foot reserve:

This one simple proposal, in my judgment, wraps up the element of extremism to which people are prepared to go; and I might say that if Robert Conway and his small group of wilderness people seek the extreme solitude, let them go to Polar Bear Park, the most northerly park of our province, where they can enjoy their absolute solitude—play hide-and-peek in the tundra, and weep under the willows that grow so readily in that area.

And so—there it is! To retain or reject! I would appeal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), the Minister of Lands and Forests, my hon. colleagues, and all concerned to let commonsense prevail in the implementation of the proposed provincial master plan for Algonquin Park.

I know that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Lands and Forests will receive countless letters from the extremists, and those who have little knowledge of the subject matter.

Unfortunately the victims of this extremism are not letter-writers, because most of them did not grow up in the age of equal educational opportunity.

But, Mr. Prime Minister and Mr. Minister of Lands and Forests, if you were to read their hearts and to see the concern written on the faces of their loved ones, I would have no fears as to what the answer will be.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resolve into the committee of the whole House to consider Bills number 16 and 17 and then continue with the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.25 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today, the visitors in our galleries are: in the East Gallery, students from Eastwood Collegiate Institute in Kitchener, and Centennial Avenue Public School in St. Thomas; and in the West Gallery from G. A. Wheable Secondary School in London, and St. David's Senior Public School, St. David's.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt), from the Standing Legal and Municipal Committee, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following Bill with certain amendments:

Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if I might ask the Prime Minister whether, if it becomes a choice between completing this Bill and completing the Throne Speech, he has given consideration to completing this bill because of its extreme urgency and if necessary, leaving the conclusion of the Throne Speech until after the recess?

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I hope we could avoid that but I think, quite frankly, that the number of people who wish to speak in the Throne Speech, plus the importance of this Bill, may make it impossible for there to be any likelihood of us doing both and getting out of here before the week-end.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given this a good deal of consideration. I would hope for the co-operation of the members of the House in order that we may deal with the expropriation Bill in committee as soon as it is reprinted. It was necessary that it be reprinted because of amendments made in the legal bills committee. It is not on the order paper this afternoon, and I doubt that the reprinted copy is in the members' bill books. I would anticipate calling the committee of the whole House tomorrow afternoon and devoting tomorrow afternoon, tomorrow evening, and whatever time might be necessary on Friday, in order that we could complete our consideration of it and still be free perhaps to rise late Friday afternoon, or perhaps Friday evening.

I might say there is certain difficulty in travel arrangements on the holiday week-end because if you cancel your arrangements at this stage of the game, you cannot replace them with others.

I am taking a look at some of those matters to see if we cannot accommodate the members, but I would be quite happy to put the balance of the Throne Speech debate over until we resume, probably early in February. I do not want to press the members, those who wish to participate in that debate. I do not want them talking up against a deadline necessarily.

I would suggest the House might give first priority to the expropriation Bill. Let us see if we cannot clean it up by late Friday afternoon or Friday evening and then, if there are other members who still have not spoken and wish to speak in the Throne debate, we will resume that debate early in February when we reconvene.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO COLLEGE OF ART ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, The Ontario College of Art Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just a very brief word on first reading. The College of Art, of course, experienced certain difficulties a few months ago. The government requested the chairman of the committee on university affairs, Prof. Wright, to study the existing legislation and to come up with any suggestions or recommendations as to any new structure for the college. The bill that is presented here represents quite a significant change with respect to the administrative structure of the College of Art. It reflects, pretty completely, the report presented by Prof. Wright and, to a degree, the legislation that was actually contained within the report.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): May I ask a question on the procedure for this bill?

Mr. Speaker: If it is of clarification, it is quite in order.

Mr. T. Reid: Is the Minister going to refer this bill to the Education Committee shortly?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Possibly we should introduce it on this occasion in case there are some who would like to meditate upon it over the festive season. Then we should come to grips with it in greater detail at the end of that period of time.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, this bill would require that drugs and medicines be sold only in childproof containers.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require persons under 18 years of age to take an approved driver education course before being issued a driver's license.

THE MUNICIPAL AND SCHOOL TAX CREDIT ASSISTANCE ACT, 1967

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal and School Tax Credit Assistance Act, 1967.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to remove the obligation to repay tax credits allowed under the Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management has a statement.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a report to the members of this Legislative Assembly on an occasion which took place yesterday, in the council chambers of the county of Peel. This was the official signing of agreements between five south Peel municipalities and the Ontario Water Resources Commission for the development of a massive $88 million water supply and sewage system for the area.

This scheme, which will cover an area of approximately 480 square miles running from Oakville on the west to the Metro border on the east, and extending about 20 miles inland from the lake, is the largest of its kind ever undertaken as a joint provincial-municipal project. The result of this agreement will be an adequate supply of treated Lake Ontario water to the towns of Mississauga, Port Credit, Streetsville, Brampton and the southern portion of the township of Chinguacousy, and provision for sanitary sewage from each municipality for treatment and disposal.

The project is being financed by the province of Ontario, and the municipalities will pay for the services on the basis of use. The Ontario Water Resources Commission will own and operate the systems on behalf of the province.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement is the culmination of nearly four years of negotiations between these municipalities and the OWRC. These negotiations progressed through several informal meetings where differences were aired and resolved, and culminated in a three-day meeting last March 9, when an acceptable formula was evolved for the development of water supply and sewage projects. Now that this acceptable formula has been evolved, I am certain that the southern Peel county area water supply and pollution control agreement will not be the last of this type that the Ontario Water Resources Commission will negotiate.

Those signing the agreement on behalf of the commission were Dr. J. A. Vance, the chairman, and D. S. Caverly, the general manager. The municipal signators were: town of Mississauga: the mayor, R. W. Speck; clerk, G. Lummis; public utilities commission, town of Mississauga: chairman, J. E. Dobbs; manager and secretary, A. P.

Kennedy. Town of Port Credit: mayor, T. E. McCollum; clerk, A. D. Thomson. Town of Streetsville: mayor, J. J. Graham; clerk, L. M. McGillivray; public utilities commission, town of Streetsville: chairman, R. K. Walker; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. E. H. Lamb. Town of Brampton: mayor, W. H. Brydon; clerk, J. Galway; board of water commissioners, town of Brampton: chairman, Mr. William Sproule; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. B. Plant. And the township of Chinguacousy: reeve, C. Clark; clerk, R. S. Holmes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Social and Family Services has a statement.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to announce two appointments within the department. Mr. M. Borczak, executive-director, programmes division, since 1965, has been appointed associate deputy Minister. Mr. Borczak joined the department in 1946. His exceptional talents and abilities have seen him rise through a succession of responsible positions.

In 1951 he was appointed executive assistant to the Old Age Pension Commission; in 1953 he was named director of old age assistance to which was added blind persons allowances in December, 1954; in 1958 he was appointed director of the welfare allowances branch, a post he held until his appointment as executive-director in 1965.

Miss Dorothea Crittenden, executive-director of finance and administration since 1967, has been named assistant deputy Minister, a noteworthy appointment. Miss Crittenden, a graduate of the University of Toronto, joined the department in 1937. Her grasp of the financial and administrative aspects of our varied programmes saw her rise steadily. In 1954, she served the department as personnel officer and later she received responsibility for financial matters of some considerable importance, Mr. Speaker, in these years.

In April, 1967, she was appointed executive-director of finance and administration.

It is to be noted that women are given great responsibility within my department. We have long recognized their abilities to discharge administrative functions in the fullest sense of the word, while at the same time adding those womanly qualities of patience and understanding so necessary when a government deals with persons in need of assistance and services.

As further examples, recently we appointed Mrs. Elsie Etchen as director of our new branch of planning and research. Mrs. Etchen brings to this important post many years of experience with the Ontario Civil Service Commission.

Miss Robina Morris is being appointed vice-chairman of the board of review. She has wide experience in the social service field.

Just recently I also had the pleasure of noting the 25 years of capable and productive service of Miss Elsie Stapleford, director of the day nurseries branch.

Miss Betty Graham, director of the child welfare branch, is responsible for the many programmes directed toward the well-being of our Ontario children.

Mr. Speaker, the department is proud of their ladies and I am sure all the members of the House are associated with that pride.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Since the 1953 statute respecting rent control in Ontario restricts the application to municipalities in which "the wartime leasehold regulations" are in force, can the Minister inform the House how extensive the present application of the 1953 statute would be?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the extent of the application of the 1953 statute may be found in Ontario Regulation 239-52 as amended by Ontario Regulation 276-52, in which schedule 1 sets out the areas to which the regulation applies. This schedule was subsequently amended by Ontario Regulation 289-52, 324-52, and 25-53, so that as this regulation read on April 2, 1953, the date of the coming into force of The Rent Control Act, the Act applies to approximately 199 municipalities.

For more particular information, reference can be made to the regulations which I have mentioned.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask the Minister if these 199 include the major municipalities of the province by way of population?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is very scattered. I think something like 15 out of the 29 cities are on that list, for example.

Mr. Nixon: Is Ottawa, for example?

Hon. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Is Windsor?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is the Minister prepared to press for new legislation to control the sale and display of glue, nail polish remover, and similar toxic substances, as requested by two coroners' juries during the past week, as reported in the Telegram today?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, at the recent federal-provincial health Ministers' conference, all of us representing the provinces supported the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his support of this Bill C-22 that is presently before the federal government and has as its purpose, control of such toxic substances.

I must, in honesty, point out sir, that none of us was overly enthusiastic about this method of approach to it, but in the absence of some better approach to this very difficult problem we supported the Minister of Health and Welfare.

Mr. Nixon: Could I ask the Minister then, Mr. Speaker, is—since he is not overly enthusiastic about the federal bill—is he contemplating anything at the provincial level that would augment its effectiveness?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Speaker, I hope I did not mislead the hon. leader. It is not because the federal government's bill is not satisfactory—it is as satisfactory as such a bill can be. But all of us are very concerned about the punitive approach to this problem.

We do not think this is the way to deal with it but, frankly, we do not know how to deal with it. If all of the substances that are involved in this category were ruled out, it would cut a tremendous swath across the products that are very commonly used in nearly every household today.

Mr. Nixon: Like nail polish remover.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Right. Well, we could do without that, but with the glue, for instance, an awful lot of people make their living in jobs where they have to use this kind of glue. But there are other substances. I shall not name them because the youngsters know them well enough without me repeating them here. Unfortunately even educational methods have not yielded the fruitful results that we had hoped.

While we are searching for other methods, we do intend very vigorously to support the federal bill in every way we possibly can at the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions, two of them for the Minister of Municipal Affairs, one carried over from yesterday.

Since it was suggested to tenants in the "tax reduction notice" sent to every Ontario householder, that they turn to the local municipal police for help if they are unable to obtain their tax rebate, have local municipal police been instructed how to deal with such enquiries?

Further, what advice will the Minister's own department have for tenants seeking to obtain their tax rebate when they phone his department after January 1?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question would be that the local municipal police are familiar with the procedures concerning the laying of an information and the processing of it through the courts, with respect to an offence punishable upon summary conviction under any statute. Therefore, it is not necessary to give special instructions to them on how to deal with such enquiries under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act.

With regard to the second part of the question, officials of my department will explain the provisions of The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act to the tenant and the landlord, and endeavour to secure the facts of the situation, determine the entitlement, ensure that the landlord understands his responsibilities under the Act whenever possible and attempt to persuade the landlord to pass on the benefit to the tenant.

Failing this, they will draw the landlord's attention to section 7 of the Act which deals with the penalty for such a contravention of the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Minister expect to have that completed by June?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not think so, not quite.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what I was afraid of.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: By June?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

To the Minister; has the department or the Ontario Municipal Board received a request for an investigation of the affairs of the town of Picton? If so, what action has been taken?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the department has not received a request for an investigation. I understand, however, by phone, that the Ontario Municipal Board has received two letters, both dated December 9, which they received on December 13. One is from a Mr. Reg. Moore of Picton enclosing certain newspaper articles, the second from a Mr. H. Evans, who apparently is not a resident of Picton, but a resident of the adjoining township. Both of these letters are being forwarded by the Ontario Municipal Board to the department and when they are received we will give consideration to the request.

Mr. MacDonald: My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Attorney General.

Is the Attorney General aware of the public threats of physical violence reported in last Saturday's Kingston Whig-Standard made by Reeve Barney Hepburn of Picton against reporter Jack Brett because of news stories by the Kingston paper on the municipal administration of Picton?

If so, is there any action that the Attorney General can, and will, take through the local Crown Attorney to cope with such threats of physical violence?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have some awareness of the situation, but I have checked further. There have been no complaints made to the Crown attorney, nor any complaints to the Crown attorney at all. I am sure that if any were made they would be investigated at once.

I am aware of certain newspaper articles, but nothing has been brought to the attention of the law enforcement people in this nature.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of University Affairs. Can responsible bodies within a university, such as the faculty association, secure from The Department of University Affairs and/or the committee on university affairs, a copy of the budget for their university?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education and University Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is apparent that if any person or organization wishes to have a copy, say, of the university budget, they should attempt to secure it from those who are responsible for its preparation. Neither The Department of University Affairs nor the committee on university affairs feel that they should be an intermediary in this matter and submissions now coming to the committee on university affairs are not budget submissions per se because of the formula operation.

I would think if members, say, of the faculty association within the university wish to peruse the budget of that university, the best way would be to ask the university administration for it. We do not have all this material any longer within the department itself, in any event.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, could I clarify one point there?

Does the final budget, or a copy of the final budget ultimately come through to the department or to the committee on university affairs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, certainly not for all institutions. The annual report and certain factual information we require, but because of the formula operation, the budget item, shall we say, within individual departments do not come to us. This is the difference of a course of three years ago.

I think the best way would be to contact the individual university.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Will the report of the Minister's committee on farm income be made available in advance, to delegates of the mid-January conference?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that it will be, providing we have it and I see no reason why we will not.

We are told that it will be available about January 6, and we intend to make it public at that time through a press conference that we are calling for that day so that the farm income committee can not only present the report to me, but will be able to present it to the press.

Members of the agriculture committee of the House will all be forwarded, by mail, a copy of the report, including the leaders of the Opposition parties and any others who may ask. I felt that there may be some members of the House who really would not want the report, but if they want it they can ask for it and get it. But the agriculture committee members and the two leaders of the Opposition parties will receive copies.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has the floor and thereafter, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour.

Since the workers at the Cyanamid Company of Canada Limited at Beachville have been locked out since December 9, would the department intervene to bring the parties together for negotiations again?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, the department is fully aware of the situation and we have been giving assistance and will be doing so again in the normal way.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for York South is not finished.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was contemplating that meaningful reply. I do not know whether I got anything or not.

However, my final question is to the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Is the Minister aware that general welfare assistance recipients in Cornwall who are under 45 years of age, until recently had to report to the welfare officer every morning, and now two and three times a week, in order to qualify for municipal welfare?

Secondly, is this practice followed in other municipalities?

Third, is the Minister in agreement with this practice?

Fourth, if not, what does he propose to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I understand the reporting the member refers to is part of a re-employment programme operated by the local administrator in an attempt to secure jobs for these recipients. They claim some success with the programme.

The practice is followed in some municipalities where such a positive re-employment programme has been developed to assist the recipients in achieving independence.

I do not object to employable recipients reporting periodically where a local re-employment programme is in operation and it is achieving the results.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Are OHC records of tenants, of South

Regent Park in particular, confidential information?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question. The Ontario Housing Corporation recognizes and respects the privacy of its tenants; therefore tenants' records are treated as confidential information. However, where a tenant chooses of his own volition to make public, either through the press or through a member of the Legislature, details of his personal circumstances, and where the details given are erroneous or misleading, then it is incumbent upon me to correct these false impressions.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Well that is the answer to last year's—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Surely.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am asking in light of what was stated on page 2898 Hansard May 14, 1968, where the Minister stated:

I say that I deplore the publicity which is given to tenants and applications of OHC, whose applications are considered by the corporation as being of a confidential nature. It distresses me when the personal circumstances of such families are needlessly aired in this Legislature and in the press.

This was in answer to my question. Mr. Speaker, would the Minister answer if this is consistent with his thinking about the particular case that he is speaking about today?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, certainly. If these people are exploited by the Opposition or the press and it is an unjust accusation against the Housing Corporation, I intend to use that information in this House or publicly to protect the Housing Corporation.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A further supplementary question please, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a supplementary question and the Minister will answer it—yes; otherwise, no.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he considers this as exploitation by the Opposition. It is a letter dated the 15 of December:

Mrs. Renwick:

Could you please ask Mr. Randall, Minister of Trade and Commerce if OHC records are confidential—see Toronto Star December 10, 1968.

Signed, R. E. Dick Birch

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to answer that question.

I have the answers to some of the questions the press asked Mr. Birch and in view of the inaccuracies, I answered it in the Star following his interview by the Star. Now I do not wish to bring this man's name out any more in this House, but if you insist on me outlining the inaccuracies of Mr. Birch's I would be very glad to do so.

This is what I mean by exploiting people in unfortunate circumstances. I deplore it and I hope the members will not do it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister has answers to questions from another day, I believe.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I have, Mr. Speaker, but I do not see the members in the House so I will hold the questions until they are in if you like.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has some questions from the other day and some today.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education.

The following statement by Heather Tapp of Sir Sandford Fleming College of Applied Arts and Technology, Peterborough, was published in the Globe and Mail, December 16, 1968:

Many government agencies will not hire the graduates of community colleges. For example, the social services course was set up to fill the need for social workers in Ontario, yet social agencies such as the Ontario Psychiatric Hospital and hospitals for retardates will not hire our graduates.

In view of this statement, will the Minister evaluate the professional and academic curriculum of the CAAT in such fields to assure the taxpayers of this province and prospective CAAT students that the courses of study are relevant to our complex society?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the council of regents and the boards of governors, of course, carry on an on-going evaluation of the existing and proposed courses. Part of the problem in the past—and which I think is now in process of solution—is to acquaint the various government agencies as well as the private sector with the new courses that are available within community colleges.

I think for a period of time some existing employers did not appreciate some of the courses and the course structures. We are very optimistic that this is now getting through to the employing agencies. I believe that the Civil Service Commission, for instance, just a few weeks ago, sent a memo to various government departments suggesting that they re-assess their personnel requirements in light of the new courses and so on available within the various colleges.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary on that, Mr. Speaker.

Is the Minister's office taking a lead in this or is this being left, for example, to the Civil Service Commission or to the various councils?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that we are all involved in it. The council is, the various boards of governors, the institutions themselves and as I say, the commission.

Mr. T. Reid: A second question for the Minister of University Affairs, sir. Has the Minister's office instructed the universities to withhold payment of the grant portion of the awards to students until 1969?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. I think it is a well understood part of the programme and publicized within the procedures that student grant cheques, that is, the second portion of the awards will be available to students at the commencement of the second term.

The department is presently in the process of preparing approximately 43,000 such cheques and these will be forwarded to the various post-secondary institutions so that they will be available as planned. This has been the procedure in past years.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary on that, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister aware that in his own regulations there is a statement "where the loan portion is less than half the total aid, part of the grant portion may be paid in the first term"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, I understand that, that is there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: Supplementary to that, sir. There are quite a few students in our universities and other institutions of post-secondary education where the loan portion is less than half—much less than half—the total aid, who need the money. I would like to ask the Minister therefore, if such students have received part of the grant portion as of now and if not, when they will receive it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would have to take this question as notice and get the specific information for the hon. member. Part of it relates to the date that the applications have come through from the universities, of course, requesting this and I would have to get some specific information for the hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a real problem. I am glad the Minister will look into it.

A third question, to the Minister of Education. Is the decision by the Metropolitan Toronto School Trustees to reject the principle of a separate secondary school for French-speaking students in Metro, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, incompatible with any of the principles of Bill 141, 1968?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess I have not had quite the usual amount of time this morning to carefully peruse that morning publication so I cannot say that I have been able to assess properly what the report itself says.

I think that I could outline the principles that we feel exist in Bill 141 and then, perhaps the hon. member might himself, assess whether these are compatible or otherwise with the decision of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board.

The objective of the legislation—and I think this is the essential part of it—is to provide French-language students with equal and comparable opportunities for education. This, in my view, would mean access to composite school programmes including vocational, technical and commercial options as well as academic.

This is best provided, I think, Mr. Speaker—and this is a personal point of view—in the composite school position where it is feasible to assemble sufficient students.

Now obviously in this province, Mr. Speaker, there has to be some flexibility, because this will vary from one geographic area to another as related to the number of students that are available for this particular type of programme.

I would say—and I emphasize this—on a very cursory examination of a statement in this morning's paper, that it would appear that the solution suggested by the Metro board (and I think it is a suggested solution) may not necessarily be the best, or the only way. As I say, I am not in a position to say at this stage whether it is incompatible or otherwise. I do not think there is any necessarily set pattern.

Mr. T. Reid: Would I be correct, Mr. Speaker, in assuming from the Minister's remarks that his statement last year in introducing Bill 141, at which the Minister said "at the secondary level the ideal situation in our view, the government's view, would be the establishment of French language composite schools providing all options and programmes." Does the Minister still believe—

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is exactly what I have said.

Mr. T. Reid: Right. A further supplementary question. Will the Minister request from the Metropolitan Toronto school board the committee report entitled: "From the committee appointed to consider the establishment of French language classes in schools", dated November 20, 1968, and signed by the chairman, C. T. Clifford? And will he particularly review on page 2, the second paragraph of section 3 entitled: "Secondary School for French Speaking Children" to see if the statement of intent in that paragraph is consistent with the views that he has just expressed now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to have a look at such a report. Perhaps the hon. member, in that he has one present with him, might expedite the matter by sending me his copy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

What is the reason for the inordinate delay in reaching a decision as to the eligibility of Stanley Kuzik, of 131 Fifth Avenue, Timmins, to continue to receive family benefits as a disabled person?

When will a decision be reached?

Hon. J. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am checking into the matter and will take the question as notice.

Mr. Ferrier: My second question is of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

What was the gross revenue realized by the Ontario Northland Railway on the shipment of the 812 carloads of concentrators shipped by Ecsall Mining Co. from their Hoyle concentrator? I should have put in "in September".

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the gross revenue realized by the Ontario Northland Railroad for these shipments was $213,971.04.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): The Minister is not here.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister is absent. The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

Has the Minister met with the representatives of the Ontario Association of Family Services Directors during the past six weeks to discuss private voluntary family services in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, we are in course of correspondence with the association to determine a date mutually suitable for such a meeting.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

As some teachers' colleges will be taken over by the universities in the fall of 1969, will the Minister inform the House of the government's policy re tuition fees for teacher education at universities and at teachers' colleges?

Will there be a set of standards for admissions to teachers' colleges operated by the department and a different set of standards for admissions to teacher education courses operated by the universities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, I think I recall answering a similar question just a few days ago. I indicated that in spite of the finality indicated in the report from the committee of presidents on this matter, the question of teachers' colleges really had not been finalized. I am not in a position yet to make any statement with regard to the first question asked.

With respect to the second question, the standards for admission to the teachers' colleges—and I made a statement on this some weeks ago, are being raised to 60 per cent, effective September, 1969. This is for our own teachers' colleges, no matter what happens with respect to the universities. The admission requirements or standards will be comparable, no matter what date some transfers may take place.

Mr. B. Newman: If I may ask of the Minister: Is the Minister stating that there will be two different sets of standards then for admission?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am not. I am saying that the university admission is, generally, on an average of 60 per cent. I am saying that we are already telling our teachers' college applicants that for September, 1969, they will require 60 per cent. I am saying there will not be a double standard.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question from yesterday and one today.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Will the Minister instruct the International Nickel Co. to submit to the committee studying the fog conditions on Highway 17 at Copper Cliff Creek, the dates on which water from the boilers was dumped into the creek during the last five years?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Water Resources Commission has never placed much emphasis on the discharge from boiler operations as a major contributing factor to the conditions that exist in Copper Cliff Creek. As a result, information has never been requested from INCO regarding the discharge of boiler water to the creek. Should the fog committee find this information to be relevant, it will request same from the International Nickel Co.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That committee has been in a fog ever since—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: That is what I thought.

Mr. Sopha: That is why I would not go.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question, if I might?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Yes.

Mr. Martel: In view of the fact that the water being emitted is at 212 degrees, does the Minister not feel that when this is dumped into water that is approximately 30 degrees there would be fog created?

Mr. Sopha: First tell him it is boiling.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I think, Mr. Speaker, I answered that question when I said that the Ontario water resources never place much emphasis on the discharge of boiler operations as a major contributing factor to the condition that exists in Copper Cliff Creek. That was my answer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. member has a further question.

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Mines.

Is the Minister aware that Gary Slessor, an INCO employee who, over his objections, was ordered to work in an area in which large amounts of gas had concentrated, passed out from the gas fumes on October 24, 1968, and had to be pulled out of the water into which he fell as a result?

Will the Minister now support the request of the United Steelworkers of America that men instructed to work in areas where large concentrations of gas can collect, may have the right to request a gas test and that such tests be taken in the presence of the employees affected?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. Minister of Mines care to answer the question which has just been directed to him?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Now that we have the hon. Minister on his feet, let us hear from him.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, this incident has been and is still being very actively investigated by the officials of the department.

In answer to the second question, as a result of that investigation, if a change in government policy is required, that change in government policy will be announced in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a question.

Mr. Shulman: I have a question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Minister agree with the view expressed by the Minister of Mines, as quoted in the Sudbury Star of September 24, 1968, "the sole purpose of an inquest is to determine the cause of death of the person concerned"?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the article to which the hon. member refers. But I would say that the main purpose of an inquest is to determine the cause of death, how, where, when, why, the deceased came to his death.

There are other objects—to make the facts public, to give the jury an opportunity to make recommendations which may prevent such occurrences in the future, and to determine if, in the cause of death, there was negligence of such a nature that criminal or other proceedings may be taken. The main purpose is to determine the cause of death. I would say that to determine the cause of death includes these other considerations which are wider than just the simple interpretation of those words.

Mr. Shulman: Would the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: In view of the fact that the Minister of Mines' comments were made in Sudbury where there is severe disaffection with the conduct of recent inquests, would the Attorney General consult with the Minister of Mines and perhaps enlighten him as to the views of the department on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have found in my dealings with the hon. Minister of Mines that he needs no enlightenment.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker that is a matter of opinion. I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is your department currently financing a study of the life of hippies in Yorkville; if so why? What is the cost of this study?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, our department is financing a study in Yorkville, but I don't think it can be delineated as study of the life of hippies in Yorkville. The study is a follow-up of the investigation of hepatitis which was carried on early this year. The cost of the study is estimated to be $18,735.00.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Minister allow a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Let me hear it, please.

Mr. Shulman: Has the study to do with hepatitis, or does it have to do with the living conditions or living habits of the hippies?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think my answer was clear, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. De Monte: To the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. How many applications have been heard by the Law Enforcement Compensation Board since the enactment of the Law Enforcement Compensation Act? How many awards were made? And how much was paid in awards?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, only one application has been heard by that board. The board found that the circumstances in that case did not come within the purview of the Act. No awards have therefore been made.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, a question for the hon. Attorney General, in three parts. Will the Attorney General advise if there are approved accounts outstanding to solicitors of over 30 days duration and payable under the legal aid plan? And, if any, what is the total of such accounts?

Second, will he advise what is the maximum amount outstanding to any individual solicitor, and over 30 days duration?

And three, will he assure the House that the administration of the legal aid plan has sufficient funds available to meet its current obligations?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will appreciate that some little time is needed to review and obtain the information he asked. I can say that I am not aware of any difficulty in the financing of the plan whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Education.

Would the Minister consider the immediate creation of a non-political advisory council of education, as recommended by the Hall-Dennis report, but including students, as well as those representative of public and professional interests, where such matters as the extension of the school year might be discussed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are two questions that I might answer, if the hon. member would like to ask the second one about the ombudsman.

Mr. Pitman: I will ask all three if it is of any convenience to the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, the third one is slightly different.

Mr. Pitman: Would the Minister consider the immediate appointment of an ombudsman, as recommended by the Hall-Dennis report, so that matters involving individual students and the administration of the particular school can have outside arbitration?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think both of these matters I can answer in a very general way. That is, the recommendations in the Hall-Dennis report are not only being discussed within the department, but also by many members of the profession throughout the province. It is our intention to have some of these discussions become more specific in form early in the new year. I have arranged for one of the co-authors—I should not call them co-authors—one of the co-chairmen of the report to meet with the committee on education at its first meeting after the new year. Then, I think, many of these matters could be discussed by all members of the committee itself.

Mr. Pitman: I might ask a supplementary question. Would the Minister regard a matter such as the extension of school year, with such economic implications, as well as many other implications, as an appropriate subject for discussion by a body outside the department?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have discovered, in my capacity as Minister, that on matters related to education there are very few subjects that are not discussed in one way or another by bodies outside the department rather regularly. I really am not in a position to say whether that would be a function of a particular advisory body. That might or might not be a point. I could not say at this point.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary question. I wonder if the Minister has ever considered an investigation of the various kinds of school holiday periods, rather than the bunching of school holidays in one particular period? Has there been any study of the education feasibility of "holidays" as they relate perhaps to a study of the importance of contact between teacher and student? That is the time of contact.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there have been any detailed studies per se, other than studies of situations existing in other jurisdictions. There was some consideration, of course, given to this at the time of the mid-term break. The Easter holiday was altered to the latter part of March, to provide three equal terms, generally speaking. This matter was considered at that point.

Of course, this year, the longer period of vacation at Christmas upset the balance to a degree, and these are things over which the department has very little control.

Mr. Pitman: My final question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the policy of the Minister to make the leaving dates for students in June flexible each year and related to the number of holidays accorded during the Christmas break, as suggested by his argument for extending the present school year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is not the sole criterion, but it is related to it.

Obviously we want to determine, shall we say, a reasonable number of days, and this related to the number of days holiday during Christmas and New Year's period. This year the suggested time, of course, means that the grade 13 students will have 184 days of instruction out of a total of 365 days in the year.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask a supplementary question? Is there any particular number of days which the department has established to gain the optimum, or the most advantageous in terms of the educational experience, the quality of education of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think we are really attacking two different problems here. We could discuss this at great length because, first, there is the educational validity and quality of what you are attempting to do; second, there are certain economic factors; and, third, there is the traditional pattern for holidays, and so on, during the summer months.

I don't really think I can answer this in a comprehensive way. I would say that the Hall-Dennis committee—which the hon. member has rather enthusiastically endorsed, across this province, as I read my press clippings—recommends a 200-day educational period.

Mr. Pitman: Would the Minister not agree though that the Hall-Dennis report is not simply suggesting the continuation of classroom routine for those 200 days?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, but there are 200, shall we say, educational or learning experience days. Very good!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Before the orders of the day, the hon. member for Oxford asked a supplementary question, which I could not answer at the time. I now have the answer.

There are 221 Homes for Special Care licensed as nursing homes in the province, caring for 4,765 patients, who have been discharged from Ontario psychiatric hospitals. There are 198 Homes for Special Care, licensed as residential homes, caring for 1,352 patients discharged from Ontario hospitals and hospital schools as capable of profiting from such care.

These figures are as of November 30 of this year.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The second order; House in committee of the whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill 17, An Act to amend The Milk Act, 1965.

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I have a motion that is not normally put at this time, but which I feel has the necessity of being considered by the House. I will give you a copy of the motion, sir, for your ruling. That is, that Bill 17 be not now dealt with by the committee of the whole House, but be referred to the standing committee of agriculture for consideration.

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition has moved that Bill 17, be not now dealt with by the committee of the whole House, but be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for consideration and report.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I believe the motion of the hon. leader of the Opposition is defective in that it refers to the bill rather than the order. The order itself must be discharged in respect to Bill 17 and not the entire order, which—

Mr. Chairman: The Bill 17 itself has been called. The only order that was called was the committee of the whole House and Bill 17 was the item that was called for consideration by the committee.

The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I draw to your attention, sir, that when this bill was introduced on November 28 by the Minister of Agriculture, he said in his explanatory statement on the first reading—and I quote from page 208:

This bill does not confer any new powers on the Ontario Milk Marketing Board—

That is the significant statement, but of course I will read the rest of it. To go on quoting the hon. Minister:

—but simply clarifies the manner in which the marketing board may carry out powers already conferred upon it by the Milk Commission of Ontario.

I would further draw to your attention, sir, that the bill itself in its first section reads as follows:

The marketing board in the exercise of such powers may make regulations, or orders, or issue directions.

Now I submit to you, sir, that this particular section of the bill does confer what appears to be large new powers on the Ontario Milk Marketing Board. In fact, the conference of these powers was to be tested before the Supreme Court of Ontario in an action which, I submit to you, sir, the Minister of Agriculture was aware of, since this bill would, in effect, remove the grounds for the contest from the situation before the courts.

I would say to you that when the second reading of the bill came forward on Wednesday, December 4, it was put before the House after a lengthy discussion of the expropriations bill just as the session was concluding in the afternoon. No objection was made on this side at that time. I myself was not present in the House and I certainly do not want to indicate in any way that the Minister was attempting to slip it through. I simply draw to your attention, sir, that even after six o'clock on the day of December 4, this House gave second reading to the bill. The bill was not sent to the agriculture committee, but was listed for consideration of the committee of the whole, which is now being undertaken, and it is this to which I object.

I would draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that Supreme Court action is in process; that surely the matter would be considered sub judice, and that the Minister has been poorly advised in attempting to enact legislation which in every respect would be retroactive and interfere with the course of the question before the courts.

I believe the only solution to this would be the reference of the bill to the standing committee so that in their wisdom the committee members can hear submissions from those lawyers undertaking the action before the Supreme Court of Ontario, and perhaps even to consider that the bill be held in abeyance until such decision of the court is forthcoming.

It would not be in order, I submit at this time, to give any particular information about the bill other than to say that in its presentation as a series of regulation numbers in section 2, the Minister is attempting to set right what apparently was a gross error on the part of his ministry and his advisors in the execution of The Milk Act.

The whole Act and the basis of milk marketing in Ontario has been called into question before the courts, and I have heard the Minister himself on many occasions say that he is prepared to have his legislation tested in the courts. As he well knows, and you do too, sir, in the past this has been the procedure that has been followed. I would say that in almost every case the Minister's legislation has been upheld, but surely the Minister is guilty of two serious errors.

The first is that he has been misguided—and let us say ill advised—in bringing forward this legislation in this particular style. I would say as well that he is guilty of misleading this House in at least some measure in his statement on first reading and the fact that the bill was not formally and by the Minister sent to the standing committee.

For these reasons, sir, I hope that the House will consider the motion that I have put before us and allow those people in the community who have a real stake in the intent of this amendment, to appear before the standing committee as is, I submit, their right.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the motion introduced by the leader of the Opposition. It seems to me that it has been rather an underhanded or a fishy way to bring in a bill, particularly of this significance. It should be noted that the bill lists the regulations in the same order as they are attacked in the writ of summons that was issued by the plaintiffs in this particular court case.

It seems to me that at a time when the people, or the people—the plaintiffs in this case—are claiming that they will stand or endure financial loss—some of them are saying that they will go out of business completely—that at least they would have an opportunity or a chance to present their case to the agricultural committee. As it is now this would not have happened.

There are other possibilities or ramifications of this particular bill in the sense that it may squeeze out the small processors, which would result in the milk industry being controlled by two or three giant operators who would then be in a position to manipulate prices or set the prices to their liking. The consumer would have absolutely no protection, and there certainly will not be any competition in the particular industry.

It seems to me that all these things—these matters that I brought up—and there are others—could have been, and should have been, brought up in the standing committee on agriculture and food. We could have examined the merits.

Obviously there are reasons for the milk board acting in the way it did, and there are reasons for the plaintiffs' case. But surely it would only be reasonable and just that the committee—the agricultural committee—examine and listen to both sides and then come back with their recommendations to this House.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, there is good precedent for such a motion as this to be brought under the normal procedure which has been somewhat changed by the practice and usage of this House. We would have a motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee of the whole.

That motion in recent years is no longer put.

I observe that in May, the 17th edition, at page 632, there is reference to a motion such as this where he says:

Since the primary purpose of the committee is to consider and amend in detail matters which have been referred to it, and since such matters have, in the case of bills, previously been agreed to in principle by the House, they are matters in which the initiative properly belongs to the government.

It is not usually in order in committee of the whole House to move an amendment to leave out all the words after the first word in the resolution, and to add other words.

There are precedents, however, for amendments of this type being moved in committee of the whole House which were preliminary to the introduction of bills.

So I submit that cognizance was taken of this vehicle that the leader of the Opposition has used today. It is perfectly pertinent, very pertinent, that he should move such a motion.

I did not hear his earlier remarks, but certainly I will say it, that whether wittingly or unwittingly on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and Food—I am not going to ascribe any motives to him—we on this side of the House were somewhat misled in the import of this bill.

I recall very clearly the circumstances under which it reached and achieved second reading and that was after six of the clock on a certain day when we had completed other important business and were going on to equally important business the next day. There seemed to be on the part of the House leader at that time an anxiety to put Bill 17—December 4, the fourth day of December—it was after six of the clock and the House leader said: "We will deal with The Milk Act tomorrow unless there is anything controversial about it. We can move it now."

We have the advantage of our colleague from Huron-Bruce and we turned to him for guidance. There did not appear to be anything controversial about it. We acceded to putting the motion. The Minister of Agriculture and Food put the motion at about five after six and it carried without debate.

The important thing to notice in that regard is, of course, that the Minister of Agriculture at that time made no statement about the principle of the bill. It passed without comment or debate.

After that, we became aware that there were very serious objections in matters of principle to this bill. I am not going to avert to those at this time, or to seek to inform the House of our view of what those matters of principle are, save to say that at this time the important consideration is the deprivation of persons affected in Ontario by the passage of this bill, the deprivation of their opportunity to come to the committee—the standing committee on agriculture—and make the representation.

Therefore, in that regard, there is a very serious failure of democracy. I do not know whether we have an all-embracing rule in this Parliament about the opportunity of citizens, corporations, any other pluralistic groups to come and take an active part in democracy by making the representations in appropriate form. It appears we do not have an all-encompassing rule after 100 years of Parliamentary life.

Universally, with the Attorney General and the legislation that he introduced, there is such an opportunity given. The opportunity is spotty in other departments. It is sometimes given and sometimes it is not.

The Minister of Agriculture, indeed, sometimes affords the opportunity, but the important thing is that, in respect of this bill, whether by clear intention or not, the Minister of Agriculture does not intend to give these people the chance to have their say.

Now, I ask rhetorically, what is wrong with citizens coming before Parliament and making their arguments, their protestations, and that, of course, relates to one aspect of Mr. McRuer's report. I am not going to deal with that in detail because I do not want to try your patience or that of the members of the House. But I relate to one aspect.

He says, in the passing of regulations, there ought to be publication of them before they are passed. There ought to be an opportunity for people affected by them to make their views known about their wording. Indeed, he goes a little further and says there ought to be consultation in respect of the proposed regulations.

Our information, in respect of these regulations, is there was not the opportunity for interested people in the milk industry of Ontario to make their representations to the promulgators of the regulations.

I add, by way of one comment, that not only was there not the opportunity, but we are informed reliably that though the opportunity was sought, it was refused. I am told by one person, very knowledgeable in this regard, "These people will not sit down and talk to you. They just will not sit down and talk to you—that is the milk board. Although we tried to get to talk to them about the form of the regulations, they had no desire to discuss them."

That makes it all the more important that these people, who claim to have been refused an audience when it ought to have been granted, now be given an audience before the Legislature and its committee, to make their views known concerning these regulations.

Mr. Chairman, the arguments are just so overwhelming on behalf of these people that I would hope that, in the face of the motion of the leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Agriculture would have the good grace at this time, without any great embarrassment to him (he has not spoken yet) to get up and say, "We will withdraw the bill from committee of the whole House at this time and send it along to the committee on agriculture."

What after all, Mr. Chairman, is to be lost by that procedure? That is making no concession that does not rightfully belong to citizens in a free society and it does not mean that the government loses face in respect of it. There is no urgency, of which we are aware, that this bill need be passed before year's end or at this session of the Legislature. Underlying the whole thing, of course, and cognizance must be taken by members of the House, is that there is a case pending.

There is a case pending for which the writ of summons was issued on, I believe, Nov. 12; the statement of claim was delivered last week. I refer to the case of Augustine Farm Dairy and others (there are four plaintiffs in the case) against the Milk Commission of Ontario and the milk marketing board as defendants. The statement of claim was delivered last week. The time limit for statement of defence has not yet expired; it has not been delivered.

Now if we, in all haste, pass this bill it means, I say to my friend from Halton West, as he is well aware (he is listening to what I say or he was), that this case is then functus. The court is absolutely functus in respect of this case and people are deprived of a hearing in a forum that is a very prestigious forum, the courts of Ontario and the Supreme Court of Ontario; a forum that is almost equal in statute to this one. They are deprived of the opportunity to seek the remedies that they claim the law allows them.

The whole thing is wrong and I do not want to get terribly excited about this. I know the Minister of Agriculture to be a reasonable person and I would plead with him, in the spirit of yuletide—to tell us that we do not need to consider it in committee of the whole House at this time; let us send it to the committee of the whole House.

The alternative is, if he wants to put it through, the House is going to be burdened and oppressed by hearing a lawyer's argument from now until six o'clock and beyond, because this now poses a lawyer's field day. We have got to go through the whole gambit of the McRuer report on power to make regulations, the characteristics of delegated legislation and legislative powers, the necessity for an administrative procedure code, to name four or five different items that now become relevant. Not to mention, perhaps, a suggestion that the Legislature of Ontario is, in this instance (and I have some authority for this proposition, which I do not put lightly, Mr. Chairman), acting in a contemptuous way to the courts.

There is some authority. No less a person than Mr. McRuer himself, when he was on the bench, confronted this very situation where the government sought to cure a deficiency in the regulatory powers under a statute. Mr. McRuer—I have been trying to reach him all afternoon to get the name of that case; it was about 15 years ago—delivered some encomiums from the bench about what he felt about such legislative enactment when a case was pending.

We have to note, of course, that the Channel Islands case is not yet complete. I am informed reliably that though decision has been made in that case, it is on its way to the Supreme Court of Canada, where the result in the Ontario courts might be changed.

So really the thing assumes some proportions that ought to give us pause about thrusting ahead. I most courteously and seriously, in the context of the remarks made by the leader of the Opposition, suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that we forego our discussion of this bill and hear what these people have to say in the legislative committee. Before I sit down, I must add this observation—that in the committee it may well appear, when we have the advantage to hear from the milk board, that the necessity of passing and validating these regulations is in the public interest.

That may well be the result, but if it is the result, it leaves a better feeling with people affected who thought they had rights and who are now deprived of them by the supreme power of this body. They go away with a feeling, well, at least we had our opportunity to have our say. To do otherwise, of course, obviates any such opportunity and leaves all of us with the impression that in the Legislature, we are acting precipitately to the point of being somewhat arbitrary.

As we move into the world of participatory democracy, as I hope we are, we want to do all in our power to avoid giving that impression. The place to avoid it, in respect of this bill, is in the standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore has a question.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, perhaps some time might be saved, as my friend from Sudbury has indicated. To some extent I am incensed on the basis of some circumstances behind this matter.

If I might prevail upon the hon. Minister to indicate whether or not at this stage he is prepared to send it on to the committee, then some time may be saved. If not, then I would like to speak.

Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether the hon. Minister wants to respond at this moment. Several other members had risen trying to enter the debate on the motion. With the concurrence of the members, if they wish the hon. Minister to respond at this time, it would be in order.

Mr. Lawlor: It is up to him.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. Minister would care to reply then?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Chairman, the points that have been raised by the hon. members who have spoken would appear to be most well taken in the light of their present knowledge of the situation. First of all may I say, Mr. Chairman, that I hope you and all hon. members of this House will accept my statement that I was in no way attempting to mislead the House in any way.

The legislation which was introduced simply clarifies the position which flowed from a result of the hearing by the Channel Island producers before a judge of the Ontario court. In that decision, the judge of the Ontario court, Mr. Justice Leiff, upheld the right of the milk marketing board to do what they have done. But he went further and suggested that they should have done what they did by order rather than by regulation.

Now, with great respect to the decision, I believe that it might have been more appropriate to have suggested, with the statutes, The Regulations Act, that had there been further consideration given to that statute, he would have noted that when a body appointed by a Legislature to develop and implement legislative decisions and when that board is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, they have no choice but to draft their orders, or their decisions as regulations. That is clearly stated in the legislation.

Now then, the milk marketing board—and I give them great credit for this—wanted to be sure that every regulation, or every decision, that they made affecting the people whom they represent in the milk industry, was given full publicity. They passed these orders as regulations and this meant they had to be published in the Ontario Gazette for everyone to see, to refer to. They were there, clear.

Now we can see the position in which the milk marketing board now find themselves. They went ahead based on our Act which we passed in this Legislature in 1965. Guided by that Act, and guided by The Regulations Act, which is a statute of this province, they acted accordingly, and in good faith. They have now been faced with the position that Mr. Justice Leiff has said they have done all of this properly, other than that they should have issued orders instead of regulations.

They cannot issue orders, they must issue regulations, so they find themselves today in the position that they have no power to carry on whatever. Now this is the position in which they find themselves.

Statements have been made today, and well stated, that it would appear—as the hon. member for Sudbury said—to deprive persons affected to come before the committee on agriculture and to explain their position.

He went on to say that the committee on agriculture might decide that passage of this bill was in the public interest. I hope he would afford me the same right of saying that it be determined by the hon. members of this House that, by the passage of this bill, it is in the public interest to protect that procedure which has already been carried out by the milk marketing board.

Now, as far as the actions that have been brought by the Channel Island producers against the milk plan, there is no effect on this whatever, as I see it, and as my advisors see it.

They are bringing their action against the constitutionality of the establishment by the milk marketing board of a pool. In effect they are challenging the levying of what could be described by them as an indirect tax. This is the point of their appeal. Mr. Justice Leiff upheld the milk marketing board in establishing this constitutionality matter, but he said the board did not go about it, in his opinion, in the right way.

Mr. Nixon: This is not the basis of the Augustine case.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I want to come to that in a moment if I may. Now in our opinion, and I say this quite sincerely on very good advice, that the passage of this bill does not in any way affect the procedure of that appeal going to, I believe, the Court of Appeal and, if necessary, on to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now then, on the Augustine appeal: this action was introduced after Mr. Justice Leiff brought in his decision. It was based on two points. First of all they mentioned the matter of the regulations and Mr. Justice Leiff's criticism of the board suggesting it should have been by order rather than regulation. This is a part of their action.

The second part of their action, which is really the basic part of their action, is reflected in the two sections of The Ontario Milk Act, 1965, sections 11 and 12, where a producer is described in section 11, and where a distributor is described in section 12.

Now this is really the basis of their appeal and I see nothing wrong with them proceeding to launch that appeal, to let us determine whether or not our Act is effective to establish a pool to which all producers must be a part.

We frankly—and I say this quite honestly, Mr. Chairman—do not believe that these regulations being validated will in any way upset the main point of either of the cases that are before the courts. But I point out to you, sir, most respectfully, that if we were not to proceed with this bill today and give it effective implementation, it leaves the Ontario milk marketing board in what I would think was a most untenable position, and I do not think any of us want to do that.

I feel that we should validate this. Let these cases go before the court; let them be decided; because after all, Mr. Justice Leiff said the board had acted within full right of what the intent of the legislation was.

Now this is our position and I urge, through you, Mr. Chairman, the members of the House to support us in implementing this bill.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore had been on his feet.

Mr. Lawlor: Well in that event, since the matter is not to be referred, I will have a few words to say.

It seems that from a straight legal point of view the stand taken, and the rather surreptitious way in which this Act was brought before us, is most questionable on the part of the Minister. I suggest the court action is such—I will not refer to the pleadings, I have the “statement of claim” before me—that it goes far beyond the purport of sections 11 and 12.

It questions the internal procedures, the delegations of powers, the actual existence of a number of powers, the pooling, the transportation. It says that when the commission was first set up, the commission itself was operating ultra vires of its powers. Then, when it purported to subdelegate its powers to the board under a series of headings, five or six or seven major points, this was done in a poor way.

What bothers me is the legality of the whole thing. You have, I suggest, botched up the legislation, you have not provided proper channels for the subdelegation, and this is all being thrown into question now and in a hurry-up effort to masquerade, or to screen, or to cover your tracks, you come back before this Legislature with legislation which, in effect, can retrogressively validate all the inequities and all the illegalities, and all the powers, and all the ultra vires things that you are being accused of.

I suggest that once this Act is passed, you have effectively undermined the whole legal position of these people. You make no provision anywhere, of course, for the legal costs which you put them to in the process. They are, then, so far as I can see, completely out of court. The main thrust of their contention is malfunctioning in the department and a failure to observe regulations and orders in a proper way.

Is it not just a minatory discrimination between regulations and orders that are in effect here for anyone who peruses this case. In section 2, subsection (1) (c), you say all these regulations which are now in question, shall be deemed to have been valid and binding for all intents and purposes from the date on which the regulations were filed under The Regulations Act.

Now this is a covert—even now the Minister is not willing to be completely open about it—a covert, surreptitious attempt to hide out, and to place them under some kind of ban, people who, within their legal rights, have brought these matters before the court. It is an abuse of the processes of the Legislature on the one hand, and an abuse towards the courts of this province on the other hand.

No doubt you could solve the matter, if you would give a fair hearing to these people. They claim they have been under threat from the board with respect to their licensing procedures. It is contained in this statement of claim, that if they proceed, this form of coercion will be used.

As one other member has said, Mr. Chairman, this whole procedure, this high-handedness, runs in many directions in point after point—I am almost inclined to go over these points, which go against the recommendations of McRuer and against natural justice.

This is a most high-handed proceeding. This government is not prepared to stand up to its own insufficiencies and inadequacies that it has brought upon its own head. Instead, it uses the device of the Legislature to avoid all the repercussions of mal-administration. I am sorry we have to take up so much time. I refer you to page 361 of McRuer:

The normal legislative process ensures that advance publicity is given to proposals to change the law and that there is opportunity for public discussion and for persons whose rights may be affected to make themselves heard.

This, as has been indicated by a letter from this solicitor and in his pleadings, is precisely what you did not do.

There is obviously grave reason why you came in with a little tripping gait so that no one would notice the big dance going on in the background. No publicity was given and the solicitor involved was taken completely by surprise.

It was a housekeeping measure, it would go through very simply. And the day afterwards, if he had not happened to see this arrive on his desk on morning very recently, the whole matter would have been a fait accompli.

I think it is the duty of the Opposition here to make these things not a fait accompli. It is not, on the other hand, my particular desire to embarrass the Minister; if his department in this particular aspect is rather badly run, I think he should have the courage and be so honourable, as the Minister is called honourable, as to face up to that consequence and to alter it.

But to set up retrospective legislation to validate a thing which has caused enormous harm and financial loss to citizens of this province; and then to present it as though it were of no great significance or importance, is certainly to mislead this House.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, I rise not as a person who is particularly knowledgeable in agriculture, certainly not one who is aware of the legal complications and certainly not one who has full knowledge of all the complexities of the rules of this House. However, I have a strange feeling that there is a high degree of injustice being perpetrated at the present moment.

I checked back as a result of a phone call I received last week in my own constituency. The question was asked: "Has this bill come before the Legislature?" And for the life of me, although I was in the House on that particular day, I could scarcely remember it having been discussed in this House.

And I checked the date on which this bill came forward and I just want to read what the Minister stated on that day. I am sure he would agree with what that statement is:

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not confer any new powers—

Absolutely right.

—on the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, but simply clarifies the manner in which the marketing board may carry out powers already conferred upon it by the Milk Commission of Ontario.

Well, the individual who called me indicated that the clarification, as he saw it, would simply put him out of business, that this would be the end of his economic life in this particular role as a processor-distributor in this particular area.

I recognize the desire of the Minister to get this legislation through. We on this side of the House, certainly, want his house in order as much as he does. But I suggest to you that in this particular case these people were not given their day in court.

The argument of the Minister is that why do we not pass this legislation, that after legislation has been passed, then we will allow these court cases to go through. And after these court cases are over, then they will have received their justice through the courts.

But surely, Mr. Chairman, that line of argument could be used against any form of use of committee in this Legislature. Why not let every person who has complained against any piece of legislation which has come before this Legislature go through the courts and we can then turn around and revise legislation on the basis of what has happened in those courts?

I suggest to you, sir, this is specious argument and one that is not worthy of this Legislature and certainly not of a reasonable Minister as he has been in the past. I hope that he will accept the motion of the leader of the Opposition, and I hope he will take under consideration again the comments of the member for Lakeshore, the member for Sudbury.

I think it is time for us to perhaps simplify this entire debate into one context and one point: Is a citizen in the province of Ontario receiving justice at the hands of this House?

I suggest to you, sir, that in our hurry to clean up the house of the Minister of Agriculture we may be perpetrating an injustice and I do hope that the Minister will take under consideration, acceptance of this very basic right of people in this province to be heard.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I believe I am in order in adding some additional comments following the Minister's reaction to the motion. Certainly we must be careful to remember that what we are discussing here is not the purport of the regulations themselves but only the proposal to refer the bill to committee. I believe the argument over producer-distributor relationships and the whole sense of a milk pool in the province of Ontario has been carried on at another time. The Minister is on record with his views and we, in the Opposition parties, are on record with our views.

Surely, the thing that is in contention now is not the poor position that the marketing board finds itself in as a result of Mr. Justice Leiff's comments and as a result of the action now before the courts on behalf of Augustine, and others but really the necessity which was so well expressed by the member for Sudbury. That is, the necessity to give every reasonable possibility for hearings of those considered and affected by the legislation.

I, myself, can see why the Minister wants to clear this up and get the marketing board back on a foundation which stands four square with any reasonable interpretation before the law. But surely, the way to do it is to send this to the standing committee and even allow the cases before the courts to proceed. If, in fact, retroactive legislation is required, in the Minister's judgment, sometime in the future, it could then be enacted and there would be a debate along those lines at that time.

I think surely that the Minister would see the common sense in leaving the milk marketing board on tenter-hooks and in a position that is very difficult for them to occupy for a period of weeks or maybe even two or three months.

But we could reconsider the position and reconsider this very bill in the committee and again in this House without destroying the basis of milk marketing in the immediate interim period. Surely the Minister can see his way clear to accepting this proposal and I sincerely hope that he will.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, it may be a point of order that I rise on, but this matter must not be left by the Minister of Agriculture with the impression to the House, that these actions can proceed whether or not this bill is passed. That is not the opinion of the solicitors for Augustine Dairy, to whom I have spoken. They are lawyers advising four clients and we must accept their view as a view coming from people competent in this field of the law.

Their view is in direct opposition to that of the Minister of Agriculture, who is not a lawyer himself. That is no term of opprobrium that he is not. It is a statement of fact.

An hon. member: It might be the contrary.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, it might be the contrary. But there you have the polarization. He says we can go ahead and these people can seek their rights. They say, on the other hand, "we cannot have our rights if this bill passes." They say the action is at an end the moment the Legislature puts its fiat on this bill.

So, therefore, the House must not act on the statement of the Minister of Agriculture without taking into account the opposite view of the solicitors for these four dairies. I would, even at this late stage, ask the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider and let the four dairies come before the committee and make their objections.

You have one of them going into the merits. He says: "I have been a producer all these years and I have been distributing my own milk and there is no statutory authority to prohibit me from doing it. I should be allowed to continue."

That is a respectable posture for him to take. I do not profess to know the ins and outs of marketing or selling milk, but what I do know is that it is absolutely vital that these dairymen have the opportunity to come and tell the experts on agriculture at the standing committee. Let them tell it. Let them tell the members of the Legislature who have knowledge in this field. The Prime Minister has come back into the House and I might say to him, through you, that he is always showing qualities of reasonableness and has desisted from giving the impression of ramming things down people's throats without giving them a chance to be heard.

It has not been made apparent to me that there is so much urgency that the bill might not stand over the Christmas vacation to afford the opportunity which we seek.

I restrain myself from giving the impression of making a big fuss about it. It is a simple request and I am trying to speak in moderate language about this request—putting it to moderate people, through you.

Let us not extend the debate. Let us not get into a worse wrangling, which might develop, but let us agree at this stage that the thing goes to the select committee on agriculture. The public interest, the people of Ontario, will be adequately served in this field with the deliberations and conclusions of that committee.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a word on this.

I find myself in the same position as some other members of this House, in that I may not be completely and absolutely briefed on the legal aspects of this matter. Certainly I am no expert in the marketing of milk.

As I understand the situation the milk board, as presently constituted, has been held by the courts to be intra vires. This is being attacked in the Court of Appeal. But in the judgment that held it to be intra vires, there is an opinion expressed by the judge who heard the case that the method by which it exercised its powers was not correct and this bill serves to make those methods correct.

This bill does not, in any way, go to the point of the lawsuit as to whether or not the milk board is intra vires or ultra vires of the powers of this Legislature. So this bill would not disturb that portion of the rights of the litigants.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but that is only one case.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am merely thinking out loud. I do not know that I am necessarily putting a case. I am trying to understand. I am really thinking out loud.

Mr. Pitman: We are all trying to understand.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I suppose if the Legislature does not pass this bill, the milk board per se, as it stands today, will cease to function. This will vitiate the intent of this Legislature when it passed the bill in the first place—setting it up. Because, if there is a judgment of a Supreme Court judge saying that the way it has functioned is improper and yet, if there is another Act of this Legislature—which there is, called The Regulations Act—which says the milk board cannot function in the manner in which the judge says it should function, I think you would be forced to the conclusion that the milk board, in its present method of operating, is simply operating illegally. Therefore, even though the constitutionality of its composition and its function has been established, it would be brought to a standstill and will cease to function in this province.

I rather doubt that this is an objective that those involved in the milk industry really want.

Let me go to the other point as to the position on the merits, I suppose of the Channel Island breeders and their desire to stay outside the pool. If this is a question that should be debated on its merits, there is no reason why that question could not be brought before the agricultural committee of this Legislature as just another item of business for that committee to deal with. Let these people come before the committee and express their opinion.

But, as I understand the problem, what we are really trifling with here is if we do not pass this legislation we may bring the present function of the milk board to an end as of right now and I think that this is the concern of the Minister.

Mr. Nixon: Why as of right now, rather than two weeks ago, or two weeks from now?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Because this is the moment in which the bill, Mr. Chairman, has to be before this House.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It has been acting—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, of course—

Mr. Nixon: Why was this not the case put by the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think perhaps it might be wise if the hon. leader of the Opposition waited until I have finished and then he can put what questions he wants of the Minister of Agriculture.

As I say, I am not really defending a particular point. I am trying to see in the broad picture how this Legislature should deal with this problem. I think we have to be very careful that we do not permit the milk marketing plans of this province to fall to the ground because of this judgment, and the finding of one portion of that judgment, which this bill is designed to correct.

I am certain in my own mind that this is what the Minister meant when he said that this bill does not affect the rights of the people in the lawsuit. This has nothing to do with its constitutionality or non-constitutionality, because if it is ultra vires this Legislature has no right to deal with any of them.

That is the situation as I see it. If it is considered by the House that there should be an examination of the whole question of milk marketing by the committee on agriculture, this can be arranged with the greatest speed.

Mr. Nixon: With respect I submit to you, sir, and in answer to what the Premier said, the resolution of the motion before us is whether or not this bill should go to the standing committee on agriculture. If the Premier is correct and the milk marketing board will fall to the ground—his very words—if this bill is not passed, then surely the Minister is guilty of some serious misleading in this House by not bringing to our attention how important it is that we consider this and act upon it immediately.

The motion is simply that the thinking out loud that the Premier has undertaken could be taken—with the assistance of the milk marketing board and those people who are challenging the validity of their regulations—before a properly constituted standing committee. To imply that the milk marketing board would cease functioning and actually slip into abeyance tomorrow, if the motion to send this to committee were carried, or if in fact the Minister were to consider it, I cannot accept.

I believe that there is a reasonable approach to this. It will require the consideration of the standing committee and the expectation of everyone here, government and Opposition, that the milk marketing board will continue its proper function, until this is settled by the Legislature. There should not be this inordinate pressure put on us.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: If there is any validity in what the Prime Minister has said, surely it was incumbent on this government, the first day the Legislature opened, to have come in with a bill—indeed, as they came in with a bill to deal with certain aspects of municipal elections—and to have passed it quickly. It is a little late in the day to come in and suggest to us now that this board has been acting illegally, in light of the judgment that was handed down in the Channel Islands case.

I suggest to you that simply is not so. Indeed, the whole presentation this afternoon has been without reference to the Channel Islands' case at all. There has been reference to the Augustine case and the contention of their lawyers—whose views I would not dismiss out of hand for they are persons of prestige in the legal fraternity—that if this bill is passed, they are out of court.

My colleague from Peterborough has brought evidence of one man who is going to be affected—who says, in effect, that he will be out of business.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that this is an unholy mess, to put it in blunt terms. The Prime Minister is trying to put one interpretation on it, but it simply will not stand up in light of the government's conduct. If the government really felt the situation is as bad as it says—that this board is being left operating illegally—then the first day we met here on November 19, we should have had a bill in here. It should have been processed and given Royal assent along with another bill—really less consequential bills—in order to have put the board back on a legal basis.

I suggest to you as a layman—and in doing so I join with all other laymen who are engaging in this debate—that this board which has been acting, with nobody really challenging its power, since the judgment came down on the Channel Islands case. Well they have been challenging, in the courts, but the board has continued to act, and people have not been ignoring its orders. It could continue to operate on the same basis until we give a full opportunity for a democratic consideration of this bill. The government's whole handling of this is so bad, that I would think the government itself would head the list of people wanting to handle it correctly, so that you will not compound the difficulties and make a bad situation worse.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. Minister wish to add anything further before the motion is—I believe reference to May will indicate—Order, please! I believe that reference to May will indicate the motion is in order. The hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me say this about what the member for York South has said with regard to the action of the producer-distributors. This part of their action grows out of the decision that was handed down at the time of the Channel Islands appeal to the courts. Right.

Let me point out—in reference to my hon. friend, the member for Sudbury, who is much more knowledgeable in points of the law than I. With his reference to the submission that has been made by the solicitors for Augustine, that if this legislation is passed, it impedes their rights to take this action to the court.

Their action is based on sections 11 and 12 of The Milk Marketing Act and there are no regulations yet drafted pertaining to producers-distributors. So why would this regulation in any way affect what they intend to take to the Court for a decision?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Let me point this out, that the position of the milk marketing board suggested by the Prime Minister—is not in disagreement with what I said earlier. They find themselves in an untenable position because they can issue no regulations and they can issue no orders until this matter is cleared up.

There are producer-distributors who are going along with this matter until it is dealt with in the Courts. There is the matter of the Channel Islands affair, which has been held in abeyance—they are carrying on until that matter has been decided in the court. But anything else that the milk marketing board has to deal with in other matters—surely this Legislature wants to give them the rights to proceed in the normal course of legislation which we drafted in 1965.

We are not doing one thing, by this Act, to interfere with the friend of the member for Peterborough, who says that this would put him out of business. This is being decided by that appeal to the courts under sections 11 and 12, and has to do with producer-distributors. I beg your pardon. All right.

Let me take it one step further, and suggest to you that if it is found in the Court of Appeal, whenever the case may be heard, that Mr. Justice Leiff's decision is for the appellant and the Legislature is not in session, we have no way of correcting the problem that then faces the milk marketing board. If I were a member of that board, quite frankly I would resign, because I would then be in a position of holding office, and carrying out something that was ultra vires of the legislation.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I certainly did not tell them anything of the kind. It was a matter of fact that they are suggesting it to us. And I do not blame them, if this is the case. Now this is the seriousness of the situation.

As the Prime Minister suggests, we can easily pass this legislation today, and then if the agriculture committee wants to hear the arguments by the producer-distributors on their right to withdraw or be left out of the pool, I have no objection to that. This is fine with me.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That will have no effect whatever because we are doing nothing in these regulations that has to do with sections 11 and 12 of the Act. Not a thing to do with those sections—not a thing. And they can go right ahead, and appeal their case and stand on that appeal.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Right, that is the case—the case as we said.

Mr. Sopha: There is a serious difference here about the factual background. We owe it to the House to make it clear that we do not agree with the Prime Minister for one moment, when he says the constitutionality is a matter of an issue in this Augustine case. It is not. It has nothing to do with it. As well we owe it to the House to inform it that these people make it absolutely clear that this bill deprives them of their rights. And Mr. Kellock who writes to the Prime Minister in the public domain, and quite properly furnishes us with a copy of his letter.

The member for Welland South was corresponding with the government about this and was privy to the correspondence, and in the first four paragraphs of that letter of December 11, which I think ought to be read into the record, Mr. Kellock makes the position definitively clear.

Now just permit me to read these four paragraphs:

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

As you will see from the copy of the writ of summons enclosed herein an action was commenced in the Supreme Court of Ontario, Nov. 12, 1968, against the Milk Commission of Ontario and the Ontario marketing board, claiming that certain of the regulations made by these bodies under the authority of The Milk Act 1965 were invalid.

Now let me interrupt this. There is nothing about unconstitutionality at all. It is a perfectly proper action attacking the validity of regulations made under the authority of a statute. The second paragraph:

Without any notice to this farm, or to any of our clients, Bill 17 was introduced to the provincial House and given first readings on Nov. 28, 1968. I am advised that there was the second reading on Dec. 5, 1968 that was scheduled to come before the House again on Dec. 10, 1968.

On the morning of Dec. 10 I received on my desk a copy of the bill. This office subscribes to the sessional service, and Bill 17 was received among many others. I presume that had I been absent from my office yesterday for any reason, this bill might have become law without my knowledge.

Now note the fifth paragraph; is very significant. I quote:

You will notice that this bill lists the regulations attacked in the writ of summons in exactly the same order. Bill 17 goes on to declare that these regulations ought to be considered valid and retroactively valid.

The end of the quotation.

In other words, Mr. Kellock is saying that they followed the order in his writ of summons. Nothing to do with unconstitutionality at all, but the power of the government to make regulations. Here Mr. Kellock noted the dates. Nov. 12 commenced an action in the Supreme Court of Ontario, arising out of Mr. Justice Leiff's remarks, which no doubt were arbiter in the Channel Islands case, but Mr. Justice Leiff had every reason to make them, and every right to make them in passing and dealing with the intra vires aspect. He dealt by way of an arbiter with the method of making regulation. Now an alert law firm like this—you will notice this law firm subscribe to the sessional papers—an alert law firm advising the clients in a responsible way are entitled to make use of Mr. Justice Leiff's observations to advise their clients to bring an action. That they did on Nov. 12. Now then the milk board—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Does that not mean that is an attack on the function of the milk board, as it presently exists, based on Mr. Justice Leiff's decision?

Mr. Sopha:—only the important thing is in respect—

An hon. member: In other words, the milk board—

Mr. Sopha: Oh, no.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon Mr Robarts: None of their regulations is valid. None of its regulations is valid; how does it function?

Mr. Nixon: The Minister said it conferred no new powers on the board.

Mr. Sopha: Please, one lawyer to another. It ceases to function only in respect of these regulations. Everything else is, to use a non-legal word, completely copasetic. They can go on their merry way. Do you know, I say to the Prime Minister, do you know how many heads of jurisdiction there are to make regulations in The Milk Act of 1964? Before you answer, I will tell you. There are 45 heads of jurisdiction.

It was a matter of great amazement to me that in 45 items giving powers to make regulations the milk board managed to miss the Augustine Dairy people. It was really astonishing.

Mr. Nixon: The power was given to the commission, not to the board, that is the point.

Mr. Sopha: They did not get it. Now one other paragraph will show you the gist of Mr. Kellock's complaint. It is a very well written letter to the Prime Minister. I am sure he gets lots of letters that are not as articulate and show such a command of language and thought as this one.

Before the law suit was instituted, I appeared before the milk commission and advised the commission that my clients were anxious to discuss ways and means of resolving their differences with the commission and board, so that the overall scheme could operate efficiently and so that the protection afforded by The Milk Act to my clients could also be preserved. No one at any time has provided that opportunity for discussion. Instead Bill 17.

Now that is a very revelatory comment by this lawyer. In the light of that, we are being asked at this stage to be party to a process here that absolutely deprives these people of the right of any access to the court.

Let it be said finally that Mr. Kellock and his clients Augustine, and three others, are not in the court on the same basis as the Channel Islands case. They are in there on an entirely different basis, and it may well be that the milk board is right. It may be that they are right, but their rightness will not become hallowed if they do not give Mr. Kellock and his clients and all others affected in the province an opportunity to come forward to the agriculture committee and tell them where they might be wrong.

Mr. Nixon: That is what the motion asked for.

Mr. Sopha: And what is wrong, instead of us wrangling all afternoon about that right to make representation with them coming in and telling them. Why ram this bill through in this state? Somebody actually pointed out that the milk board has been functioning all right and nobody is going to suggest that it is suddenly going to come to its knees.

Mr. Nixon: I will continue to sell my milk to them.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. They get the milk and distribute it and people, housewives, next week will have milk in the province. But there will be a bitter taste in the mouth—in spite of all that milk—if we adopt some mechanism here whereby Augustine Dairy and three others are thrown out of court and all the rest that are out of the courts have not got the opportunity to make legitimate complaints.

An hon. member: Now that is a good point.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about the legal aspects of this case and even less about the operation of the marketing board, but one thing comes through very clearly to me.

There is considerable difference of opinion in this House at this time as to whether or not action by this House today will destroy the case now before the courts. I am sure that not many of the government backbenchers are sufficiently knowledgeable in this case to be able to make a reasonable and rational decision. The request for referral to committee strikes me as being abundantly reasonable.

An hon. member: All that authority!

Mr. Deans: Very interesting! As I say there are some, I am sure, who are no more able to make a decision on this than I am at this moment. I think that the request of the motion by the Opposition at this time is well worth the consideration of the government. I believe that to have this matter cleared up finally, even if it took an extra two or three weeks, would be well worth the consideration of this government.

I do not believe that I would feel, and nor would any of the backbenchers of the Conservative government feel, that they had acted well if this were to prove to affect detrimentally the case of those people who are now waiting for a court appearance.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that the hon. Minister appears to me to have turned into a smoke-screen manufacturing machine. The issue here is not a constitutional issue at all. I will, at this stage, take leave to mention what the real issues are before the court in this case.

They have to do with the internal delegations of powers and our whole law with respect to subdelegations. Under section 14 of the writ of the statement of claim, the plaintiffs attack Ontario Regulation 294 of the year 65 and they say it is ultra vires and not because it is unconstitutional. The legislation is such that nobody questions, at least in these proceedings, its constitutionality. They say it is ultra vires the commission in that section 6 (c) and (i) thereof purports to delegate to the board the power to make regulations respecting the refusal of licences, and the fixing, allocating, refusing to fix and allot, and the cancelling and reducing of quotas for any reasons that the board deems proper anti-McRuerism—any reasons the board deems proper contrary to the express terms of The Milk Act, 1965, section 8.

In other words they are saying there are internal conflicts within the statute; that the power is not there or, if it is there, the exercise of the power runs directly contrary to what the Act itself sets forth, under which the power is purportedly exercised.

I have no thoughts as to the merits of the solicitor's case here. In a brief glancing over of the statute, I think they are wrong. I think that they cannot stand up in any court in the province, but that is my personal opinion and has nothing to do with the merits as such.

If that should be right, or even if it is not right, it has nothing whatsoever to do at this moment with respect to the functionings of that board. That board may well function, I suggest to you, function justly, I mean legitimately, within the scope of its powers. As I said, I think this is so.

This is no different from any number of other tribunals or administrative bodies carrying on from day to day under attack. When somebody comes along and says they are doing it illegitimately, they may, or may not, be doing it so. I do not think there is any merit in these dire threats, which are being placed across the floor of the House this afternoon, that the whole board will suddenly cease to function, if we do not put through this mischievous legislation denying citizens of this province their due rights.

The next point I want to make under section 15—they attack the regulation again, 294-65, they say it is ultra vires in that section 7(h) thereof purports to authorize the board to conduct pools for the distribution of moneys received for the sale of milk, when such pools have not been established. I do not know whether they have been established or not, but they say they have not been established.

Intelligent solicitors acting on behalf of their clients would investigate these things. I will take it superficially that they are right. If they are right, then they will not have the full legitimacy of appearing before the court and proving that they are right. What you are doing is cutting them off right at the roots. They would not be able to proceed because you are validating these things retrospectively this afternoon.

The next regulation is 52 of the year 68—ultra vires they say—the board, not the commission this time. In sections 3 and 4, this is where your 11 and 12 come into question—and to that extent you are right, Mr. Minister. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue it, because on that very clause—16—they do attack 11 and 12.

But coming down to 17 they go on under 52-68 again. The regulation is ultra vires of the board in that section 4, thereof the board is purported to authorize itself to discriminate by fixing and allocating and allotting; refusing to fix and allot and by cancelling, reducing, or refusing to increase quotas for any reason that the board deems proper. That is nothing to do with the constitutionality of this thing.

The ultra vires is a different kind of ultra vires. It is internal, and they certainly have a right to question that. If the board is in that state of affairs, then it ought to be questioned. You ought not to come forward and use your legislative "brolly", as the Irishman said, to bring it down upon their heads and cut off their action. If you are going to do that, then it is a form of dictatorship.

No. 18 says regulation 52-68 is ultra vires of the board in that the board has no authority to make regulations conducting pools. And the pool described in section 6 thereof has not been established by lawful authority and are non-existent.

No. 19—Ontario regulation 52-68 is ultra vires of the board in that section 7 thereof is a purported regulation of transportation of milk, which regulation is unsupported by any authority, statutory or delegated. I do not know that this is so.

Can we not have them before the committee? We would have a little more time to ferret it out. The thing has crept up on us in the quietness of the Minister's presentation, and suddenly we wake up to the full impact of it this afternoon.

Regulation 68-68 is ultra vires the board in that section 3 thereof "the board purported to authorize itself to discriminate by refusing licences for any reason that the board deems proper". They say they have not got that authority and they ought not to exercise it. Our common law touching these bodies says that you may not use licensing powers in this particular way in a discriminatory fashion. Are you seeking to justify that by passing this legislation?

The next thing is questioning Ontario regulation 70-68. They say that is ultra vires of the board in that sections 3, 4, and 5 thereof purport to include persons who are producers and processors. This is going to section 11 again.

They come down on the next regulation—70-68—ultra vires they say, in that section 4 is unsupported by any authority, statutory or delegated.

The next regulation—71-68—is ultra vires of the board. You should be ashamed to try to push this stuff through and slip it under our noses. I will rub your noses in it for the rest of the afternoon.

Regulation 78 is ultra vires of the board in that the said regulations are unsupported by any authority, statutory or delegated. And they go on like that. It is nothing to do with what the hon. Prime Minister has indicated. These people have a perfectly legitimate court action and you are traducing it, undermining them, cutting them off, by coming along in this House under inauspicious circumstances and forcing legislation down our throats which deny civil rights.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Chairman, perhaps as one looks at the proposed amendments to The Milk Act, 1965, Bill 17, it tells very little of the reasons for the changes as to what effect the decisions of making the regulations retroactive will have affecting the rights of individuals. I also question the right of free enterprise in the province of Ontario. I would like to ask the Minister—I think he mentioned a few moments ago in his comments that there were no regulations affecting the farmer that produces and processes the milk on his farm, on the same premises. May I have your answer to that, sir?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well they asked for clarification under sections 11 and 12 too.

Mr. Haggerty: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have one more question. On September 9 a letter was written from the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to Mr. Lorne Augustine, of Port Colborne, Ontario. They threatened to revoke the licence because he did not come under the regulations of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board. Well, what I have referred to here and just what you mentioned, Mr. Minister, do not make sense.

Why all the effort into revoking the licence of Mr. Augustine and putting him to all the trouble of lawyers and solicitors to bring it before the courts if there is no regulation pertaining to that?

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister care to reply to those questions at this time?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I just simply point this out to the hon. members of the House whose points have been well taken and well expressed. As far as we are concerned these points are quite valid. I assured myself that we were not interfering with either of the actions and expressed that opinion to the Attorney General's office before we proceeded with this legislation. I recognize the position that the hon. members have taken here. Certainly we were assured that this would not be the case.

Our legal opinion has been all through the case to ensure that we were not interfering with the right of action of these people to go ahead. We are simply doing what Mr. Justice Leiff suggested should be done. And who are we in this Legislature to question a judge of the court?

This is exactly what he suggested should be done. He upheld the board's right to do what they did, but he suggested that it should be done by order rather than by regulation. But it cannot be done by order rather than regulation. It has to be done by regulation.

Now our friends can come ahead and question the validity of the legislation based on sections 11 and 12. They have also used, as the hon. member for Sudbury rightly pointed out, as astute legal people, the judgment handed down by Mr. Justice Leiff as an additional side issue to their original case—no question of that.

They would not have been smart solicitors had they not done that, but I think this does not absolve us at all of the obligation that falls upon the members of this House to protect the men who have accepted responsibility of office in the Ontario milk marketing board.

Now, if we want to pull the rug out from under them and leave them personally liable to any actions that may be brought against them because we have not validated what they have done, then this is what you are suggesting we should do today.

Mr. Nixon: Well, may I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

I still do not understand why the Minister did not send the bill to committee as a matter of routine. It is a part of dealing with legislation. Why did the Minister not just suggest that the committee would be convened and that we could then have had a chance to look at it?

It could have been passed if the arguments put by the Minister could have been backed up by those people from the milk board and the milk commission as well as those who, perhaps, have a different point of view than those particular gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Why did it not? Well, I suppose this is a legitimate argument. Quite frankly, I did not feel it was necessary. Now you may say that I should have done all this—

Mr. Pitman: Surely you must feel that now.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, there is all kinds of legislation that does not go to committee. I have introduced it many times and I felt that it was routine legislation, quite frankly. Now you say that it is not and, of course, it is your right to think this way. But I can assure you we felt that there was no real problem here.

Mr. MacDonald: There once was an Attorney General who thought his bill was routine and was blown out of the Cabinet as a result.

An hon. member: Bill 99 again.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, if I could just make a brief comment, I would like to point out that the Minister is raising one obstacle after another to the reference of this bill to the standing committee on agriculture. The failure of Ministers in this House to pilot their legislation through second reading by speaking to the bill and clearly setting out its intent and purposes, is underlined by this Minister's statements this afternoon.

As other members have said earlier, the matter was handled rather quietly, but now when we are debating this motion to refer the bill to the committee on agriculture and food, we hear one tale of horror after another as to what is going to happen to the milk marketing board if we do not deal with this this afternoon.

Why were none of these arguments in support of the Minister's bill brought out by the Minister on second reading?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Windsor West, I would say that if he had referred to my introductory statement he would have recognized that this bill was, as someone described it this afternoon, purely housekeeping legislation. When it came before this House for second reading, I moved second reading of the bill.

The hon. member himself and any other hon. member in the Opposition had every right to challenge the bill on second reading and I would have spoken to it. But why should there be anybody speak to it?

Mr. Nixon: You have the responsibility to indicate the importance of legislation and not pass it off as inconsequential.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well surely to goodness you read the statement.

Mr. Nixon: I read it. It is a list of numbers, that is all it is, just a list of numbers.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friends should not really get exercised because those numbers—

Mr. MacDonald: That is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Those numbers are indicative of the regulations as they were published in the Ontario Gazette and are available on anybody's request.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. members want to jeopardize the milk marketing board of this province as I have suggested they will—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If they want to do this, we have no objection to it going to the agriculture committee.

Now, I leave it entirely to the Opposition. If this is what they want to do, let it be on their necks.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, in light of the Minister's statement, I think that it would be incumbent on me to withdraw the motion that is before the House.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the hon. Minister will repeat his statement.

I think there should be no misunderstanding in the committee as to what was said by the hon. Minister if the motion is withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, where do we stand at the moment, that is the point—

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Chairman, if it would facilitate the ordering of the business, we can vote on the motion and I—

Mr. Chairman: All right. We have the motion before us. I was about to put the motion.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Nixon has moved that Bill 17 be not now dealt with by the committee of the whole House, but be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for consideration and report.

All those in favour of Mr. Nixon's motion will please say aye; those opposed will please say nay.

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. Nixon: This is a very delicate point right here.

An hon. member: It is ridiculous.

Another hon. member: It is not ridiculous at all.

Mr. MacDonald: You just said you had no objection.

Mr. Nixon: Surely, the leader of the House, had better intervene at this stage before a standing vote is taken, because the Minister of Agriculture gave an indication that he had no objections to it going to the committee, and now the Chairman says the motion is lost.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order please!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to this. I did find myself a little confused here on the procedure. The Minister has indicated as far as he is concerned he, as I understand his remarks—

Mr. MacDonald: I do not blame you for being confused.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, I am not confused. Just wait for it. He has indicated that as far as he is concerned he does not mind if this bill is delayed and if it goes to the agriculture committee, but he is saying in the same breath that if this action as argued so severely for by the Opposition has an adverse effect upon the function of the milk marketing board, be it on the heads of the Opposition.

That is as I understand his position. Now, to give effect to the Minister's position I might suggest, as I see the routine here, that we go to what you suggested. If you withdraw your motion, then we will refer the bill to the committee as it would go in a normal procedure after being approved in principle by this House on second reading which, in fact, was done.

I think what the Minister is trying to make very, very clear, very clear indeed, is that he does not want to be put in the position where he is the big bold bad villain who is riding rough shod over everyone's rights as you try to make out is being done. We do not think we are. But if the result of this action is to interfere in a serious way with the function of the milk marketing board, we want it clearly understood that this was what was asked for by the Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: That we are to blame?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, in reference to the Premier's comment in withdrawing the motion, I would draw to his attention as well that surely he and his Ministers have the responsibility for the ordering of the business in this province. Now, we have a responsibility in Opposition to react as we see fit, which we have done and we will look forward to a discussion of the bill in agriculture committee.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister without Portfolio): Where were you on second reading?

Mr. Nixon: It is withdrawn.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The motion is withdrawn and the bill will be referred to the agriculture committee.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): That was the worst move you ever made—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

I declare that Mr. Nixon's motion has been withdrawn. The bill will be referred to the standing committee.

THE ONTARIO HURRICANE RELIEF FUND ACT, 1955

House in committee on Bill 16, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955.

Sections 1 to 3 inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 16 reported.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report one bill without amendment and one bill referred to the standing committee on agriculture and food.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill without amendment and one bill referred to the standing committee on agriculture and food, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this Throne debate, I want to say to you I wish you well during the remainder of the term of your office. Also I would like to say to the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter), who has been chosen by this hon. assembly for the second time as chairman of the committee of the whole House, this speaks very well for him and I also wish him well during the remainder of this session.

To the hon. member for London South (Mr. White), who is not in his seat this afternoon, I wish to congratulate him on being elevated to the Cabinet position and I hope he will read Hansard. I have to issue a warning to him that his term of office is going to be very short, Mr. Speaker, and I will explain the reason why. We have in the Liberal party a young, able, dynamic leader and that is the reason why his term will be short.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): What are you looking for, an appointment, George?

Mr. Spence: That is right.

Mr. Speaker, to the two hon. new members who entered this Legislature—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You may be the next leader, George!

Mr. Nixon: That is Jack, not George.

Mr. Spence:—in 1967, who were chosen by the government as the mover and seconder in the reply to the speech from the Throne, I wish to congratulate them on their speeches and also say it was an honour for them to be chosen by the government to fill this honourable position.

Mr. Speaker, last night the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) made a very kind remark about me, which made me feel very humble. Of course, I did not expect that those conversations when we ride home on Friday evenings would have come on the floor of the Ontario Legislature. But, it is true we discuss these very things, but I must say, Mr. Speaker, he owns the car and I am not saying the reason why we practise being Cabinet Ministers. I believe that he is talented and well qualified for a Cabinet Minister, so I drive quite a lot of the time and he sits in the back seat.

He has not told you all the story because I believe after his Throne speech last night you will agree with me that on this weekend and from now on every weekend I will be doing the driving and he will be in the back seat.

Also, Mr. Speaker, another matter that we discussed—we have no reading lamp in the back seat of his car—and we have reached an agreement we are going to do a little saving during the Christmas recess and we may be able to afford a light when the session reconvenes after the holidays.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that since the last session we have had a northwestern Ontario members' tour. And I must say that this tour impressed me very much. This tour was well planned by the Minister of Lands and Forests and his officials.

The Minister of Lands and Forests had everything under control, he even had control of the weather and I found that tour most beneficial, interesting and one which gave me and the members from southwestern Ontario an insight in our forests, the new methods of harvesting our forest products and also the manufacturing of new wood products in northwestern Ontario.

We also had a look at some of the minerals. Above all, we learned and believed there is a great potential in northwestern Ontario to increase the tourist industry. I know no member would have seen as much as we saw only on a tour such as we had in September.

The last day of the tour the Minister of Lands and Forests and his officials arranged a fishing tour for us and during this tour I must say his officials made a great effort, they outfitted us with every piece of equipment which was necessary to fish, but, Mr. Speaker, I fished all day and never saw one fish, and it is hard for me to make any comments about fishing in the lakes of northern Ontario.

But, I will say that when we landed at night on the shore of this lake, we were met by the hon. member for Dovercourt, a man who was able to land any fish out of any lake in northwestern Ontario. He looked tired and he approached us, he had something in his hand and he was showing us, and said, "Look what I caught today".

The photographers took his picture and I must say if that is a sample of the fish that are in northwestern Ontario lake, I would ask the Minister to have our northern lakes restocked.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) and all his officials on a fine, well-planned members' tour of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, as a member from southern Ontario, I want to say to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests that if he is planning another members' tour that he plan a tour of southern Ontario, as I am unable to remember that there was ever a tour of this part of the province. I know that some of the hon. members have not visited southern Ontario. We have a great deal to show them—one of the richest farming areas on the north American continent, miles of beaches on the Great Lakes, friendly people in our towns and villages and on our farms. Many people in southern Ontario feel that we should have many more tourists visit this part of Ontario than we have and spend more tourist dollars in southern Ontario (with what we have to offer) but this government has raised the admission fees to our parks which is driving our tourists away from this province.

I have an article from the press stating that a citizen from Ontario made a trip last summer which took him and his party through three American states and three Ontario provinces and he stated that Canadian and American campers will shun Ontario parks next year on account of high provincial park fees. This article also says that he talked to American campers who had used Ontario provincial parks. They had used them for the last time because Ontario's parks are behind the times and far too costly for all they offer. The cost per week to pitch a tent is $2.50 a day with electricity $3 per day, or $21 per week, where in our sister province of Manitoba, the campers rates are $12 per week with better facilities in their best provincial parks.

This article also states that Ontario has the highest camp permit rate in North America and this is driving many camping tourists away from this province, including our own citizens, who are and will continue to vacation elsewhere in large numbers in the future. This government will have to lower the park fees if they want to increase the income from the tourist industry in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, over the past years, I have visited many parts of the province of Ontario and one cannot but notice the struggle that is taking place in rural Ontario for its existence. We look at The Department of Municipal Affairs municipal directory, we find that over a ten-year period that the population of our towns and villages are nearly the same. Take rural areas—the population is going down, Mr. Speaker, we in rural Ontario are exporting our greatest asset, our educated young people, after they complete Grade 13 in our secondary schools, to the metropolitan area, because this is where the universities are and when they graduate and have a profession they have to locate in the metropolitan areas, because this is where the salaries are paid that they are entitled to.

So, Mr. Speaker, as far as I can find, a very small percentage of our young people, who have a profession, return to the rural areas because the opportunities and salaries are greater in our big cities.

We do not blame our young people whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear. I, and the citizens of our towns and villages, want to see educational opportunities open to every young person who wishes an education. Mr. Speaker, this has been a steady drain on the rural areas with no medical doctor or dentist established in these areas.

We educate one group and they have to leave, and then these same areas educate our next group of young people—our greatest asset—which is very costly and this government should be paying a greater share of these costs. A greater effort should be made by this government to encourage more industries to locate in the towns and villages so that there would be a greater opportunity to encourage these educated young people to establish in our towns and villages, build homes, buy boats, drive cars and spend their money in those areas that helped to educate them.

Mr. Speaker, with new industries in towns and villages, more jobs and larger salaries, more of our educated young people would be encouraged to return to the smaller communities.

Mr. Speaker, I have been approached by small businessmen on many occasions who have told me that they are being squeezed tighter all the time. You ask the banker in our small towns and villages—look at the shops that you see closed in so many places across the province. Mr. Speaker, when Highway 401 was being built, I thought that this expressway would bring industries to locate in the small places along the route. I was mistaken; instead, it rushed the traffic away from the small communities.

Mr. Speaker, what problems has a small business today? The big shopping centres in our cities have encouraged our people to deal away from our home localities. It is ridiculous when the small businessman has to pay 20 per cent or 25 per cent, yes, even 33½ per cent more for merchandise than the discount centre in the shopping centre. One man's money should be worth comparatively as much as the other man's.

Mr. Speaker, there is probably room for a five per cent difference for volume buying, also he is unable to hire help because those he wishes to assist him can secure employment in industries. They are able to pay a higher salary than he can afford to pay.

High federal and provincial taxes—the five per cent sales tax are among things hurting him, to add insult to injury he is asked at a time when he has a great work load, a low margin of profit, and cannot afford more help, to act as a collection agency for this provincial sales tax at a ridiculously low remuneration. The small businessman, in order to hold his business together, sometimes has to give credit. It is grossly unfair to expect these people, who in some cases carry hundreds of dollars on their books, to pay the five per cent sales tax on charge accounts. The high rate of interest is also hurting the small business—also the nuisance from government agencies, licensing expenses.

The continual tightening and red tape of government regulations for operation is causing hardships. An elevator in a small business has now become instead of a necessity, an unobtainable luxury. Also, I have been informed, a hot water heater is required by any store owner hiring one employee but not required if a person operates alone, a ridiculous regulation.

Today, the banks charge heavier than ever before for some things which were formerly free services, while big business gets way without exchange on cheques. The small business pays. In short, slowly and surely the standards of big business are being forced upon the small businessman, so that without capital drawing power and advantages enjoyed by his larger counterpart he can no longer effectively compete.

This government must increase the remuneration for collecting the sales tax and speed up the taking over of the policing of towns of under 5,000 population which was approved at the last session and which would assist considerably the small businessman in our towns and villages, Mr. Speaker.

This government approved at the last session of this Legislature a provincial equalization of industrial opportunity programme, making it possible for industries to receive interest free forgivable loans in designated slow growth areas in the province. This, Mr. Speaker—which I approved—has helped a number of industries and has made it possible for some industries that I know to enlarge their operations and has increased employment in some slow growth areas in southern Ontario.

But this move has been too long in coming, Mr. Speaker. I read an article where this government approved 200 municipalities across the province as slow-growth areas. Of the 200, 63 are in western Ontario. More municipalities in southwestern Ontario feel and believe that they should be classed as slow-growth areas.

These figures are startling when we hear in this honourable assembly the great job that this government is doing. The small towns and villages are unable to build sewage systems on account of high costs. I have been informed that one village applied for a sewage system from the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

The commission was to construct the system and they would rent or lease—the cost of which would be three to four hundred dollars a year on every home in this village on top of their present taxes. This would be impossible for the people of the village to consider. I feel a new approach should be made. Why cannot these sewage systems be built like hydro?

As I understand, very few of our towns or villages have a sewage system. Even in my own riding, not one village or town has a sewage system constructed, all because of the tremendous costs of construction. Also there is the high cost of education on the taxpayers of these communities along with no new industries which were promised by past Ministers of Trade and Development, and former Ministers of Economics and Development.

Rural Ontario is being depopulated and this government has been in office for the last 25 years and should have been paying more of the cost of education if they were unable to come up with a plan to encourage some decentralization of industry in this province. Now we have great problems in our great cities—high cost of rent—shortage of housing—high prices for lots, for homes—more transportation facilities and the low wage earner unable to own his own home.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and the hon. members of this assembly, the fast changing cycle that the agriculture industry is going through in this province. This past year, there has been great unrest among the farmers of Ontario in regard to the low net income, the high cost of goods needed to produce agricultural products.

We have seen the Ontario Farm Union tractor drive on Ottawa over United States corn coming into Canada. The Federation of Agriculture having tractors from England at their convention, and the Canadian Corn Growers Association fact-finding trip to Maume in the state of Ohio in regard to the difference in prices of United States fertilizers and Ontario fertilizers.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have received a copy of a resolution passed by the Kent county council and sent to me, which I will read, dated November 28, 1968.

This is the first time I have ever received a resolution passed on agriculture in the county that I have always lived in. I would just like to read some of the remarks of it; this is the resolution:

Whereas the price of corn, soy beans and other farm commodities recently declined considerably and whereas this decline has caused a great deal of concern to the producers in this area and whereas decline in farm prices has greatly reduced the purchasing power of the farmer and whereas the purchasing power of the farmers greatly affect the economy of this area, and we believe the county as a whole.

Therefore, be it resolved, by the Kent county council, the federal and provincial governments be requested to review the economy of the agricultural industry immediately, with the object in mind of placing this industry in a favourable, competitive position with other industries; and in the meantime, to implement whatever measures are necessary to save the agricultural industry in order that young Canadians might make farming their choice vocation.

It is unusual for me, Mr. Speaker, to receive a resolution passed by the Kent county council.

Also, Mr. Speaker, being a farmer myself and representing a riding that includes agriculture among its industries, I have been approached by individual farmers many times. Their concern is the price spread between the producer and what the consumer has to pay. Also the low net return from agriculture to the farmer.

Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate that the Minister of Agriculture did set up a special committee on farm income two years ago and the Minister has said that this committee is expected to bring down a report early in January 1969. Also the Minister agreed that, when the special committee on farm income completes its report, it will start a study on the corn industry in Ontario, which I feel is a step in the right direction and is certainly needed.

I want to say to the Minister of Agriculture that those in agriculture are looking forward to these reports, hoping that they will have recommendations that will improve conditions in agriculture in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, one great concern to me was at the Ontario Federation of Agriculture meeting in Toronto a few weeks ago. Tractors that were brought in from England were on display at greatly reduced prices—lower in price than similar tractors sold in Canada. Why did not the farm machinery committee bring this to the attention of the public, if such conditions exist? I ask the Minister of Agriculture for an explanation. What are the duties of the farm machinery committee? Should we continue with them?

Mr. Speaker, I was invited by the Canadian Corn Growers' Association to go to Maume, Ohio, on Dec. 9, on a fact-finding experiment on the costs of fertilizers in the United States and the prices of fertilizers in Ontario.

Another reason was that, over the last two years, I have been asked many times by farmers why is it that American farmers can buy their fertilizers so much cheaper than the Canadian farmer. I was unable to answer their questions, so I went along on this occasion to get answers in regard to the fertilizer questions.

Mr. Speaker, farmers bought 21 tons of different varieties of fertilizers and brought them back to Canada. To have the potash shipped from the mine in Saskatchewan to Maume, Ohio, would cost by railroad $17.09 per ton. So, Mr. Speaker, shipping by boat is considerably lower in price. Freight rates are something I learned to study on this trip to find ways of cutting the costs of transporting our grain and goods needed in southwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I asked the Minister if he would investigate the feasibility of locating a corn-processing plant in the centre of the corn belt, in southwestern Ontario. I want to say we produce 68 million bushels in Ontario—a large portion of it in southwestern Ontario.

We ship considerable quantities to Montreal to be processed and the railroad freight rates are 21 cents a bushel. He informed the farm income committee, which he set up to study income, that it would study the corn industry.

Mr. Speaker, we have the soya bean farmers in southwestern Ontario, with lower prices this year than last, wondering why the five counties in southwestern Ontario which produce 7,000,000 bushels of soya beans—the counties are Essex, Elgin, Kent, Lambton and Middlesex—have to ship the product to Toronto and Hamilton in order to get them crushed. This costs 13 cents a bushel for freight. Then they have to pay the freight back to feed this product.

I have been informed that it is cheaper in some cases to have the crushed soya bean meal shipped in from the United States than to pay the freight both ways and, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed this has taken place. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture look into this to see if these conditions exist and to consider the feasibility of establishing a crusher plant in the centre of the soya bean growing area in southwestern Ontario.

The officials of the Ohio firm said that they do not buy all the ingredients for fertilizers from Canada, but they buy in off-season when they get the best prices. He said they buy phosphates in Florida and some from New Brunswick. He also said that 12,000 tons of Canadian potash will arrive at Maume, Ohio, on Tuesday next from Saskatchewan. They purchase nitrogen whenever they find it and they have purchased some from Court-right near Sarnia.

One farmer who was on the trip bought eight tons of the fertilizer and said he saved himself the price of two new suits of clothes.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to place on record the variety of fertilizers and the United States farmers' price and the Canadian farmers' price which I received from the Canadian Commercial Corn Growers' Association, who have carried on a great study and have brought to light information—some good and some not so good.

Mr. Speaker, this is the list. (See appendix, page 870.)

We were told that freight by railroad was very high to ship potash by rail from Saskatchewan to their plant in Maume. It was $17.09 a ton where it cost $2 by boat per ton from the Lakehead to Maume, Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this tour to Ohio has convinced me that we should have more port facilities in southwestern Ontario to ship our produce.

Mr. Speaker, at the present time the standing committee on agriculture only deals with bills or matters that are referred to it from the Legislature. I ask that the Legislature delegate more power to the agriculture committee, such as the authority to call on farm organizations, manufacturing firms—owners and officials—which the standing committee decides necessary to help solve problems which concern or affect the agriculture industry in the province of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I feel if this were undertaken it would improve conditions both for the manufacturer of farm equipment, the processor of farm products and the farmer.

I hope the Legislature will give this their consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, nearing the end of my remarks, I would like to say a few words—and I will deal with this in a little larger way after recess—in regard to regional government.

I must say that I know that in this province we have regions that are in favour of regional government, but, Mr. Speaker, I also know we have regions that are not in favour of regional government. And I understand that first regional government will come into force in the Ottawa-Carleton area on the first day of January.

I am one who feels that if an area, or a region, is not in favour of regional government, regional government should not be shoved on them. I think if regional government is good, it will sell itself without being shoved on the people. I hope that the Minister of Municipal Affairs will remember this. I take the attitude if a region does not want regional government, it should not be shoved on the people without their consent.

There are many more things I could say. I was very upset, or very surprised, listening to the hon. Provincial Treasurer speak a couple of nights ago. I must say, Mr. Speaker, he understands his department, he is well qualified to fill that position. But, Mr. Speaker, I was quite concerned when he made the statement, or left the impression with me, that we are going to have increased taxation again this year.

When we just got through the last session we had increased taxation and we are facing increased taxation again. I feel that a large segment of our population is finding taxes a real burden. I think the government should look at every place where it could economize, such as what the hon. member for Sarnia said: "Straighten up some of these things—to think that the basic tax exemption grant was granted to Governor Romney in Michigan, in the United States." I think we could adopt some things like that to cut down unnecessary spending. I think the Americans are laughing at us for giving basic tax exemption grants. I hope the government would make every effort to put efficiency into effect in this province and consider greatly before they increase or place more taxes on the people of Ontario.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker—I understand the session will adjourn for the recess on Friday evening—I would like to take this opportunity to extend to you and all the members of this hon. assembly a very merry Christmas.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join those who have congratulated you on the work you have done in the past year as Speaker of the House. I would also like to commend the Chairman of the committee of the whole House.

I do not envy the task that both of you gentlemen are confronted with, particularly when the going gets hot and heavy in this place.

With that, I would like to get into the main text. Mr. Speaker, before getting into the main text, however, I would like to make a few observations after approximately one year in office on the deplorable conditions which the members of this Legislature must work under. How members are to get their case work done, find the time to attend committee meetings and do research is beyond me.

The latter point, research, is vital to efficient government, efficient opposition, and efficient questioning, yet members have little or no time to do the necessary reading or research. Maybe there is a desire to perpetuate the inefficiency which is characteristic of the government. I do not know.

The key reason, of course, is largely due to the lack of sufficient office staff. A provincial MPP is much more involved in the every day life of his constituents than is a federal MP, resulting in a good deal more case work. Yet each federal MP has a secretary. Here, with a much heavier case work load, we have one secretary for about every three to three and a half members. The secretaries spend nearly all of their time typing, to a point where I have seen some eat their lunches at their desks, while MPs do the trivial jobs, like filing, all of the legwork for solutions for casework (some of which is simply obtaining information for constituents) and a whole host of small tasks that his secretary might be able to handle. All these minute tasks do not allow the member time to do the vital research that is necessary to become a well informed member.

Two, in this area of conditions, one must look at the quarters in which members must work. The situation is ludicrous. Five or six, or in the case of the official Opposition, I understand, eight members per office.

In the Tory headquarters I have been in, there are not even partitions in these rooms. If a member has a constituent in his office, or shall I say in his corner of the office, the other members have difficulty doing constituency work, or reading if he or she could find the time. Even the piddly little desks, or shall I call them orange crates as their surfaces are not much bigger than that, are ridiculously small. Two drawers, which hold next to nothing, make it impossible to keep pertinent material at hand and to work efficiently. The entire physical setting, as I stated earlier, is completely deplorable. As well as poor physical conditions, there are certain other problems which the members are confronted with.

Earlier I mentioned the tremendous amount of case work a member must do. In the case of members who commute to Toronto daily, or who are residents of Toronto, they can set aside certain hours for their constituents to come and see them during the week. Members, however, who can go home only on the weekend find themselves loaded with this work on weekends. Unfortunately none of these cases can be worked on until the member returns to Toronto, as all the government offices are closed in their immediate areas.

This is because we cannot get the government to move on logical change for things that must be changed.

The result is the member brings a pile of work back to Toronto involving constituents in his area. He starts to make calls to his office in the area in an effort to resolve the problem of his constituents.

The procedure is most inefficient and unfair. The members who live away from home spend most of the weekend driving around and have no time for their families. And let me make it clear many of these constituents are entitled to see their members in order to have their problems worked on. What is needed is some clear-cut time to have this opportunity, when the House is in session, for constituents to see their members.

The probable solution is for this House not to sit on Friday. Sitting on Friday is a farce anyway. The session is two and a half hours long and next to nothing is accomplished. The news media count heads to see how many members are in attendance; the people question why so many are absent, and in general the Friday sittings are ridiculous.

Therefore, I would urge this government to consider, at least for a trial period, discontinuance of Friday sittings, and allow the members to get home to give their constituents the service they are entitled to, and give the members an opportunity to enjoy their families on weekends. I could go on to illustrate other conditions which make the MPP's position unenviable. With sessions that run as long as they do now—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Keep complaining and the hon. member's constituents will feel sorry for him and will not send him back here.

Mr. Martel: They will send me back, I am not worried about that. I think they have the right to some service.

But it is ridiculous, for example, when sessions run as long as they do now, and when the budget reaches $2 billion, that a member is entitled for payment for only 15 trips home.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Three billion.

Mr. Martel: Three billion?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Maybe that was to cut the tax increase.

Well, when the budget reaches this figure, Mr. Speaker, and the session runs this long, and well it should, it is very ridiculous for a member to be compensated for 15 trips back to his riding. In fact, it is so very ridiculous that we in the north must come down now on a train that does not even have overnight sleeping accommodation. In the case of many of your own members, the member for Kenora, for instance, must fly 1,250 miles home.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: He will speak for himself.

Mr. Martel: I do not think he will speak for himself; he certainly has not in here, anyway. Also the member for Thunder Bay who, if he takes the train home, gets home for exactly 12 hours on the weekend.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: He knew all about this.

Mr. Martel: Do not make such small talk. Let us face the issue for a change.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: They do not want to hear it. Their own members cannot get back to their own ridings to service the people that are sending them here. If they could get back, they do not have the funds to do it.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There is always the thought that even if they could get home, they would not do anything anyway.

Mr. Martel: I could go on ad nauseam—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The member already has.

Mr. Martel: Well, it might be ad nauseam to you people who are so affluent in the front benches. But I can assure you, for many of your backbenchers who have spoken to me on this matter are not finding it ad nauseam, and perhaps you should take cognizance of this fact. Maybe this government should get into a position where we could service the people a great deal better than we are doing at the present time.

It being 6 o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be in order to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, if the hon. member would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Martel moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr Rowntree: Tomorrow we will deal with the matters of the committee of the House and particularly with reference to the expropriation bill, and such time as may be left thereafter, we will continue with the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1968

The House met at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, students from the following schools: in the east gallery, Birchmount Park Collegiate Institute, Scarborough, and St. David's Senior Public School, St. David's; and in the west gallery, from Sprucedale School, Hagersville.

Presenting petitions.

The following petitions were read and received:

Of the Corporation of the City of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to grant the right to operate means of conveyance in public parks; and for other purposes.

Of the Corporation of the City of Kitchener praying that an Act may pass authorizing special separation allowances and retirement allowances to certain employees; and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following reports:

1. The 22nd annual report of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, March 31, 1968.

2. The annual report of the Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario.

3. The annual report of the Ontario Stockyards Board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1968.

4. The Crop Insurance Commission of Ontario second annual report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968.

5. The University of Western Ontario financial statements June 30, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education) moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND BOARDS OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE SEPARATE SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of a bill intituled, An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, these three Acts relate back to Bill 44 for the purpose of some clarification and, in one or two instances, to expand the duty of the arbitrators as to fees to be paid. It was the thought that I would introduce them here today. We will then circulate them to the boards, so that they will have some understanding of those items we are trying to clarify for them. We will discuss these on second reading, and in committee some time in the new year.

THE PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERS ACT, 1968-1969

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of a bill intituled, The Professional Engineers Act, 1968-1969.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This bill, Mr. Speaker represents very considerable work which has been done by the Association of Professional Engineers, incorporating a statute designed to meet the modern needs of the engineering profession in the province.

I am sure that the hon. members will recall, Mr. Speaker, this similar bill was introduced at the last session of the Legislature, just prior to the publication of the report of the Hon. J. C. McRuer. It was thought at that time that the bill should be reviewed in the light of the recommendation which Mr. McRuer made, respecting self-governing professions. During the interval since the last session, Mr. Speaker, the Association of Professional Engineers has devoted a good deal of attention to the recommendations, and the manner in which they should be applied to this particular statute.

At the same time, a draft model Act was prepared within my department respecting the recommendations in Mr. McRuer's report. A copy of that draft model Act was circulated earlier this fall to all of the self-governing professions and occupations of which we had a record.

The draft proposals indicated the manner in which the recommendations might be engrossed in a legislative form. It was contemplated that the individual recommendations in that form would be engrossed within the particular statute dealing with individual professions and occupations.

It is our view, Mr. Speaker, that because of the varied nature of the many professions and occupations affected by these recommendations, that it would be impractical if not impossible to produce a uniform statute that would deal generally with all of the recommendations. While ultimately the procedures to be followed within these groups in dealing with disciplinary matters in conducting hearings would come under the provisions of The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, there are other phases of the recommendations which will have to be dealt with individually within the statutes.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, reflects the recommendations and introduces them into a self-governing statute in a manner which we feel accomplishes the recommendations while at the same time recognizing the needs of the profession.

We hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will be widely circulated during the recess of the Legislature in order that the great number of professional engineers who are interested in the subject will be able to peruse it in their various chapter organizations. Any constructive comments may then be reflected when the matter comes up for consideration in the Legislature when it reconvenes.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, may I ask for a point of clarification from the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart)?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Lawlor: As I understood the matter last year, sir, there was some primacy to be given to an Act which was being prepared and introduced by the Law Society of Upper Canada as a sort of model Act, at least a guideline with all the criteria in it. Has the Attorney General put that aside, therefore, in order to introduce this bill?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, if I may answer: No, we have not put it aside, we have had discussions with the governing body of the law society and with others interested, and I actually have in my office, Mr. Speaker, a bill which I hope to introduce shortly, a new Law Society Act.

I had hoped as a matter of pride for our profession to perhaps introduce that first but we have taken time to consider it and I must say that the professional engineers were first on the scene about a year ago with their bill and we have worked with them and have reviewed with them their proposals and, as I said in my statement, we have done the drafting of this final bill which I introduced today.

We considered with them, as well as with the law society and with other professions, the recommendations which Mr. McRuer made but I did not feel it was wise to hold up any longer this bill, The Professional Engineers Act. The Law Society Act, I might say, is really ready. I have one or two things I would like to consider in it. It will probably be introduced very early when the session resumes.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a further point of clarification, two questions really.

The Attorney General in his remarks refers to a draft model Act which was circulated. I wonder if that draft model Act could be circulated to the members as well so that we could see what draft model sections he had in mind when he circulated it to various people. I think it would be helpful for us if we could examine that draft model Act at the time we come to discuss this on second reading.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, is this: Would the Attorney General undertake, when these Acts are being introduced—The Law Society Act or The Professional Engineers

Act, or any other professional Act—to have copies distributed to all members of those professions, because I think in that way we would be able to get a much more meaningful discussion by the time it comes to second reading or committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I might say that The Law Society Act which I mentioned I have, has gone out through the law society to every member of the profession already—the draft of course.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That was sent out today, was it not?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps it was today.

Mr. Singer: It was not in my mail this morning.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You might not have got it but it is in your mail. Perhaps the Christmas mails have delayed it. The Professional Engineers distributed very widely the Act I introduced last year and I understand that this Act, if it has not gone to every member of their profession, is in the process of being distributed to them.

Now to answer the remainder of the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, The Statutory Powers Procedure Act has been given wide distribution, we had thought, in that area and we have done, along the line of our thinking, the sending out of that proposed Act draft to the executives or the governing bodies of the profession. I would take under consideration the thought that it might go out in a wider distribution. We will see what we can do.

Mr. Singer: I am only suggesting it would be wise not to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, the hon. member has the right to ask questions for clarification but there is to be no debate on these matters, I think that is agreed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I would like to assure members, Mr. Speaker, that we will consider a wider distribution and will see what we can do about it.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, I wonder if the hon. Attorney General could give us some idea who the model Act was circulated to?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I said, I think, Mr. Speaker, that The Statutory Powers Procedure Act which was a compendium in legislative form of the recommendations which the hon. Mr. McRuer made with respect to self-governing professions went out, as I said in my statement, to every self-governing profession that we had a record of—optometrists, dentists, engineers, lawyers, doctors, chiropractors, and so on and so on.

Mr. Singer: Not to Opposition politicians.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, of course this has not been introduced to the House yet—

Hon. Mr. Welch: That has practically become a profession for some of them.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Members of the House will have their opportunity, I assure everyone, to consider any legislation that we introduce, but this was just a draft which affected particularly the self-governing professions, many of whom we knew were considering, in the light of Mr. McRuer's recommendations, Acts which would govern their professions.

They were peculiarly and particularly interested, so we wanted them to have, as early as possible in consideration of their legislation, the thought that they should incorporate into their legislation these recommendations. One overall Act as I have mentioned, will not necessarily fit each profession in every detail, but may need some variation; we therefore sent it out to each of the self-governing professions.

I will be bringing before the House in due course a general Act but as I have mentioned in my statement today, Mr. Speaker, the differences in the professions, in their activities, in their approach and in their functions, requires some modification so that one general Act will not necessarily fit them all in every particular.

I am sure the hon. members will have every opportunity to see what we are proposing and in this particular bill I believe you will find that the recommendations of the hon. Mr. McRuer have been incorporated in a very thorough, complete way.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know that you are trying to restrict our comments to points of clarification, and perhaps before I make my point I would ask you to advise me further if in fact, on first reading, it is not possible to say something beyond just a point of clarification.

Mr. Speaker: The normal course is not to do so but I have no objection since the hon. Attorney General has lengthily explained some of the matters. I have no objection whatsoever to the hon. leader speaking further to that.

Mr. Nixon: The only point I want to make is that the Attorney General's lengthy clarification is to justify his procedure in not circulating among the membership of this House his draft model Act having to do with professional legislation.

Surely there can be no excuse for not making that available to the individual members. The reasons that the Attorney General gives are completely unacceptable and if he is trying, through a lengthy explanation, to say that it affects only those people involved in the profession, this simply will not wash here. We are concerned with seeing that the recommendations of the report from Mr. McRuer are not only available in the legislation proposed for the engineers, but in the draft model Act that has been circulated quite widely among the list that the Attorney General mentions.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): You are only the Opposition. We have the right to introduce our own legislation.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Oh, get that in Hansard.

Mr. Singer: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the draft model Statutory Powers Procedure Act which we had drafted, was not intended for introduction in the Legislature in the form in which it was prepared. It was a compendium of the recommendations, prepared in a form to assist the professions in the preparation of their bills, of which this bill I introduced today is one.

I assure the hon. members, we will come forward with a Statutory Powers Procedure Act which will probably not be—certainly I expect will not be the same—but will be more of a production of what we sent out.

What we attempted to do was to assist the professions by saying these are the recommendations—and we have set them out in a rather hurried way actually—in somewhat the form you might incorporate them into your Acts. These are the things that we will be doing in the preparation of your bills as you want to present them to us. Of course, we review those bills and redraft them. These things you should not overlook.

That Statutory Powers Procedure Act—which was, I might say, a rough draft or model—was simply to make them aware that in the preparation of their legislation they should not overlook the recommendations of Mr. McRuer. It was not intended for presentation to this House, but simply to assist the professions.

Mr. Nixon: We should have the same assistance available.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This House will receive, in due course, a Statutory Powers Procedure Act which members will have ample opportunity to consider when it is presented. I trust we will be able to do this soon.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would just say that those guidelines and assistances would be very much valued by the members of this House as well.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am just emphasizing what has been emphasized considerably, but on one hand I would like to commend the government for coming up with the model bill and the proposition that, ultimately, it is going to come in with a Statutory Powers Procedures Act.

But to underline what the leader of the Opposition has been saying—if you are circulating it widely to citizens in the community who happen to be members of any professional organization, surely the first group who should be included in any circulation are members of the Legislature.

I make the point because I think the procedure that the Attorney General has adopted is a very commendable one. In fact, I would draw it to the attention of the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). I think such a model bill prepared and circulated to the university presidents might be a very useful guide as to what should be done—without placing them all in a straitjacket—to bring their bills up to date and in keeping with modern times in the restructuring of universities. But that is by-the-by for the moment.

My point is simply that in circulating it widely to citizens who are in one professional group or another, surely the members of the Legislature, who ultimately have got to pass some judgment on it, should be one of the first groups to be circulated.

It is as simple as that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, because everyone is on the same point.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Speaker, my recollection of the withdrawal of the former Engineers Act last year—when the Attorney General withdrew that Act—it is my recollection that he said at the time that he was withdrawing this Act in the light of the McRuer recommendations and that he would bring a model Act before this House and thereafter deal with the professional bodies. As I see it today, Mr. Speaker, he has changed his procedure in this matter and I think we should have been advised of it before he did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I agree wholeheartedly with the comments made by the member for York South and with the leader of the Opposition. I agree that the House should have first, any legislation the members of this House are entitled to have, and I think they always have had any legislation which is intended to be presented to the Legislature. There has been no breach of, or deviation from that procedure.

What we sent out—perhaps I was at fault in not clarifying it—what we sent to the professions were those recommendations of the McRuer report which affected the self-governing professions. The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, which I shall eventually introduce, is, I am sure members will appreciate, a much wider piece of legislation than simply affecting self-governing professions. It deals with statutory powers in their very broad context and form.

So I did not—and I want the members to understand this—I did not send out to the executives, governing bodies, and leaders of the professions, a bill which I intended to present to this House. It was simply a compendium of recommendations composed somewhat in legislative form or in legal form, which they might consider in drafting their legislation.

Nothing has been done to deprive this House of the first look. What we have done has been in the sense of trying to assess by saying: “Here are the recommendations which should affect your profession as prepared by Mr. McRuer. We have put them together in a form in which you might find them possible to consider and incorporate in your legislation.”

Mr. Singer: Why can the Attorney General not show that to the members?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I would have no objection but I am sure a great many members will see them. As they consider each bill they will be able to relate in this bill—which I have introduced—the recommendations of Mr. McRuer. If they find any omissions they will be able to say: “Why were these omitted?”

Mr. Singer: The Attorney General has done it already.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. Minister has entered into a sufficient explanation.

Introduction of bills.

THE SECURITIES ACT, 1966

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Securities Act, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require all brokers dealing with the public to maintain sufficient insurance so as to protect their clients in case of bankruptcy of the broker.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, today the Treasurer of Ontario is meeting in Ottawa with other Provincial Treasurers and the Minister of Finance. He has made a statement there which I think should be read into the record at the earliest possible moment.

I now read the statement by the hon. Provincial Treasurer and Minister of Economics to the Minister of Finance and Provincial Treasurers at Ottawa on December 19, 1968.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I understood that you are not supposed to read statements, but that is a rule that is not followed here, so, by usage, we will not dwell on that.

But is it permissible for someone to get up and make a statement on behalf of somebody else and say: “I am speaking for somebody else”? Should not everyone speak for himself in this House?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): He is speaking for the government.

Mr. Speaker: The usages of Parliament so far as I am aware, and I am now supported in that, are that the Ministry acts for the government. Questions are asked of a Ministry and any one of the Ministry may answer even though the questions are directed to a particular Minister. Statements by one Minister may, of course, be made by another. The hon. House leader is quite in order and he will proceed.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The opposite to the proposition proposed by the hon. member would be that we do not report to this House. That is not this government's position. We intend to report to this House and try to keep the members of the Legislature informed of all matters.

The statement is as follows:

At our meeting on November 4 and 5, we agreed to resume our discussion on tax-sharing at this time. We have come here to do just that in the hope that some progress will be made towards resolving the federal-provincial financial impasse.

We have not come looking for hand-outs but for solutions. We are not here to propound bizarre doctrines but to offer our ideas for financing a workable Canadian federalism. We are not here to pass the buck on necessary tax increases but to seek ways to contain the total tax burden, to develop priorities for the total pool of tax revenues and to co-ordinate reform of our total tax system.

Ontario's position is well known. In our view, we must have new financial arrangements to reduce the basic fiscal imbalance between our two levels of government—an imbalance that has been documented again in the 1969-70 projections developed by the Continuing Committee on Fiscal and Economic Matters. This new evidence reaffirms the findings of the Tax Structure Committee in 1966, notwithstanding the federal Finance Minister's contentions that federal transfers of the past two years had improved the provinces' relative position. It is abundantly clear that the capacity of the federal government to digest large expenditures and invent new programmes is a measure of its ability to provide more tax room for the provinces.

Our province, and in turn our municipalities, must receive more of the tax revenues provided by our own people to finance local services, many of which are recognized as taking priority over federal responsibilities. In addition, real tax reform can be achieved only through full federal-provincial participation in the redesign of the income and wealth fields which are shared by both levels of government. We believe that the best solution can be achieved through a more reasonable starting point in the division of the tax fields.

Ottawa, however, has rejected a co-ordinated approach to taxation control and declined to consider machinery for joint priority-setting. As for tax reform, the federal government already has made major changes in the death tax field without consulting the provinces and it appears to be taking the same unilateral course in redesigning the income tax base, despite our repeated requests for and federal assurances of joint consideration in this shared-tax field.

The federal government's renewed offer of a transfer of 17 points of the personal income tax, plus an adjustment payment to meet actual programme costs in three shared-cost fields, will not provide the provinces with additional revenue. This shift would enable more direct control over these expenditures but the provinces would not benefit from any cost reductions. Only Ottawa stands to gain financially from the cutbacks the provinces would be forced to administer in these priority fields of health and welfare, thereby intensifying the present fiscal imbalance. A more equitable solution would consist of a straight fiscal transfer of 20 points of personal income tax on an unconditional basis. Such a transfer would be a more realistic contribution to the costs of these programmes in Ontario.

While our need for more revenues is immediate, the recent federal budget precluded any tax-sharing considerations for the coming fiscal year of 1969-70. It did suggest that Ontario might place five additional points on the already outdated base for personal income tax but this cannot be considered as a redistribution of revenue sources. This redistribution is the essential requirement and Ontario is willing to consider any alternatives which might provide a better fiscal balance for the 1970s.

We might be prepared, for example, to leave the present income tax division where it is and share on a 50-50 basis with the federal government the future growth in income tax returns including the new social development tax. Any revenue-sharing proposal which would give the provinces elbow room to meet their jurisdictional responsibilities could be discussed. Still another possibility would be joint design of upcoming reforms in the shared-tax fields to provide revenue gains which can be allocated appropriately between the federal government and the provinces.

We offer these as suggestions because we are flexible about the means to be employed. But whatever the means, the end must be a better balance between the expenditure responsibilities and revenue capacity of each level of government.

If Ottawa's present attitude towards tax sharing does not change, then we in Ontario must chart an independent fiscal course. We do not accept Ottawa's branch plant role for the provinces, which would mean cutting back the level of our services and the range of our tax reforms. Rather, we are determined to meet our responsibilities in financing our priority government services and to press on with essential reforms.

More than that, we are prepared to establish our own income tax, if the future path of the existing system and its reform continues to be a one-way street. We find this option offers some distinct advantages to our province and our people, even though it might take two years to put an independent system into operation. With control over our own income tax base, class structure and rates, we can achieve our own financial, fiscal policy and tax reform objectives. Moreover, we can then move toward direct integration of property, retail sales and income taxes to improve redistribution and provide greater property tax relief.

Ontario is aware that there are problems associated with such a step, problems that will not be ours alone. That is why we have expressed repeatedly to the federal government our concern and reluctance at being pushed in this direction. Now, however, no other responsible course appears to be open to us unless there is significant progress towards solving the tax-sharing problem at this conference.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways has a statement.

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an announcement that will be of particular interest to the members of the House representing northwestern Ontario. This concerns a change in the organizational structure of The Department of Highways that I am sure will improve the department's operations to meet the growing demands of the services required for this part of our province.

The organization of the department in northwestern Ontario has in the past consisted of four districts of Kenora, Fort William, Port Arthur, Sault Ste. Marie and Cochrane, operating under a regional establishment made up of managers who reported to their appropriate branches at head office in Toronto. With the increasing commitments being undertaken by the department to improve and expand the highway network over this broad 182,000 square mile area, and the increasing involvement of the department in assisting municipalities to improve their local roads systems, there has developed the need for more direct control and co-ordination in order to maintain the efficient operation of the department's total function within the region.

To accomplish this, it has been decided to create the position of northwestern Ontario regional director which will carry with it a broad latitude of authority to direct and co-ordinate all the department's activities throughout these four districts, and deal with local situations on a direct basis. The regional director will be responsible directly to the Deputy Minister, and in effect will be the deputy Minister's representative for the region.

Under his direction it will be possible to achieve greater utilization of the department's manpower forces and equipment within the region, through flexible deployment of our resources to meet the region's growing requirements. He will be the senior contact for municipalities on all matters affecting roads planning, programming and financing. With the wide latitude of authority invested in him, and the advantage of an intimate knowledge of conditions and requirements of the area, he will be able to make decisions that will more effectively cope with regional needs and result in a higher level of service.

He will be invested with the authority to liaise and co-operate with other government departments in the region on matters requiring interdepartmental action. The regional director will be based at the department's regional office in the Lakehead and his duties will require him to travel extensively throughout the region. It is anticipated that I shall be able to announce an appointment to this post in the early part of the new year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has a statement.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): The hon. leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: What, no statement?

Mr. Speaker: No statement.

Mr. Nixon: My questions, sir, are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) who is not here, and the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. What plans is Ontario Hydro implementing to reach a settlement with its employees to avert a possible strike in January? And secondly: Does Hydro believe that the system can continue to operate if a rotational strike is called by the employees?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker I will have to take the hon. member's question as notice. I will try and have an answer for him tomorrow morning.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has the floor. The hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. De Monte) will please remember that it is always the hon. leader of the Opposition and then the member for York South, that have priority in question hour.

Mr. MacDonald: I have two questions for the Minister of Health: How many of the 97 per cent of the population, whom the government claims have medical insurance, are covered for home and office calls of physicians?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give this information because it will require a great deal of research and I am not even certain that I can get the information in time for the session tomorrow morning, but I will try.

Mr. MacDonald: To the Minister of Health also: When will the Minister issue a report on the operations of OMSIP showing for the past fiscal year the premium income, subsidies, persons covered, payments and administrative costs?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Since OMSIP is a part of the department, ordinarily the report will appear in the annual statement of the department. However, in view of the interest, I am trying to get a report separately prepared for OMSIP operations and will have it as early as possible.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

1. Is the Minister aware of the practice of slum landlords of collecting Hydro bills through rental, and then failing to pay the bills, as complained about by Toronto Hydro?

2. Can action be taken immediately to correct this fraudulent practice?

3. Will the Minister consider inclusion of protective clauses against this practice in any new legislation to protect tenants?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker in answer to the first part of the question I personally am not aware of that situation but I am endeavouring to inform myself.

Mr. MacDonald: It was in the Globe and Mail on December 13.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I will endeavour to inform myself about the facts.

In answer to parts two and three; of course, this matter will be taken under advisement.

Mr. MacDonald: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education.

Are local committees of the Ontario Insurance Agents Association generally being given the responsibility for reviewing insurance coverage under the new county boards?

Second, is new coverage being sought through public tender?

Third, where coverage is being arranged through a local committee of the insurance agents association are commissions being divided among all agents in the county whether or not they were involved in writing the newer insurance coverage?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the question of insurance of property is a matter that is left strictly with the locally elected school boards. It states in Section 34 subsection 6, of The Schools Administration Act: "every board shall make provision for insuring adequately, the school buildings and equipment"; there has been no change in this provision or this policy with respect to the new legislation.

The present boards are operating under this legislation and, of course, under the new legislation the new boards must assume the existing contracts. It is a matter between the local school boards and the companies as to what their future policies will be.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, may I ask by way of a supplementary question: Is there any obligation under the statutes or regulations or elsewhere for insurance coverage to be sought through public tender?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any obligation in the statutes to seek it through public tender. I believe it is the policy of most boards—not all boards—to do it in this fashion.

Mr. MacDonald: Not all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister table the telegram received from Norman Pike, safety director of the Labourers International Union Local 183, in connection with a case of disease in the building of the subway tunnels in the city of Toronto?

Does the Minister have legislation ready to change the law governing medical examinations for men who work under air pressure?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps at this moment, I might also ask the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) to place his question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) which is somewhat similar, and then the two Ministers can answer.

Mr. Shulman: I have one for the Minister of Health on this subject. May I place that first?

For the Minister of Health: Has the department received a recommendation from Dr. J. A. Gamarra of the Toronto East General Hospital, and passed on by The Department of Labour, that X-rays be required before men are allowed to work under air pressure?

What action is being taken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, in the case of the hon. member for High Park, I did not receive his two questions in time to do anything about them. I, therefore, shall take both of those as notice.

In reply to the question put by the hon. member for Dovercourt, when the telegram comes to me, I will have no objection to tabling it. I got it over the telephone. I have not got the telegram, in fact, yet. But in answer to the second part of the hon. member's question, The Department of Health does not administer this legislation. It lies within the purview of The Department of Labour and The Department of Health acts as consultant to The Department of Labour in matters pertaining to industrial health.

Mr. De Monte: Will the hon. Minister accept a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the research that has been done and the legislation that has been passed in the state of California in connection with medical examinations and other aspects of men working under pressure?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, no, I have little interest personally in industrial health and therefore do not follow it in the scientific journals. I have not seen this yet anyway. My staff, no doubt, have cognizance of it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. De Monte: I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister's department is contemplating looking at that research and legislation?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that my department are fully aware of this because this is part of the day-to-day responsibility. I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, apparently the Minister has taken my second question—

Mr. Speaker: You might place that question.

Mr. Shulman: To the Minister of Health: Since the cause of the Yorkville hepatitis epidemic has been established, what is the purpose of the further $18,000 expenditure announced in the Legislature yesterday?

Secondly, what is the name of the person who recommended that this study be made?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for High Park then place his question of the Minister of Labour, No. 443, which has to do with the same matter?

Mr. Shulman: Thank you. For the Minister of Labour: Has your department received a recommendation from the labourers' union that comprehensive medical examinations be required before men are allowed to work under air pressure?

Two, what action is being taken?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the hon. member's question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: This question is addressed to the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is "yes". Since these recommendations are such that we require professional advice, this was sought and the investigation is continuing.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes.

Mr. Shulman: When can we expect some results from the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Bales: As soon as the investigation is complete. We are anxious for it to be done as quickly as possible.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a point of order?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had a question of the Minister of Highways but the Minister was not here. Now it has been customary that the questions that would have been put to a Minister who is absent are usually put first the following day if the Minister is there.

The Minister was here today, Mr. Speaker. He made a statement to this House, and I want to go on record that I object to him flitting out of the House to avoid answering my question. This is a failure of this system where a government Minister can just pack up and leave to avoid answering questions. I say it is an affront to the Opposition when the government acts like that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: He is a coward.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight) has questions of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mr. Ben: The House leader should bring him back in here to answer the questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: A few of your members walk out.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have two questions.

The first question is for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: Is the consumer protection division of the department investigating the labelling and safety of fibre glass curtains to protect the consumer, in view of recent complaints in connection with fibre glass curtains which appeared in yesterday's Toronto Daily Star?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is "yes".

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld). It is in three parts.

First, has the Minister's department been able to determine whether the Lakehead lies at the exact east-west halfway point of the Trans Canada highway? There is a typographical error in that question, it says 'highway' and it should be 'halfway mark'; I presume the Minister understood that.

Mr. Speaker: And the question did not include the word "exact".

Mr. Knight: That is right.

The second question—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, may I ask you, sir, with the greatest respect, what is the urgency behind that question?

Mr. Speaker: This may be a very urgent matter for the people of the constituency of the hon. member asking the question.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed at the Minister's reaction. May I go on with the second question?

What special plans does the Minister's department have to aid the Lakehead area to derive the fullest tourist promotion value when it becomes a city of 120,000?

Third, will the department give the Lakehead assistance in a nation-wide contest for the selection of a new name for the city?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has clarified the typographical error because I was a little puzzled about the question, the way I got it.

I would agree that if it is, in fact, the exact halfway point, it is not likely to change. But nobody has ever asked me this question before so I can only answer the hon. member that if, in fact, it is at the halfway point, and if he would like us to make some determination of this, we will try. I would suspect, though, that it is probably in the realm of some other department. But I just got these questions a few moments ago, so I really cannot answer this. The first time we have been asked to determine this is today.

The department has no specific plans to aid the Lakehead area to derive further tourist promotion benefit other than the plans which we presently have; the special plans of which the hon. member is aware and which we have for northwestern Ontario. I do not believe myself that the fact that Port Arthur and Fort William are going to join together and become one city—the Lakehead—would change our plans at all; we would continue to exert our efforts in this connection.

We would be delighted to, as we always are, to give any municipality or community any assistance we can in a national programme or any scheme that they might have for the promotion of their area. We would be delighted to give any assistance we can if we are asked to do it by the community.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, just a supplementary question to the Minister. I wonder if the Minister is aware that inquiries were made by the Lakehead chamber of commerce last year, of his department, with a view to determining once and for all whether the half-way point on the trans-Canada highway—the east-west half-way point—did not lie approximately at the Lakehead.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not recall this. I recall some matters about where the 49th parallel crossed and a few other things like that. I do not remember this specific question but I will certainly find out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has a question of the Minister of Education.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the action of the St. Catharines board of education in setting up a special committee of two school board members, five doctors and the co-ordinator of physical education, would the Minister consider setting up a province-wide committee of physical education teachers, doctors and other necessary personnel to look into the problem of athletic injuries in the secondary schools with a view to setting up standards for equipment, minimum standards of physical education, and so forth, and so forth, in order to reduce the number of injuries in high school athletics?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be very tempted to ask really what one means by and so forth, and so forth, and so forth.

Mr. B. Newman: The whole aspect of athletic injuries, and so forth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was just very curious.

Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member having an interest in this field, is well aware of the programmes the department has issued in consultation with the Ontario Federation of School Athletic Associations. They have established guidelines of desirable practices in developing inter-school athletic programmes.

The standards for equipment, for instance—for coaching and for the playing conditions under which competition is provided—these are established to meet the needs of the students in particular sports which are played in any school in relation to the local conditions.

Also within the department the programme consultants in physical education for the department throughout the province provide continuous resource to such local committees, which are established by the teachers and medical profession, and other personnel.

The studies which have been made by the joint committee of the Canadian Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation, and the Canadian Medical Association, with respect to the most effective protective equipment and to the necessary physical conditioning for inter-scholastic competitors, are also available to the schools as they formulate the safest playing conditions for their students.

In March of 1967, Mr. Speaker, a memo was sent out to the schools—not relating to this entire question, but to a portion of it—with respect to the maintenance of general equipment to provide for safety features, and so on, and so on.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Minister a supplementary question? Mr. Minister, are you aware that suspension type helmets are still being used in football? I should not say suspension—concussion type helmets, rather than suspension type?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not played the game for a while, so I am not as familiar with the terminology as I used to be. I remember the member for Scarborough East is perhaps a more recent competitor; I am not aware of just what type of helmet the schools are using at the particular moment.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I may explain to the Minister the difference between the two, then.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know the difference.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask then, is he aware that there were 367 athletic injuries in the St. Catharines high schools last year?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is not asking a supplementary question now.

Mr. B. Newman: I put a question mark at the end of it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a question supplementary to his original question. The hon. member for Scarborough East has several questions of the Minister.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education. Has the Ontario secondary school headmasters' council submitted a written brief to the Minister concerning the disadvantages and costs in the current school year of the Minister's decision to extend the final day of classes from June 3 to June 13?

If so, will the Minister make this brief available to the members of the standing committee on education of the Ontario Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with respect, there are two questions—really, I guess there are three—that relate to this subject.

I do not recall any such brief. We had a meeting with some members of the council yesterday and there was no written brief on that occasion. There have been discussions with the council over the past number of months on many subjects, and of course the question of the length of time of the school year was discussed.

I do not recall a written submission. There was not one yesterday.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary on that.

Was the problem relating to data processing and time needed for dummy runs of promotion results and the recording of the adjustments to marks and the promotion decisions discussed at the Minister's meeting with the representatives of the Ontario secondary school headmasters?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There was but a very brief reference to it yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: The second question on the same subject, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Minister agree with Mr. H. H. Mosey, chairman of the Ontario secondary school headmasters council and principal of Forest Hill collegiate institute, as reported on the front page of this morning's Globe and Mail? He said that Ontario schools will have to curtail final exams drastically in the current school year if the June 13 date recently established by the Minister is not changed, because exams could not start until Monday, June 16, and there would not be sufficient time between then and June 27 to mark the exams and hold promotion meetings?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question indirectly a day or so ago.

In the decision made with respect to the termination of the school year, consideration was given to the experience of last year when we went through the experimental period of ceasing on June 3, and indicated to the hon. members that in a sampling of schools across the province we found a number that had completed their work and some of them by June 16 or 17.

There is no question there are some, Mr. Mosey being one, who feel that there should be an extended period of time available for this. But there is no question that a number of schools did, in fact, complete it within this length of time.

Mr. T. Reid: Would the Minister change "some schools" to "most schools"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Change some to most? No.

Mr. T. Reid: Is the Minister aware that Mr. Mosey has said that the alternative—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is turning into a debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if I could put my question then you can decide whether it is a debate or a question.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You are turning it into a debate.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Mosey said "the only alternative solution is to lower significantly the percentage standings required for students to be recommended". We are skipping requirements, are we not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would like to think, after proper reflection, Mr. Mosey or any other principals would find there really are far more acceptable alternatives than that one.

Mr. T. Reid: A final question on this subject, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister accept the recommendation of the Ontario secondary school headmasters' council that he accept a compromise that the final day of classes be shifted from June 13 to June 9 in the current school year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I met with three members of the council yesterday. There has not been a specific recommendation from the headmasters' council at all, other than in discussions yesterday, and I am not in a position to give any indication of it.

Mr. T. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question on a different subject to the Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Whereas the report to the Metropolitan Toronto school trustees from the committee appointed to consider the establishment of French language classes or schools, under the chairmanship of Mr. C. T. Clifford, states: "With only 3.4 per cent of the population French speaking, committee members believe that segregating French language students into a separate school, as suggested by the Franco-Ontarian brief, would not prove to be the most effective way to carry out the current spirit of biculturalism.

"Should classes be requested under the legislation, it is the committee's opinion that these should be established in regular secondary schools so that each culture may benefit from the influence of the other. The sharing of facilities, laboratories, sports programmes, and so on, should make such schools remarkably interesting experiments in biculturalism."

Does the Minister believe that this key principle of this report is compatible with the principle he announced last year on behalf of the government concerning the "ideal" situation—that is, French language composite schools?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I do believe that I answered this question yesterday.

In spite of what one might observe from one of the editorials in one of Toronto's leading morning newspapers this morning, I believe that I made my position very clear. We felt the best way—and these conditions would vary throughout the province, because of geography, density of population, and whatever—the best approach we felt was the composite school approach. That is where the programmes would be for the French-speaking students, and it would be a completely French-speaking situation.

Let us be very frank, Mr. Speaker, there are two schools of thought, perhaps five or six, and with valid, shall we say, views supporting them. Some feel it is better to have some of the French-speaking students within the English milieu—if you could use this term. There are those who feel that, because the French students live in an English-speaking environment—basically—it is better in any event from an educational standpoint to have them congregated in a single school.

But I think, Mr. Speaker, that I made the position of the department in this regard clear yesterday—at least I thought I had—that this is the best approach although we are saying that it is not necessarily the only approach throughout this province. I think this, too, has to be stated.

I must also say that I did suggest to the hon. member that he would send me—and I am sure he is in the process of doing so—the report he referred to yesterday. I have not as yet received it so I cannot comment, which was the point I tried to make yesterday on the specific problems of the Metro board. I have had, Mr. Speaker, three or four other situations with which I have had to deal in the past few hours, so I have not been able to update myself specifically with the Metropolitan school board situation. However, I am somewhat familiar with it at the moment.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question, on a point of clarification. I will send my copy of this report to the Minister, if the Minister would send me copies of reports he received that I requested from him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member said he would yesterday, but I have already ordered another one.

Mr. T. Reid: The Minister needs a first-rate executive assistant—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let us get on with the business of the House, not this delaying stuff. That is an irrelevant question.

Mr. T. Reid: The French-speaking people in Metropolitan Toronto do not think that is an irrelevant question.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): My question is in three parts, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

First, was the agreement signed on December 17 between the municipality of Peel county and the OWRC necessary for the financing of the facilities by the provincial government?

Second, what are the reasons for the four-year delay in the signing of the agreement? Will user costs under the agreement be equal to present rates in the areas of the region presently being serviced?

Third, will the OWRC now move ahead with a total grid facility programme to supply services in all regions of the province at a set user rate cost compatible with present rates to the municipalities without the unnecessary delays of agreements?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, agreements are necessary to establish the basis for financing. Only the five municipalities in the southern part of Peel are involved in this agreement.

In answer to question two: The time involved between the initial meeting and the agreement signing was only three years and four months. This was a large and complicated undertaking. The engineering associated with the development of the project, the working out of financial proposals and the preparation of agreements all were time-consuming. In reaching agreements with five municipalities in a rapidly growing area such as this, inter-municipal competition was to be expected. This did affect the time taken to reach agreement.

With reference to user cost, the OWRC does not have this information since it sells water and sewage services on a wholesale basis to the municipalities which, in turn, set consumer rates.

In answer to part three, the objective of the OWRC is to provide water and sewage services to individual municipalities or on a regional basis in areas of need and when requested. There are many areas of the province where no shortage of water exists and therefore a grid system as such is not the most economical source of supply.

The commission at the present time does not contemplate the development of projects without appropriate agreements, and service rates will vary depending on the cost of the project.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent has a question of this Minister.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the question I have for the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management is this: Is the Minister planning an investigation into the death of 250 ducks that froze on the shores of Lake Ontario at Prince Edward county, unable to fly because the feathers were caked with oil, according to the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, a preliminary conclusion indicates that the death of the ducks was due to oil having been discharged from ships in the Great Lakes. While I am concerned about this kind of situation, I can only refer it to the federal government who has jurisdiction in the field of navigation.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is not correct.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I am therefore arranging to have a report sent to the federal Minister of Transport—

Mr. Bullbrook: That is not correct at all.

Hon. Mr. Simonett:—advising him of our findings and requesting his co-operation in dealing with the problem of oil discharges from commercial craft.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has questions of the Attorney General.

Mr. Shulman: Yes, sir. Does the Attorney General plan to appeal in the acquittal of Mr. Breckenridge by Judge Martin in the case which arose out of the Windfall collapse? Does the Attorney General intend to take any other action in that case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, an appeal was launched on November 7.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a further question of the Attorney General?

Mr. Shulman: No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Oh, I am sorry, that has been taken care of. The hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) has a question of the Attorney General.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the Attorney General advise when he will make available to the Legislature the report of the law reform commission concerning the law of the landlord and tenant?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, if I had not been so busily engaged, I might have had it in here today. I hope I might have it in here tomorrow morning.

Mr. Singer: Well, good for him.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think perhaps the Attorney General and I both overlooked the second question. Does the Attorney General intend to take—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The second question which I have—

Mr. Shulman: No, the second part of the first question. Sorry, sir. Does the Attorney General intend to take any other action in that case?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that an appeal was launched on November 7, as I stated, I would not contemplate any other action while the appeal is pending.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. Attorney General. Do the laws of the province of Ontario permit an individual to make an assignment of total debts of $2,990.67 and still be employed between the ages of 35 and 40 years on a regular salary basis in a manufacturing concern?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I do not quite understand the question. I am not sure whether the assignment of debts—as is stated in the question—of $2,990.67, relates to an assignment in bankruptcy or—

Mr. Spence: He made an assignment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: An assignment in bankruptcy?

Mr. Spence: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought it might apply to The Wage Assignments Act. Well, if I might answer then on that understanding; if the assignment in bankruptcy—there is a personal assignment in bankruptcy now under The Bankruptcy Act, which, incidentally, is a federal statute—but one may sign as a person for personal debts. If that person is discharged he would be freed of the debt in the process of going through the bankruptcy and getting the discharge. Possibly something might have been paid on those accounts or something might not, I do not know the facts.

If they have proceeded through those bankruptcy proceedings, they would not be prevented from going to work. That would certainly not be the intent of the Act that they should be prevented from going to work and earning a salary or wage in any sort of occupation. But if the hon. member would care to give me further details, I would be glad to discuss it with him in detail.

Mr. Spence: I thank the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a question of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of Senator David Croll's charge in the Senate of Canada that the Thomson press "is clearly out to smash the newspaper union and does not care how it accomplishes it" and there is little doubt that a legal charge of bargaining in bad faith against the Peterborough Examiner could be sustained, what action can the Minister take to bring management to the bargaining table and persuade them to bargain "in good faith"?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the difficulty in this dispute does not relate to the question of getting the parties to the bargaining table. Both have been willing to meet there and, in fact, they were three in The Department of Labour offices last Sunday for some hours. The problem is in finding a mutually acceptable basis on which the two parties can resolve their dispute.

If either party believes that the other is not bargaining in good faith and wishes to deal with the matter on a formal basis, there is always recourse for this purpose to the labour relations board, where the finding will be made judicially on the basis of the evidence.

My role, and that of the conciliation officials of my department, is to give all possible assistance toward mediation of this dispute. This we have been doing and will continue to do.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask a supplemental question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it should go to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

What I would like to know is, how did you get around this in regard to the Oshawa Times? It would seem to me that suddenly something happened there and . . . here you have this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. member is now talking about an entirely different matter and it cannot be supplementary to his question.

Mr. Pitman: It is related.

Mr. Speaker: It may be related but it is not supplementary and if he wishes to place another question tomorrow, he is quite at liberty to do so. The hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben) has a question from the other day of the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall).

Mr. Ben: I do?

Mr. Speaker: From December 11.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Up, George.

Mr. Ben: But he answered that question. What number is that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No. 326.

Mr. Ben: Oh, that one. Sorry, I have had so many questions of the Minister he has not been here to answer. On December 11, did you say, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The question—if the Minister and the member will both please listen, I will save us some time here—is dated December 11, 1968, for the Minister of Trade and Development from George Ben.

Is the Minister prepared to guarantee to the tenants who are purchasing Ontario Housing units the maintenance costs on such units for buildings and grounds for one-half the lifetime of the mortgage in view of the controversy surrounding the conditions of the facilities at Regent Park?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, that kind-souled fellow sitting over there answered that question in my absence. The answer can be found on page 580 of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Again?

Mr. Ben: I think it was the subject of a dispute between you and me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, there were two of them then. Well, that is fine. We have that one cleared away.

Mr. Ben: I think it could be found on that page, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Peacock) has one from December 10. Has it been asked and answered?

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister ought to reply to that question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should know whether it was asked or not. According to my records it has not been asked.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Well it just so happens, luckily I have that question with me, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Windsor West asked: Why are the local offices of the Ontario Housing Corporation informing OHC tenants that none qualify for the residential property tax rebate although no regulations under section 8 (1) of the Act have been approved or gazetted?

The answer is as follows: Local offices of Ontario Housing Corporation in municipalities outside Metropolitan Toronto, and local housing authorities, were advised that, in accordance with section 8 (1) of The Residential Property Reduction Act, certain tenants could well be eligible for the tax rebate.

Those eligible were defined as tenants who on an annual basis had paid a rental rate during 1968 which was at least equivalent to the rent which would be charged for comparable accommodation in the private sector.

I understand that the hon. member made an inquiry along these lines directly to the office of Ontario Housing Corporation some time ago and was given the same information. He was also informed that tenants in "full recovery" as distinct from "rent-to-income" developments would not qualify. This was also outlined in my reply to a similar question from the hon. member for Wentworth on December 3.

Mr. Peacock: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Was the Minister not aware that at the time of my enquiries of the Ontario Housing Corporation's head office in Toronto, the regulations under The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, section 8, had not been drawn?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. The regulations are being drawn but we know exactly what we are going to do about tenants who are being subsidized.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview had a question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have a ministerial statement.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could finish the questions. We have one to go for this Minister, placed by the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister advise:

1. If the new form of the Ontario Housing Corporation lease has been approved?
2. When he is going to make copies of it available to the members of the Legislature?
3. When the lease will start to be used for Ontario Housing Corporation tenants?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I received this question when I came in. I went out and got the information by telephone two seconds ago.

I am glad to bring the member up to date. The lease has been completed. A half dozen copies are on the way to my office. I will have them in the morning. I hope to present you, at least, sir, with one tomorrow and perhaps the other members at the first of the week and I might—

Mr. Bullbrook: Why should he get preference? Why should he get one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might suggest that this has been gone over by the Attorney General and ourselves and we think the lease is satisfactory. However, the law reform report on this has not been received and there may be some further changes.

Mr. Singer: It is going to be here tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are quite prepared to implement them, and while I am on my feet I wonder if you would send me over the new leases for Singer, Singer and Cork that I asked for last year. You know the new ones that you are going to draw up—

Mr. Singer: Only on payment of the usual fee.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I see.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier) asked me a question yesterday which I took as notice. The question from the hon. member was: "What is the reason for the inordinate delay in reaching a decision as to the eligibility of Stanley Kuzik, of 131 Fifth Avenue, Timmins, to continue to receive family benefits of a disabled person? When will a decision be reached?"

Mr. Speaker, I now have the details in connection with Mr. Kuzik's case but I am reluctant to go into this matter because our policy is to treat an applicant's file as confidential. The members of this House know that my department is quite willing to assist them with individual cases but it is usually done in such a way as to protect the privacy of a client.

I have no hesitation, however, in making the details of Mr. Kuzik's case available to the hon. member in the House but I wonder if it would be reasonable to publicly discuss the personal affairs of this family here. I am willing to give the information to the member in private if he so desires so that he may be fully informed. I shall be guided by the hon. member.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, all that I really wanted was a decision in the matter and I will be quite happy to get the information privately.

Mr. Speaker: Now the hon. Minister of Education.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question was asked by the member for Scarborough East yesterday. I do not have the phrasing of that question and in that he has flitted out of the House, perhaps the member for Humber might go find him because I would like to answer the question. But in view of the fact that it is not my policy to answer questions for members who have had to leave, I shall make this in the form of a ministerial statement because obviously, it must have been a matter of urgent public importance or Mr. Speaker, you would not have permitted the supplementary question.

There was a statement—

Mr. Nixon: What kind of preamble is that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There was a statement made yesterday raising the question of the payment of student grants. It is quite a serious question and this is why I wish to answer it.

Mr. Nixon: It was intended as a ministerial statement from the start.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, that is right, relating to the payment of student grants during the initial term as raised yesterday. At that time it was suggested that several students who were entitled to grants support during the first term had not yet received their cheques, and I intend to clarify this today.

For the vast majority of students, the loan portion is paid during the first term, the grant portion in the second. There is a variation as mentioned in the case of larger awards; and to quote the brochure, "If a grant portion is substantially larger than the loan portion the student may receive part of his grant in the first term".

To initiate any grant payment—and I underline this: any grant payment whether first or second term—the student is asked to follow a very simple procedure. When he is given his loan certificate he is also given a statement called declaration of other awards. It is a relatively simple form. It is required since the programme is based on need and, obviously, any assistance that the student may have received after the submission of his original application will affect the size of his total award.

On this form the following statements appear in large block letters. They are right there, Mr. Speaker, about one-quarter of the way down the form. "This form must be submitted to the student awards officer at the institution you are attending no later than October 1, 1968.

"If you receive your award statement after October 1, you should complete and submit this form immediately."

And directly below this, Mr. Speaker, and underlined to draw it to the student's attention is the following statement:

Important, this form must list any awards you have received other than from the Ontario Student Awards Programme, and must be completed and submitted before the grant portion of your Ontario student award may be requisitioned from The Department of University Affairs. Please note that the total amount of every award must be reported. Awards received from other sources will be counted.

In those cases, Mr. Speaker, where this request was met, cheques have been requisitioned and payment has been made.

When the form was not received, however, the department obviously could not proceed. It is in regard to the latter situation that some complaints are now being received.

The department, Mr. Speaker, is quite willing to assume its share of the responsibility in ensuring that payment is made to students as indicated. It is willing to acknowledge as well that in the early fall many awards officers are so busy with the many applications being submitted that they perhaps do not have the opportunity to remind students that their declaration statements are required.

On the other hand, there seems to be some reason to believe that young adult people have a responsibility to meet a relatively simple request if they are anxious to receive the assistance for which they have applied.

As a matter of information, about 1,100 students and not 10,000 as reported recently elsewhere, were entitled to first term grant cheques at the University of Toronto. About 300 of this number had in fact been issued. The remaining number had been requisitioned as the necessary forms have been received. And the department, Mr. Speaker, will issue them as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has returned, perhaps the hon. leader of the Opposition cares to place his questions.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two questions. The first one is: Will the government support private legislation to be requested by the City of Toronto to abolish the Board of Control?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know from past reports that the City of Toronto council took certain action yesterday and that these resolutions undoubtedly will be on the way to us and to the government, and when they are received they will be considered.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you. A second one: Does the Minister plan to meet with Metro chairman William Allen to settle the planning jurisdiction of Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, when you made the statement on December 2, I indicated that I expected to enter into discussion with Metropolitan Toronto on these matters within the next two months. See page 280 of Hansard. As a matter of fact, on Tuesday of this week, I wrote the Chairman of the Metropolitan Planning Board, Mr. Grant Messer and suggested an early meeting with the Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board. At the same time I sent a copy of that letter to Chairman Allen and suggested an early meeting with the Metropolitan Toronto Executive Committee.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if the Minister would tell me if he feels that the Metro chairman misunderstands his previous statements in this regard, or if there is a real area of difference in opinion.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I think there might be a combination of those two factors.

Mr. Nixon: I am glad you came back.

Mr. Bullbrook: Before the orders of the day, I wonder if the Attorney General would have a reply to my question of yesterday in connection with the Legal Aid Plan?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, not yet, Mr. Speaker. I hope to have it tomorrow.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The third order; committee of the whole House; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE EXPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1968-1969

House in committee on Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

On section 1:

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, in connection with section 1 particularly, I wonder if the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) and yourself, sir, would consider that we go through section 1 a sub-section at a time. It is the definition section, and I feel it would be easier rather than digesting my comments now, on for example, injurious affection. Would you give me your thoughts on that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Well, Mr. Chairman, yes, this is the way we actually did it in the legal bills committee. I would say that perhaps it is a better procedure, but I would like to point out that we considered every one of these definitions in section 1 most thoroughly in legal bills committee.

Mr. Bullbrook: It goes without saying, Mr. Chairman, that one of the preliminary remarks I was going to make is on the very effective presentation made by the Attorney General and by his deputy to us. I think a really effective effort was made by all members of that committee. I have heard the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) in this House, Mr. Chairman, say many times that we need a stronger form of committee and this is a great example of the fact that when committee work is properly done, it can be very effective. I think it is going to cut down the time of this House.

Mr. Chairman: I would say that it is quite agreeable to the Chairman, and I will therefore deal with section 1, of the Act, sub-section 1, paragraph (a).

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, may I seek the indulgence of the chair just for a second? I will not take much time. I want to make a small preliminary statement to the effect that I want to commend the Attorney General on this bill. I will have very few amendments to move, three or four at the very most.

Some of them have been discussed, but the reason we did get up around 30 amendments between the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) and myself, and the reason we are not going to be fighting this bill to any great extent this afternoon—I hope it would go through very expeditiously—is precisely because of what I have requested during the debate on the second reading, namely, the magnanimity of the Attorney General. That magnanimity has been shown in large measure in this bill as it stands before us today. In my opinion, it is an example of co-operative democracy.

We had nine solid hours in committee hitting away at this bill. After the second meeting, I was ready to throw in the sponge because there was great recalcitrance. The Attorney General did not seem to be very amendable to most of the things we wanted. There is no point in my opinion being there, if we are not going to be listened to. The following night, inebriated with the Christmas spirit, the Attorney General accepted practically everything we had submitted.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the hon. member said that it was with Christmas spirit that I was inebriated and I am not sure that is properly interpreted.

Mr. Chairman: All right, we now get on with the bill.

Paragraph (a) of sub-section 1, carried; (b), carried.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I am a little concerned in connection with (c)—By way of dialogue with the hon. the Attorney General.

The word expropriation is not defined, and there was a witness before us who was concerned in connection with the definition of expropriation. We have left the word expropriation in section 46, I believe it is.

I wonder if really we should not consider the possibility that we might define expropriation also expropriate. Expropriation shall mean the taking of land.

I do not really propose to make an amendment in this connection, but it is the only place in the whole statute that I think the word expropriation is used.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think when you define a word which may have an ending—taking expropriate and translating it into expropriation—rules of interpretation would carry on the definition. When you say “expropriate” it means the taking of land, other than with the consent of the party, or without the consent of the owner, by an expropriating authority. I think you can without difficulty move to the meaning of expropriation.

I would not feel that it is necessary to add, after expropriate, “or expropriation,” because I think a clear interpretation is that you take from the word defined in a variation in its definitive variation.

Mr. Bullbrook: I will accept that, but really, to be grammatically correct, I think expropriate means to take land. Expropriation means the taking of land.

Mr. Chairman: Paragraph (c) carried.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman I have another point that I wanted to make. The Attorney General did tell us in committee that there would be a companion amendment to The Municipal Act and that obviated our further discussions of an amendment I had suggested to the committee at that time.

Just for the purpose of this record, I would like the Attorney General to give us that assurance, because with that assurance I would be quite satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, as I recall the discussion in the legal bills committee, I think it arose in connection with that deferred widening of highways by municipalities. I did inform the members of this committee that we had discussed this with The Department of Municipal Affairs. My understanding is that they will be moving to amendments in The Municipal Act to meet that situation which is later referred to in this Act. Now, the particular subsection we are discussing—expropriating authority—is wide enough in its definition, I suggest, to cover the statutory authority which the municipalities have to expropriate. My assurance, which I reiterate, was that amendments are being looked at and I have a fairly firm undertaking that amendments will be made in The Municipal Act.

Mr. Chairman: Paragraph (c) carried. Paragraph (d) carried. Paragraph (e). The hon. member for Sarnia would like to speak.

Mr. Bullbrook: I yield in this.

Mr. Singer: No, go ahead.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, in connection with paragraph (e). The concern that we still express from this side of the House relates to the wording at the beginning of page 2. So, (e) 2:

Where the statutory authority does not acquire part of the land of an owner (a) such reduction is the market value of the land of the owner, and (b) such personal and business damages resulting from the construction and not—and I direct the attention of yourself, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. Attorney General to the word “not” and not the use of the works by the statutory authority as the statutory authority would be liable for if the construction were not under the authority of the statute.

Now the reason given by the Ontario Law Reform Commission in making this recommendation is that if all owners were entitled to claim for injurious affection, both as to construction and use, the costs of expropriation may be prohibitive or at least unestimable at the time of expropriation. It is suggested that the distinction is based on whether or not the land is taken as tenuous.

An owner who suffers damage which bears a reasonable connection to the expropriation should be compensated for the damages suffered. The discussion, as I recall it in the committee, was basically that there was a remedy in common law for nuisance. We are not content with that at all because we feel—and we use the example of a 12 or 14-lane highway going through a municipality—that could never be construed by a court as a nuisance within the law, so there is no remedy available. We do feel that not only should there be damages referable to the construction but, also, the use to cover these situations.

I therefore move, sir, that the word “not” be stricken from this section, the sixth line on page 2 after the word “and”.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, we did discuss this at some length in committee.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please, perhaps the hon. member would wait until we get the written motion, so the chair has it exactly in front of him.

Mr. Bullbrook: I apologize for the delay, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Bullbrook that we delete from section 1, subsection 1, paragraph (e), subsection (ii) the word “not”, in the sixth line on page 2. The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned, we thrashed this out for quite a while in committee, and the rationale behind the position that I, at least, am going to take in being opposed to this amendment was brought forward. The Liberal Party moved this particular amendment because of the peculiar weltanschauung under which they operate. There is apparently only one degree or dimension of rights, that is private property rights, and I have been trying to instruct the member for Downsview that a wider concept of community might be of some value to him in reaching some decisions on the law of expropriations.

Mr. Bullbrook: We promised we would stick to the point.

Mr. Lawlor: It could not be more to the point.

Mr. Singer: We can set aside an hour.

Mr. Lawlor: If the hon. member cannot follow it, that is one of the problems. The Law Reform Commission says on this point:

In practice, however, the commission feels that the cost of imposing such a liability is such an unknown and might be so great that the burden on the public purse would be unacceptable.

And I think the Attorney General very often during our discussions was perfectly right in terms of good conservative philosophy, to defend the public purse and defend the public weal against all these rights of the individual which seem to be absolutely paramount in the minds of some over there. It goes on:

In addition, it might prevent the carrying out of numbers of projects which are essential from the community point of view.

And that is my point of view.

For example, the use of a newly completed ten-lane highway in Metropolitan Toronto might cause damage in varying degrees to lands not only immediately adjacent to the highway but those 100 yards away, a quarter of a mile, or even at a further distance. When one considers a wide swath of potential claimants along both sides of the highway for so long as the highway is used, it is clear the potential liability could be great. I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting to hear the hon. member for Lakeshore go on in this vein and give us a minor lecture on socialism and to indicate what his philosophy is—I do not know whether it is the philosophy of his party as well—that the state has a right to interfere unduly and unfairly with private individual rights.

I am sorry his colleague from Yorkview (Mr. Young) is not here because his colleague from Yorkview joined with the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton) and myself in urging as strongly as the three of us could, that there be some help to those people whose properties and enjoyment of their properties were injured when Highway 401—within the boundaries of those two ridings—was widened from six lanes to 14. And the hon. member for Yorkview was very definite in the representations that he made because he agreed at that time that it really was unfair that individuals should be forced to suffer for the general good of the whole community and not be compensated for it.

The hon. member for Lakeshore drags the usual red herring across the trail when he says: Because it may be difficult to estimate, then we should not even try at all. But this whole theory, Mr. Chairman, the whole theory of compensation as set out in this Act is to allow a fairer method of estimating damages, whether it is damage for a complete taking or whether it is damage for injurious affection of the kind which is described in this Act—or damage for injurious affection of the kind that we feel should be described in this Act.

And it would seem to me that if a person in the position as described by my colleague from Sarnia can establish to the satisfaction of a tribunal that the value of his house has been decreased by a few thousand dollars because instead of having a six-lane highway run beside him, he now has a 14-lane highway running beside him, that is a very substantial bit of damage and he should be entitled to that compensation. It is no excuse, Mr. Chairman, to say that this is difficult to ascertain. It would seem to me that the members of the socialist party—who so often pride themselves on their concern about an individual—should be amongst the foremost advocates supporting an amendment of this kind, rather than having a Marxian socialist theory spouted to us as was done this afternoon.

I would urge, Mr. Chairman, on the members of the House, that we make this reasonable expansion to the definition of injurious affection.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. Minister care to comment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lakeshore, I think, put forward the answers I would give, in a very succinct and very effective way.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, thought they were succinct.

Mr. Singer: You accept his Marxist philosophy too?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To a degree, I think we legislate social reforms over here.

Mr. Lawlor: The hon. member does not know what Marxism is.

Mr. MacDonald: He complains about other people's smears.

Mr. Singer: But the member for Lakeshore welcomes that.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we should allow this debate to continue first and then I can answer later.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Do we have to through it all now, Mr. Chairman? This was debated at length in committee.

Mr. Singer: Of course we do, that is what we are here for.

Mr. Bullbrook: The committee cannot pass legislation, this is where we pass it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General is attempting to reply to the motion put before the House. The hon. Attorney General has the floor. Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, on this point that was raised: I think it is certainly in order that members—whether they were on the committee, or other members in the House who did not have the benefit of our discussion in committee—should say what they think and give us the benefit of their thinking.

However, as I say, the member for Lakeshore, I think, answered this very fully. He used the words I would have used when he quoted the recommendation and the reasoning of the Law Reform Commission which is found at page 49 in the Law Reform Commission Report.

This is the situation where no property is taken. If property is taken, the principle of injurious affection does take into account the use of any construction which may be placed upon that property taken, or where part of the property is taken.

Where no property is taken then someone on the outside, close or far away—and how far away is a great question—but close or far away—and this is one of the difficulties. The principle has been established down through the years in the cases that you could not—should not—take into account the damages of injurious affection from the use of something constructed on someone else's property taken by an expropriating authority.

Mainly the reason would be that the expropriating authority might very well have come along and bought A's property, and constructed on it some work, the use of which would affect lands lying near and far. If that use is such that it gives a right of common law, that right still exists.

But, if you were to for a moment contemplate, or write into the legislation, damages for injurious affection for the use—not just for their construction, but to extend it to the use—on properties which are not taken by the expropriating authorities, you would be in such a hazy, doubtful area that you could not for a moment contemplate what consequences would follow. Particularly in cost to the public purse—to the expropriating authority and to the public—in making payment for injurious affection resulting from that use.

Therefore, the law reform commission which dealt with this subject, Mr. Chairman, in its report, commencing at page 43, under the heading of chapter 5, "Damages for Injurious Affection"—and it discussed it at great length—came at length, on page 49, at the foot of that page, with a recommendation which I should like to read. The commission recommends that:

In cases where there is no taking, expropriating authorities remain liable for damages caused by the construction of the work and remain exempt from liability where damage is caused by the use of the work.

And the reason they made that recommendation—it is very thorough. I would just like to say that I think hon. members should perhaps bear in mind I do not agree with every recommendation in its entirety that was put forward by the law reform commission. But on that commission you have as chairman a very eminent academic person, former dean of the law school, in Mr. Allan Leal. You have a most eminent person who was a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario in the person of Mr. Justice McRuer. Then you have three pretty hard-headed lawyers—if I may use that expression—in the persons of Richard Bell, Gibson Gray and William Kool.

When they came to this conclusion I think they did a great deal of our thinking. They did a great deal of study, and when they make this recommendation I am certainly constrained to follow it. To that I might add that I have been looking particularly at the authorities on this subject, which are found in the well known work, a leading work on the subject of expropriation, the book called "The Law of Expropriation", by Challies, who is a judge of the Supreme Court of Quebec, I believe; a Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec.

He comes, after a very thorough discussion on the whole matter of expropriation, and deals at considerable length with a chapter on the matter of injurious affection. He comes to exactly the same conclusion, citing the cases and the reasons which are adopted and followed by the law reform commission, and generally by the courts, because these principles are taken from the court decisions down through the years.

Many of these cases are very recent. They are not ancient law. They are modern up-to-date law, so I would have to reject the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, just briefly on this.

What the Attorney General refers to in Challies' book, I know, is a very good summary of the common law, but our concern is that this statute is rewriting both the common law and the statute law. The reason for this amendment is that we feel that the common law is not adequate in this instance. That is the purpose of my colleague's amendment.

We believe that serious injury can happen to individuals who are going to be affected by the use of expropriated property and we think it is only reasonable and clear that they be provided some method of obtaining compensation for it.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Bullbrook's motion will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

I declare the motion lost and section (e) carried.

Mr. Singer: No. Before it is carried, before this section is finished, there is another point I wanted to deal with on this section.

Mr. Chairman: The vote has been taken on paragraph (e), subsection 1, of section 1.

Mr. Singer: Well no—just on that specific amendment. Surely if there is another phase and another kind of change that can be made to that section, that principle surely—

Mr. Chairman: Not when the vote has been taken. I am afraid that that is out of order in accordance with the procedure of this House.

Mr. Singer: Well, it makes it very difficult, Mr. Chairman—if we could discuss that on a point of order just for a moment. It makes it very difficult, because a number of these sections and subsections have two or three or four principles in them.

My colleague's amendment dealt with one particular one. I would hope to be able to deal with another one. If we are going to apply the kind of ruling you have just made, we are, perhaps, going to have four or five kinds of discussions on the same subsection at the same time, which does not make for a reasonable or an orderly debate.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): On each word.

Mr. Singer: Not necessarily on each word, but there is another principle that I wanted to discuss in this subsection. I agree with you it would be pointless to further discuss the principle put forward by my colleague, but there is another principle that I want to discuss in this. If we are going to rigidly apply the rule in the manner you have just suggested, then the only alternative is each time we have two or three principles emerging from either a section or a subsection, then we are going to have to put them all at the same time and debate them all at the same time.

Mr. Chairman: It seems to the chairman that the procedures in the past have been that where a subsection of the bill is fairly debated by a motion of a member and that motion is defeated, there will be no further debate on that subsection.

If we are going to change the rules and permit any number of amendments to be introduced by motion in connection with any section, I wonder where we are going to draw the line.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if I might just carry on for a moment. If you take a look at subsection (e) as it is presently printed, it runs through a part 1, which has (a) and (b) parts to it; a part 2 which has (a) and (b) parts to it; a qualifying paragraph at the end of that, and a further qualifying paragraph.

Surely it is not sensible—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Your amendment was to the end of that paragraph.

Mr. Singer: No, my colleague's amendment was line 6 on page 2, which does not bring us down to the concluding portion of it.

Mr. Chairman: May I say that I think the hon. member for Downsview is quite right, that the motion itself deals with section (i) (i), which is the last one. If the motion that he now wishes to introduce deals with paragraphs (a) or (b) of subsection i of paragraph (e) then the motion would be in order.

Mr. Singer: Well, my motion is this: that we add to section 11(e) a further subsection (iii), which would read this way.

Where the statutory authority does not acquire part of the land of the owner, such personal and business damages resulting from the threat to expropriate and incomplete expropriation or an abandoned expropriation and shall include reasonable costs of legal or other professional changes incurred by the owner because of such actions or any of them taken by the expropriating authority.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: He is widening the definition.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in moving this amendment is this. I think that this statute has to contain, somewhere in the definition section and perhaps later on, some method of applying strictures, sanctions and penalties to expropriating authorities who act in a dilatory fashion without having completed or taken enough action to come within the provisions of this Act.

Now there is one case I have in mind. I discussed it briefly with the Attorney General and I am not going to elaborate on it today. The essence of it is this: An expropriating authority for two and a half years has been threatening to expropriate but has never completed the actual passing of a by-law in proper form.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: What is the name of that creek?

Mr. Singer: Junction Creek—Junction Creek conservation authority which is headed by the former federal Tory candidate, the chief Tory in Sudbury.

They have run advertisements in the paper, there has been a hearing before the county court judge; there have been engineers' reports; there has been the exchange of correspondence; there have been unofficial offers and so on, and on, and on. Two and a half years have gone by and they have never completed a by-law under which the owners of the land will have certain rights in regard to it. They disturbed him and put him through substantial expense for a period of two and a half years; legal costs, engineers' costs, evaluators' costs and so on.

Under the law, as I understand it at the moment, the owner is just out of luck because the authority has never moved to the point of passing a by-law under which the owner would have some rights, in this statute and under the law as it exists before this statute in fact becomes law.

It would seem to me that where an authority has acted in this way and has disturbed the owner, perhaps affected the value of his property, the owner should have some kind of a remedy against that authority; at least, to the point of being able to recover some reasonable amount on account of the expenses that he has incurred to protect his rights.

That is the purpose of this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I think it makes good sense and it would set down, in black and white, the fact that this Legislature is not going to sit idly by and let the authorities unduly and unfairly interfere with the rights of an individual.

I would think something has to be done about this, Mr. Chairman, and this, I believe, is one of the serious lacks in this statute. I think there has to be some provision for penalizing authorities and compensating an owner who has been hurt by this kind of action.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I remember there was some discussion in committee but I do not think the hon. member presented this amendment in committee.

Mr. Singer: Yes I did.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did he? Well anyway then the next thing I would say is that if he did, the committee refused it. And I would like to make this point because I know that the hon. member is intensely concerned and that he had the experience of this famous Junction Creek case but what I would point out there is—

Mr. Singer: Continuing experience.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: A continuing experience which I am sure the hon. member would be the better for.

Mr. Singer: My clients are poorer—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And you will be richer. But the point is that what the expropriating authority of which he is speaking did there, they did nothing as I can understand, nothing that had any legal import or significance. Apparently they put some advertisement in the paper which was certainly not condoned or authorized by The Expropriation Procedures Act, which we now have.

Mr. Singer: They drew up plans—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would think that nobody—

Mr. Singer: Went to the county court judge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In short nobody needed to pay the slightest attention to it, not the slightest attention to it.

Mr. Singer: We had to go to the county court judge.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps the hon. member felt they had to, but because somebody publishes a notice in the paper which has no legal authority, has no legal—

Mr. Singer: That was only the first step.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right.

Mr. Singer: They carried on.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right. Once they take proceedings by way of expropriation under either our present law or under this law, which we hope to bring into effect, then they have to proceed according to the law and then I think the rules are laid down.

But what the hon. member's amendment suggests, Mr. Chairman, and I think this is the significant thing, "where lands", he says, "are not taken, then there must be responsibility on the expropriating authority to pay for damages that may result."

If it is just from the intention—now again the answers follow in refutation and dejection of that amendment—it would go so far, so wide, so far reaching, into such a confused and doubtful area, particularly in terms of cost that one could never know where the effect ends or begins.

I think we did consider this in committee, but no one that I can find, in any of the authorities, has ever contemplated such a wide-ranging assumption of responsibility upon an expropriating authority.

I would ask the House to vote against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Singer's motion will please say "aye"; those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it. I declare the motion lost.

Paragraph (e) of subsection 1 of section 1 is carried.

Paragraphs (f) to (n) inclusive, agreed to.

Subsection 2 of section 1 agreed to.

Sections 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: On section 5, the hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, section 5(1)(a) and section 5(1)(b) I have amendments and perhaps, Mr. Chairman, since they are similar in principle I could present them both at the same time and debate them both at the same time. Is that suitable?

Now these two sections provide that the approving authority in the case of a municipal expropriation shall be the municipality; that it is in section 1, and in the case of the board of education, the approving authority shall be the board of education.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very bad concept to include in this kind of a statute.

What is going to happen? Certainly my experience on a municipal council indicates, and as I have watched boards of education it indicates too, that when a municipality or board of education decides to carry on an expropriation it comes to that conclusion after a very careful discussion and after examining reports that it has received from its officials. And often after considerable difference of opinion amongst its members, often after considerable newspaper discussion and so on, and usually, if there is any concern at all about the wisdom of a particular expropriation being effected by a council, the matter has become something of quite some public stature before the decision is finally made.

Now, presuming all this has gone on then the theme of this Act is that an inquiry will take place. The municipality or the board of education has had its discussion and then a public inquiry takes place and the inquiry officer reports back to the same body that has made its original decision.

Whatever the inquiry turns up, the inquiring officer reports back to the people who made the first decision and says to them in effect. "Do you approve of what you have already done before?"

The appeal is from Caesar to Caesar, the same body is sitting in judgment on what it has already done. Now, in those two cases, the Act is different from all of the other cases. In all of the other cases there are Cabinet Ministers who make those decisions, by and large, who are removed from the original decision-making process.

The Minister of Energy and Resources, for instance, who is called upon to approve an expropriation made or recommended by the water resources commission, has not sat with the water resources commission or been a part of their deliberations. It comes to him after a decision has been made by the water resources commission, there is an inquiry, he looks at the decision; he looks at the results of the inquiry and then he says in his wisdom or in his lack of it, "I approve" or "I do not approve", but he has all the information before him and he approaches the matter from a different point of view than if he had originally been involved in the decision-making process.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that to carry this commendable idea through, the theme of this statute is that we cannot have a board of education approving of its own decision to expropriate, or the municipal council approving of its own decision to expropriate.

The public inquiry, to my mind, is by and large going to be a waste of time and one of the concerns that we in this House have—and which we have expressed down through the years—is that there often is or can be an arbitrary use of the power to expropriate. Now, if the municipal council is arbitrary or the board of education is arbitrary, and you—

Mr. Kerr: Throw them out of office.

Mr. Singer: All right. Then hon. member for Halton West suggests they are elected and they can be put out of office. This is true and it is a delayed remedy and if the voters carry their memories long enough they may do that.

But the purpose, surely the theme of this whole Act is that there be an inquiry in order to let someone have another look at it, except in this large, large group, two large groups, the boards of education and the municipal councils.

It would seem to me that the fair way to have this done is in the case of the municip-pal councils that the Minister of Municipal Affairs approve these expropriations after the inquiry. The original decision then would be made by the municipal council, there would be the inquiry, the decision of the municipal council together with the report of the inquiry officer would go to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and he could make his decision for which he would be answerable in this House. The same way with the Minister of Education, he would have that power insofar as boards of education are concerned. In that way, Mr. Chairman, you would insure that there be an impartial second look at the wisdom of the expropriation.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I move that there be deleted from section 5(1)(a) the words in the fourth line thereof "the council of the municipality" and there be inserted in lieu thereof the words "the Minister of Municipal Affairs".

In addition, I move that there be deleted from section 5(1)(b) the words in the second line thereof "school board" and inserting the words "the Minister of Education".

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. Minister wish to comment on this motion?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, we debated this at some length, at quite some length, on second reading of this bill. We debated it in committee and I think the hon. member for Downsview offered this same amendment there, and he was supported by some other members of the legal bills committee. We had a very full discussion there and we could not, the committee could not, see its way clear to support these proposed amendments which are the same now offered here.

Mr. McRuer, in his report on this subject of expropriation, at the foot of page 1084 said in his recommendations, Expropriations by school board should be subject to the approval of the Minister of Education.

It is true he did say that. He said:

Expropriations by the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto should be approved by that body in the same manner as expropriations by other municipalities, and not by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

He was at pains everywhere in his report to say that municipalities should be their own approving authority. I would point out that when he spoke of boards of education prior to the recommendation, he was generally speaking of appointed boards of education, a situation which has been largely remedied by our legislation where school boards will now be practically all elected bodies.

The reasoning, therefore, which he used and which I adopt, which I support, not just because he said it, is the principle that an elected body should be accountable for the expropriation and as one of the steps of an expropriation the approving of the taking of the land. That is why the Minister of Energy and Resources Management should approve for something being done by the Water Resources Commission. That is not an elected body.

That is why the Minister of Education should be the approving authority for a university because the people who govern the university are not elected, they are appointed. That is why the Minister of Health should be responsible and the approving authority for hospitals, that is why the Attorney General should be responsible, if it is in his area, and he is taking property for a courthouse, or some area in the administration of justice.

That is why the Minister of Public Works, who has some large area of responsibility of acquiring property for government purposes, should be the approving authority, because he must stand up and account in this House to the elected representatives of this province for his action, and that is why the municipality which is at the local level, elected persons, is named the approving authority in this bill. And that is why the board of education, which is an elected body at the local level, is named in this bill as the approving authority.

Now, there is another reason, I think, and that is that when you think there are approximately 1,000 municipalities in this province, all of them from time to time carrying on small or large expropriations, generally small expropriations, to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to review those expropriations when the people have a right to come to the council, they have a right to an inquiry, to make their cases known and to make their objections known as to whether this is reasonable, necessary and just.

Why then, remove from the local level the autonomy which is so well, I think, carried on there by their local representative, bring it up to the Minister, who I think would find it impossible to review these cases and would accept the advice of the people in his department who study it. I am sure you would hear a tremendous chorus of discontent and grievance go up that the bureaucrats in Toronto have again removed from the people their right to handle their own affairs.

I think it is a sound and proper principle which Mr. McRuer has placed in his recommendation, that the municipal council should be the approving authority. True, the appeal is, if you like, from Caesar to Caesar, but I think this also follows that it being known in this Act that there is a right to a hearing, an inquiry, and that the municipal council will be more careful in its procedure in the lands it decides to acquire, or the agency of the municipality, and the school board likewise.

I think the fact that it is known that there is a place for a public grievance, a public hearing, a public explanation of what is contemplated here, will restrain, will certainly have a restraining effect on expropriating bodies at that level.

One of the great outcries which I have observed—and I am sure hon. members have—which they thought was a defect in our present Expropriation Procedures Act was that there was nobody to complain to, there was nobody you could grieve to. You got the word your property was required, there was nothing you could do about it but fight about what you were going to get for it, negotiate or wrangle or go to court and fight. But here we have provided a public forum, and I trust that the inquiry officer will be a person or body that will be able to develop all the reasons surrounding the necessity, the fairness the justice and the need for this expropriation or on the other hand, whether there is no need or only a partial need for it.

I think that having it placed in there will have a very restraining effect on the municipality, and on the school board, these are the only two boards that are questioned in this amendment. I would ask honourable members to vote against the amendment.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I had occasion today to correspond with an individual and we were discussing the tactics or the techniques that were used by people—I want to be careful with my words because I do not want to cast any slur on the hon. Attorney General. We were discussing the tactics of the communists under Lenin and the tactics under Hitler, where they would use truthful statements and join them with statements that were not quite truthful to give credence to the statement that were not quite truthful. As I say I am sure the Attorney understands that I am not casting any slur on him, and the reason I mention that is because the Attorney General is getting close to that technique.

As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, what McRuer said was, as the Minister pointed out, that the school boards' expropriation should be subject to review by the Minister of Education—it was only in the case of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto that this situation should not pertain. That is the way I understand it, Mr. Chairman, that aside from the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, the consenting authority should be the Minister of Education.

Now it is easy to understand why in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto one might permit the school board to be the approving authority, because in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto we do have a system of checks and balances. For instance, if a local school board wanted to expropriate land it would have to be for school purposes and this would be in the nature of a capital expenditure by the local board. It then would have to obtain approval of this expropriation from the Metropolitan Toronto school board because the Metropolitan Toronto school board would have to approve the capital expenditure and arrange for the necessary financing. So there is a counterbalance and a check.

The municipality of Metropolitan Toronto school board, of course, is composed of members of the school boards of the various member municipalities. So, in essence, you do have a check and a countercheck and a cross-check on what any local school board may do or desire to do.

But the same does not apply to a local board outside of Metropolitan Toronto. This government has seen fit to impose the necessary checks and balances in Metro Toronto so its people will not get too big for their britches and start dictating to this government, I presume, but evidently they do not have the same fear outside Toronto, because they have already divided them sufficiently that they have no strong unity so to speak.

So I can see the concern expressed by my colleague the member for Downsview.

We are quite willing, perhaps—or at least I should be—that the local school board—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: —that the boards in Metropolitan Toronto be the approving authority, but outside of Metropolitan Toronto, I do think that it should be the Minister of Education.

I stand to be corrected, Mr. Chairman, but I do believe that the way I stated Mr. McRuer's feelings to be correct. If I am incorrect, I do hope that the Attorney General will direct me to the passage wherein Mr. Justice McRuer suggests that all the school boards be the approving authorities throughout the province.

I still suggest to the Attorney General, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the former Chief Justice was only applying that formula to Metropolitan Toronto, and that elsewhere it should be the Minister of Education.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Did the hon. member have anything further to add to this question?

Mr. Ben: I was just asking his—

Mr. Chairman: Well, perhaps we could have the hon. member's reply, if you wish.

Mr. Ben: All right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cite Mr. McRuer's recommendation; it is at the foot of page 1,084. He said expropriation by all school boards should be subject to the approval of the Minister of Education, then I went on to distinguish why we did not do that, and why he was not talking about elective school boards.

He did not distinguish Metropolitan Toronto at all, anywhere. He did not distinguish Metropolitan Toronto at all. That is what is stated: "all," he said.

With relation to school boards he did not distinguish Metropolitan Toronto. He did in the municipal areas—in the municipal council areas—but he specifically mentions the municipality of Metro Toronto; he did not take it apart from the others. He said it should be the same as other municipalities, and the municipal council should be its approving authority.

So he did not make any distinction from Metro, either with respect to school boards or with respect to municipalities. What he said was "all" municipalities should be their own approving authorities, and, he said, for school boards they should be approved by the Minister of Education.

We did not accept the latter recommendation, because earlier, if you refer to Mr. McRuer's discussions, his reasons, you will see that he is talking generally about appointed school boards. And, as I pointed out previously, the principle is the elected body, the body responsible to public opinion, which has to get its authority from the voter, the citizen voter—that is the body which is to be responsible.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, how can the Attorney General see much distinction between appointed school boards and elected school boards, when one considers that if they are appointed they are appointed by elected officials? In other words they are simply persona designatum—if that is the proper plural of persona designata.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, the water resources board is appointed by elected persons—

Mr. Ben: The fact still remains that, as the hon. member for Downsview points out, they are acting as judge and jury and their own court of appeal.

This is the principle that we find repugnant. It is not that we want to distinguish between elected bodies and appointed bodies. We do not think that either elected bodies or appointed bodies are to act as their own Court of Appeal and sit in judgment on themselves. This is the principle, not how they come to be in office, that we find repugnant. We have been against magistrates sitting in appeal on themselves in the past, and we still maintain this position. That is why we are asking this House to support this particular amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I find myself in agreement with the amendment of the Opposition.

If I might just for a moment go to section 4 and read that: "An expropriating authority shall not expropriate land without the approval of the approving authority." Who are the expropriating authorities?

The Minister states that there is, of course, the inquiry officer—that there is another step in the procedure—that we will make public the findings. But in that section dealing with inquiry officers, it states that the inquiry officer shall make his report only to the approving authority, who is the expropriating authority, and does not require that the inquiry officer make his reports to both parties.

I believe that it is necessary that there be a third party involved here—a person who can sit in judgment and review the case of both parties, and take heed of the recommendations of the inquiry officer. I do not believe that it is right that, as the Minister says, Caesar should sit in judgment of Caesar. I think that it is very necessary that some other person listens to the arguments put forward and has the responsibility of being the approving authority.

I realize this has all been said before, but it is very necessary that if the inquiry officer is going to approach anyone other than the approving expropriating authority, that in this section there be set out some other persons to whom he should report. I would ask if the Minister would not consider making this necessary change.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): There is just one point that I would like to raise that has already been mentioned by the hon. Minister and that is that Mr. Justice McRuer suggested that a municipal council could be the expropriating and approving authority. And I would like the hon. members opposite, who were quoting from Mr. Justice McRuer quite often, to correlate that with their arguments regarding school boards. If you agree with Mr. Justice McRuer on municipal councils, you should not be quoting him about school boards.

An hon. member: But why?

Mr. Kerr: You are quoting him continuously.

The Hon. Mr. McRuer, on page 999, says councils elected by qualified electors are self-governing. For this reason they should be held responsible to the public for their decisions.

This is what the hon. Attorney General has said over and over again, and I would like to know how these school boards, under the new system of county boards, differ from municipalities in this respect. That is before Bill 44.

Mr. Lawlor: The Attorney General's argument under this heading I think is the only place in this bill now that we are going to run into loggerheads. It is the last great bone of contention which we gnaw at and we have not taken the meat off it yet.

I am in favour of the amendment. The Attorney General's argument is not an argument in logic, it is not an argument in line with our representative institutions. It is a straight argument from convenience. But convenience must give way to constitutional doctrines of checks and balances, and a division of powers. I am prepared to pay that kind of price, particularly with regional government very much in the offing.

But in any event, you know what can happen here: re the expropriating authority as you go through the later section you get a division; you get at least some quasi-independence. You finally get a third party to turn to. But in these two areas, where the expropriating authority is the same person as the approving authority, whatever on earth you are doing, I think you must admit the logic of this—I suggest that you are leaving the door wide open to turn the whole thing into one fine charade.

You bring in an inquiry officer, who is supposedly an independent agent, to review and to bring the whole thing into the open. Then you give them the squeeze between the two interested parties—who happen to be the same party. They make up their minds at the outset as to what they want. All the inquiries in the world are not going to make any change. They will hear blindly and the next day say: “No, we approve of what we approved of after we approved of our approval”.

I do not think that is legitimate—within any concept of democracy as I understand it. What I am saying, in effect, to wind this up as far as I am concerned, is that you set up a very commendable institution, an inquiry officer, as you say—someone people can go to with their grievances, and then you vitiate his role, so far as I can see.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Chairman, there is one point in this section on which I would appreciate some enlightenment.

You are aware, sir, that in our county of Waterloo we have a number of joint boards which operate various of our facilities. Perhaps we have gone somewhat more into this area than have many other counties. And the problem surely will further develop as regional governments are organized across the province.

For example, our hospital board consists of representatives from the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo and from the county, and the board of the Sunnyside home for the aged consists of representatives from the three cities in the county, and the county representatives as well.

In the matter of joint local boards, perhaps the Minister could enlighten me as to whether the approving authority as such is going to have to be based on opinions given by each of the various municipal or county councils involved. If this kind of approval is going to be needed, where the local board is a joint one, must it therefore then come from each of the municipalities? And what will happen if one of the municipal organs whose representative sits on this board refuses to grant an approval? How will the problem be resolved then, sir?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have not addressed my reply particularly to that problem, but section 5, the section with which we are dealing, says, of course: where a municipality or a local board thereof, other than an elected school board expropriates land.

I would think that if you have a joint board—and I can see this situation—that joint board must have received its authority to do certain things from the three municipalities, or the two municipalities or more, which appointed it and have certain powers.

If an inquiry were to take place under this Act and come back, I would think those three municipalities must adjust and resolve their differences. Otherwise, I think they are in trouble. I would think, first of all, that the documents which set forth the authority of their joint board would be sufficient to circumscribe and define their powers and responsibilities.

If the municipalities are going to agree in the end, I do not think they will have any more difficulty agreeing in the end on the action of their board than they would in the beginning when they appointed it. They must have contemplated, in setting up that joint board, that it was acting for all the municipalities who had joined in its appointment.

Mr. Breithaupt: It seems to me that if one, shall we say, hospital board in the community, which is in a situation that ours is, decides on expansion within, and receives certain approvals to carry on with expansion, and one of the municipalities is unhappy about sharing the cost, or feels that it must give its tax dollars toward something different, how are they going to resolve themselves out of that problem before regional government is among us?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather specific problem. I think the local board or the joint board could go back to the municipality if there has to be an inquiry—and mind you, an inquiry is not contemplated in every case; and I would hope, probably there would not be any inquiry in perhaps 90 per cent of the cases. But if an inquiry varies what the board had originally agreed upon as a necessity for expropriation, if the inquiry officer, after the inquiry that is, varies the decision then I think the board must come back—

An hon. member: To whom?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: To its creators.

An hon. member: It might have five creators.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, then if they are not set up to act in concert and in agreement the problem goes back behind the expropriation, surely; or else they could not agree; they have got to find agreement among themselves.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think you could think of all sorts of situations where the joint board will not agree, and not only in expropriations. But we are not out to cure those failures to agree in a joint board if that is the way they want to offer it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Attorney General is looking to the former chief justice to entirely support the position that the government takes in this connection.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, not necessarily.

Mr. Bullbrook: You do not? Well, I just want to lay this to rest, and get it into the records of this House, I read from page 999:

The inquiry procedure which we later recommend should apply to municipalities, and the final approval power should not be taken from them, except where the power to expropriate is exercised for purposes other than the immediate purpose of the municipal body.

And it goes on. It says,

We think that in such cases the exercise of the power of expropriation by a municipal body should be subject to the approval of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Well really you do not stand on all fours with Mr. McRuer but what I want to convey, if I might, Mr. Chairman, to the non-legal people in this House is what is going to happen in effect to every citizen in this province. They are going to come to their lawyer and say, "The school board wants my land, what can I do about it?" and the lawyer says to them, "The Attorney General of this province has provided a statute that gives you the right to go before a forum—he said so himself, a forum, an inquiry officer—and look into whether the school board should take your land from you". And the clients says, "Mr. Lawyer let us go and have our day in court, so to speak, before that forum". And we go and we have our day there and we put forward our position before this inquiry officer. And after we walk out the door the client says to us, "When will we get a decision?" And you say, "I am not sure". And he says, "Who makes the decision?"

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no decision.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am not talking about the inquiry officer. I say, "In effect, who makes the decision?" and you say to him, "the board". Now is there anything more incongruous than that? Is there anything more ridiculous? I ask the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin, not necessarily trained in the law, but a fair man, is there anything more ridiculous than that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is not ridiculous at all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well in my opinion it is.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The principle is there, that elected representatives of the client who went there have the right to make his case, to point out the grievances, to point out the unnecessary features of this expropriation. And he comes to the elected people to make the decision.

Mr. Singer: To the same people.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot stress this too much. First of all I think that the fact that there is a public inquiry—the right of grievance—will restrain and restrict expropriations. This is one of its great purposes.

Mr. Bullbrook: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: And I think it most unlikely that a municipal council or a school board will lightly toss aside or set aside the findings of an inquiry. True, they can but they must stand up and justify to the people who elected them, their reasons for so doing. That is not ridiculous at all.

Mr. Chairman: Will those in favour of Mr. Singer's motion, please rise.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Those opposed to Mr. Singer's motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes 33, the nays 55.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost; section 5 will form part of the bill.

On section 6; the hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, in connection with section 6, I would just like to record that there was adequate discussion in the committee in connection with this but we will note that in the section itself there is no mandatory provision, for the name and address of the approving authority being included in the notice. There is no provision in the section, you recall we discussed, about the name and address of the approving authority being included in the notice. We felt that ordinary people might not know who that authority was, and, as a result, I believe the hon. Attorney General undertook that the form would include that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: So recorded.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, in order perhaps to save some time of the House, I am wondering if the Attorney General might briefly look at the amount of time which he feels may elapse through the provisions of sections 6, 7 and 8.

I am just suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that if a municipal engineer states that he requires a certain amount of land and the municipal council instructs the purchasing officer to acquire the same, then that council would be informed by the purchasing officer that he may have contacted the owners, that there has been some dickering going on back and forth and possibly three weeks may have elapsed at this point. Once council instructs the city solicitor to proceed with an expropriation, it will take several weeks again no doubt, to make the necessary searches and prepare and serve the various notices, and of course to wait for this 30-day period to run.

Let us presume that after that 30-day period is almost finished, the ratepayer gives notice that he desires a hearing. Now, the solicitor might notify then the chief inquiry officer and request an appointment.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. There are numerous private conversations taking place which makes it very difficult to hear. Perhaps the hon. members would afford the hon. member for Kitchener the courtesy of listening to him.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, thank you. At that point, once the inquiry officer has been appointed and fixes a time and place for the hearing, of course, notice of this is going to have to be given to enable the solicitor to give five days notice to the various parties. And perhaps a month now again has elapsed.

Once the hearing has been held and a written report given, this, too, is going to take several weeks. Then written reasons are going to have to be given if the expropriation is ordered as a result of the inquiry officer's report. Now, if a plan is provided and registered and various notices are given, possibly a further two weeks is going to elapse. It might seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that under the provisions in these three sections, it may well be that some four months will be taken to cover all of the proceedings.

Now, if, then, our construction period within a community is possibly a seven months term over the year, and the decision is made to expropriate, say some time in July or August, by the time any effective work can be done we have really gotten ourselves into the winter season and the project, indeed, may well be a year getting under way. I am just wondering if the Attorney General could possibly enlighten me as to whether he feels that this time period of about a four-month term to go through the proceedings is a reasonably accurate assessment of the required time; whether he thinks it may be shortened or whether he feels that there may be any hardship to either the expropriating authority or to the citizen because of the time that might possibly elapse?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We did consider this both in the drafting of the legislation and with reference to the recommendations which were made both by the Law Reform Commission and Mr. McRuer, although he did not perhaps spell out a particular time. But there is the reference to the section 6 on the application for the hearing that must be made within 30 days, as the hon. member has perhaps noted. Then in section 7, once the application is made, the inquiry officer on appointment shall forthwith assign an inquiry officer who shall among other things fix the time and place.

Then in section 8 the decision must be given within 90 days of the date—that is, the approving authority must consider the report and make the decision within 90 days. Now, perhaps, taking it over all and taking the full amount of time allowed, it would work out perhaps to approximately four months, but I think we have to bear in mind that some expropriations particularly are pretty complicated, pretty difficult for appraisal, and some time is needed perhaps for early negotiation to see if matters can be adjusted before you need go to inquiry. I think we had to provide reasonable time for persons to act in all expropriations and I would hope that it would be possible to foreshorten many of these times in the ordinary expropriation.

But I do not think we can do much better than we have done in the times set forth and perhaps the hon. member might note that in section 8—no, I was going to say perhaps we had amended the 90 days as to time, but those have been very thoroughly considered. I do not think that we would be wise to start trying at this moment to adjust those times to make them shorter or longer. I think they are reasonable.

Mr. Breithaupt: It may well be, Mr. Chairman, that if an expropriation could be handled in four months, no doubt all the parties would be very pleased because that is a short period of time, but I appreciate your comment. I was just wondering if this term and the set-up of timings that I had made was probably what we might expect on the average. If this is reasonable to you then this is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We had some benefit of studies, as I say, of the law reform commission in this, and our own experience in expropriations was pretty close to that with our board of negotiations and so on. These times were considered in the drafting of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: On section 6, the Attorney General will not take offence, I am sure, if I remind him, and place on the record the fact, that in this section and in a number of other sections, we discussed what should be contained in these notices, and that we were advised that the forms would be adequate and elaborate, and even more so, as I remember them in McRuer.

Mr. Chairman: Section 6; agreed to.

On section 7; the hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, in section 7 I have an amendment that I am sure the Attorney General would be agreeable to.

Section 7, subsection 6, add thereto "which report shall be delayed within a period of 45 days from the date of the hearing and a copy of which shall be served on the parties who appeared at the inquiry hearing"—moved by myself, seconded by Mr. Lawlor.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deans moves that subsection 6, of section 7, be amended to read "which report—

Mr. Deans: It is added thereto.

Mr. Chairman: And added thereto at the end of section 6 after the word "therefore"—"which report shall be made within a period of 45 days from the date of the hearing, and a copy of which shall be served on the parties who appeared at the inquiry hearing".

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Can we take the same vote as before?

Mr. Deans: I am quite sure that the hon. House leader would not want to deprive us of an opportunity to express our reasons.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This has already been done.

Mr. Singer: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Deans: That has nothing to do with it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Wentworth has the floor.

Mr. Singer: The House leader cannot sit and be quiet for 20 minutes.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, it seems abundantly reasonable that a time limit should be set on the inquiry officer having to hand his report down. And the matter of making the report available to the parties that appear also seems very reasonable. In one instance, or in two instances where the expropriating authority and the approving authority are the same person, this report will be made available to one of the two parties but not to the other, and it seems to me that any people appearing before any inquiry board should have the courtesy of receiving a report of the findings of that board.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, in the context of what my confrere has said, I believe this to be an oversight. I think a copy of the report should be served upon the interested parties. We did not discuss that. We will leave that just as it stands, I will leave it to the Attorney General as to whether he thinks so too.

As to the time limitation, 45 days, I think it was discussed a little bit—I do not remember precisely what we said but this is the one weakness left. We filled in the time limitations all the way along but for one reason or another we omitted to tie the inquiry officer down a bit. If the inquiry officer has an illimitable time in which to present his report, then your whole expropriation thing is out of kilter; you can sit on it and many of the benefits of the Act may be lost. I would suggest some time limitation should be placed on it.

Mr. Chairman: Does any hon. member wish to speak to the amendment before the hon. Minister replies? Does the Minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, particularly with reference to the time limit, I do not think that wise any more than we should put in a court procedure a requirement that they must deliver the judgment within a certain time. Forty-five days might be ample in most cases; it might be altogether too short where you are considering a very complicated, sophisticated project of, say, a conservation authority, or an industrial plant is being expropriated in the area, which might be required by the expropriating authority—I think that might be altogether too brief.

I would not like to restrict the inquiry to that time. If we found in the experience of the working out of this Act that too much time was being taken then I would certainly be glad to—after, say, a year's experience—consider an amendment to bring some reasonable time into play. I do not think we will face that problem and if it should arise we will deal with the same.

In the matter of the furnishing of the report to both parties, we simply followed the recommendation of, I think, Mr. McRuer, that the report should be furnished to the expropriating authority, so it may make up its mind as to whether it needs that property, and that is the purpose of it. The party who is probably being expropriated has said, "I do not think this is just, reasonable or necessary". It is for the expropriating authority—the approving authority, rather, not the expropriating authority necessarily, although as has been pointed out in some cases it would be the same—it is for it to decide as to whether, after that inquiry, expropriation is still necessary in its original form, or whether it can, if the inquiry officer has so recommended in his report, modify it in some respect. I do not think it is necessary that it be served upon the other party.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Dean's motion will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

Section 7, subsection 6 shall carry. Shall the remainder of section 7 form part of the bill?

Sections 7 and 8 agreed to.

On section 9.

Mr. Breithaupt: On section 9, I just have one brief question to ask of the Attorney General. Might it not seem, sir, that in many instances where a municipality is involved, the majority of expropriations will be for road-widening purposes?

In this case persons are often knocked out of their homes, or of their businesses in any way; and as well there may be certain kinds of easements which are taken back. It seems to me that to go through the full routine of the Act in order to acquire a ten-foot frontage along 20 or 30 properties is a bit extreme. I am wondering if any thought has been given to any changes which might allow this kind of a project to be done in some kind of an en masse or block fashion.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the Act does not require the full routine, as the hon. member says, to be followed. This Act is designed to cover—and I say it again—every expropriation. But there is nothing to prevent it and I would hope that this would happen in many cases. The expropriating authority will make a sudden or quick agreement with the party whose property is being taken. If that does not follow, there is the board of negotiation which we have been used to calling the "kitchen table committee"—it may be resolved there. Now, there may not be any inquiry, for instance, and I say, I hope in the majority of cases it would not be necessary. But if it is, and there are differences on the necessity or on the compensation, then on appeal we have all those procedures in there. But I would hope that a great many of the expropriations, particularly such as the hon. member mentions, will be settled very quickly and I think this will be the fact. But this is, of course, true of all legislation. You have to contemplate and make the procedures fit every situation that may arise, as best you may.

Mr. Chairman: Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on section 10, it may be argued—I am not moving an amendment on this, I am just bringing it to the attention of the hon. Attorney General. Again we will keep close scrutiny as to how this Act actually operates. But a traditional date upon which compensation has been set in the past has been either the date of vesting, on one side of the fence—or registration of plan I should say—or on the other side of the fence, the date that possession is taken.

In this Act possession is left out completely, and the reason for it is because we introduced the idea of the expropriating authority making an offer. And if you are going to make an offer—one does not know when he makes the offer what date possession is desired in many cases. So you set up three alternatives as to the time that will determine the date of compensation.

Under the old Act a great disservice was done to people. We know of cases—I have a case in my office starting from 1959, and it still is not settled—that has nothing to do with me, nobody could be more amenable in these things. The recalcitrance is all over there. In any event this has gone on for many years, and I think we are all aware of this, that these things do drag out, and by the time the man gets his dough, he is getting it on the basis of a registration made many years previously; and on a rising market this does the gravest disservice. Part of the reason for this Act which has not been stressed up to this point is precisely to avoid deficiencies to expropriated home owners or others because of the impact of a rising market.

The time limitations perhaps may be sufficiently tight here that what I am going to be talking about will possibly not arise. I am just bringing it to your attention that some afternoon we may have to amend this in terms of the date of possession. As this thing develops, as I see your time limitation, you could easily go over a year and on a stretch, maybe two years, under the present legislation. Not likely now because you have tied it down much better than anything that has been done previously, but it is still conceivable and if that were so, and if it happened in any number of cases, then we very well might have to bring back the concept of the old statute and common law as to the date of possession being the determining date, so that injustice be not done.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would like to speak briefly to that although the hon. member is not moving an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

There was, in the recommendation, I think it was, of the law reform commission or of Mr. McRuer—I am not too sure at the moment which—the fourth time which was the date of possession. We did leave that out of account and deliberately so for the reasons that the hon. member has perhaps indicated. We felt there was some difficulty in the way of using that. We think that payment should be prompt and this makes it definite, that one of these three, a, b or c makes it definite and makes it reasonably prompt. And if possession is not taken, if possession should not be taken, may not be required perhaps for a year or two years, there would be nothing to prevent the expropriating authority having taken it in the sense that it includes the expropriation, paying for it, then entering into a lease-back or a lease arrangement with the person whose property is taken. He can be a tenant so that he is taken care of, but he gets his payment. I again have some regard here for the public purse, because if you think forward from the date the expropriation is concluded and not in the sense of possession, and do not take it for three or four or five years, there may be a great inflation in the price. As I say, the payment can be made now when the expropriation is concluded, leaving out of account for the moment possession by the expropriating authority, and then an arrangement can be made with the owner to leave him in possession. He may very well want to stay there for two or three years, if he is a farmer or business man, and he can pay a reasonable rent that the parties can agree upon. I think we have that taken care of.

Mr. Chairman: Sections 10 to 12 inclusive, agreed to. On section 13; the hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Attorney General. Some years ago, when The Department of Highways on 401 was going through Wellington, they bought a farm—at least they expropriated a farm—and after they got under construction of the highway, they used the gravel from that farm to put the base of Highway 401 in.

What is the position now of the person who sells the farm? Does he get the potential from that farm if it is gravel, for instance, or is it just bought as raw farm land?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They get the market value as set forth in section 13 and those things are "market value of the land". That is defined as the price which a willing buyer would be willing to pay to a willing seller on the open market, then the damages—but these things do not concern the question. If the farm has a gravel pit, and if it is in an area where gravel makes it valuable or if the gravel is valuable by reason of the location of that farm, it would therefore be included in the market value and be taken into account.

Mr. Worton: Even though the gravel operation has not been in operation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This is my understanding, I think I am right. I would say that if there is gravel there then the value of the farm would be increased by that fact. There is a situation, I think, where the farm is for the large part rock and there is no particular value in that property at all. If a highway was coming by, and in expropriating that farm they use that rock for fill or road base or whatever, I would think in that case under the terms of this Act that that rock would not be specially paid for, although once the highway is under construction it might be very valuable, especially if there is no other rock available in the area.

The farm would be paid for with these features as set out in the Act: its market value and damages for disturbance, relocation, dislocation, injurious affection and so on.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister a question in regard to mineral rights in the province. What protection has the farm owner? We have pockets of oil and pockets of gas found in the province. What protection do those landowners have in regard to expropriating their land when there is proof that there are oil or gas deposits on the land that is going to be expropriated?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is without question a part of the market value. I am taking the hon. member's own words that it is proven that it is there. A mere speculative suggestion that there might be gas or oil under this land, I think would have little bearing, but if it were proven there had been drilling or testing, that would definitely be in account if the farm or the property lay next to a gas well or gas area. I would think this would have increased its market value in the speculative market between buyer and seller. If

I might perhaps mention this and this may also relate to the question asked by the hon. member for Wellington as well—if you would look forward just for a moment with me at section 14, subsection 4. I think it is fairly clearly spelled out there, in determining the market value of land, no account shall be taken of (a) the special use to which the expropriating authority will put the land so you do not build up the market value because The Department of Highways or The Department of Public Works, or The Department of Education is going to build a university there, and increase that land or some works upon it which will make it valuable.

Then, (b), the language of this section, no account shall be taken on any increase or decrease in the value of the land resulting from the imminence of the development in respect of which expropriation is made. So you measure the market as it is taken at the time, then—as you will note—take no account of any increase in the value of the land resulting from the land being put to a use that could be restrained by any court.

I do not think you are concerned with that as your question at this moment, but the special use to which the land is put by the expropriating authority or the imminence of the development are not to be taken into account in examining the market value.

Mr. Worton: I do not wish to labour the point but—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Well you are.

Mr. Worton: You think I am, eh? Well, the point that I am trying to bring out, sir, is gravel is there and it was brought about by a court case here in which The Department of Highways had considerable time settling it. The fact is that there was a potential gravel area there for which she got nothing but about $500 or $600 an acre, but The Department of Highways made itself $40,000 or $50,000 out of that land by using the gravel that came out of it, and—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The people of Ontario did that.

Mr. Worton: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, can you not keep that fellow quiet and let the debate continue?

Mr. Worton: I am sorry. I got the run-around here at the time, and this lady had a very sensible argument. I am just trying to find out if this is going to protect future people in similar circumstances. It is a very legitimate argument, and some of our legal friends tell me that it does preserve this, but I do not think it does.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think it does in the market value. If that case could not be settled by agreement that that was the value which the owner thought it was worth to the expropriating authority — and in your case The Department of Highways — it would be taken to the Land Compensation Board. I am quite certain that under the terms of this Act they would say this property has a very considerable value—I would think close to what the owner would be able to establish—by reason of the fact that it has on it a valuable deposit of gravel.

Mr. Chairman: Section 13, agreed to.

On section 14.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, on 14, just a question to the Attorney General. I never was quite clear about our position throughout the hearings when you get down to that “contrary to law” clause. We discussed there the situation where the zoning in a particular area was one way, but everyone knew the surrounding area had been rezoned over a period of time and the owner had not bothered getting his rezoning, yet he was entitled to it. The fact of the matter is, although it is contrary to law; the de facto use at the time of the expropriation was contrary to law, that is to use the property for certain purposes, say a rooming house, is contrary and yet they ask the expropriating authority to pay them for a rooming house. The expropriating authority is going to bounce back onto this clause, I suggest, and perhaps you can clear my mind on it and say: Oh no, it is contrary to law, you are going to get a much lower value than all your neighbours around here would enjoy in a similar circumstance. Did we ever resolve that?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I thought we did. We had a noted example as I remember in committee. Someone used the example of a bawdy house being carried on. You would not compensate for that, but the principle, to be serious, is that if someone is carrying on something that you could restrain them from doing—that is the language of the section—if it could be restrained by a court of law, the simple principle is you do not compensate them because they are doing something unlawful.

Now, I would think that if someone in an area which is owned for residential use—and perhaps on this famous list of Metro Toronto, the city of Toronto is carrying on something that they could be restrained from doing the principle is that they should not be compensated if they are doing something contrary to law.

But I would think if it were a rooming house which has been winked at in the residential area, the revenue from that property would probably be taken into account although, on the strict interpretation of the subsection, it—

Mr. Singer: It could not.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well I think perhaps by a compensation board or even before it got there, the expropriating authority would perhaps be generous enough to make some settlement.

But on the strict language of the subsection, I must admit—and I think it is a sound principle—that if someone is carrying on an unlawful—and that is what it amounts to, an illegal or unlawful operation, or illegal or unlawful use of the property—surely you cannot ask this Legislature to legislate that they should be compensated for doing something unlawful?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is as simple as that.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask what would be the situation of a legal non-conforming use?

An hon. member: Then it is legal.

Mr. Ben: It is legal, but what would happen in a legal non-conforming use of it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Did the hon. member say he was going to ask me to define that?

Mr. Ben: No.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I hope not.

Mr. Ben: What would happen? For instance, certain uses can be perpetuated, even though they are unlawful because they are not illegal. They are what are called legal non-conforming uses.

An hon. member: They are all illegal.

Mr. Ben: Now that is a specialized use. If you discontinue that business according to the basis of the law, the case law, your right—the owner’s right to continue to use that land for that purpose lapses.

Second, it is quite feasible that if a person were to discontinue that particular use, the next user would have a less offensive use of and thereby the owner would lose the full use of that land.

What would happen if you want to expropriate a business which was, let us say, a C4 use, the lowest category there is and it was legal non-conforming use? How would you pay that man? Would you pay him on his present use, or would you say to him: "Well, look you are using this land for C4 use in a C1 area?" You would have to stop using it so—or if you sold it you would have got that money for it, because you would have to find another buyer for C4 use. How are you going to pay him for it?

Mr. Kerr: On your example, he never had a use.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the hon. member would think for a moment I think he quoted a legal non-conforming use. If it is legal, it is legal and, therefore, it must be paid for. If it is non-conforming and illegal and can be stopped, the court or any of his neighbours could restrain him the next day and put him out of business. You do not pay him for that, because the expropriating authority comes along and takes him out of business. They pay him for the proper legal use.

As I say, if it is legal, he will get paid for it. But the principle of this subsection is that if you are doing something a court could restrain you from doing, you are not going to get compensated under this Act.

An hon. member: While the Minister is on his feet—suppose he had been there 20 years?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think perhaps if he had been there for 20 years, on the strict language of the section it probably could be argued that you should not compensate him, but I think that circumstance would be taken into account and something would be allowed him. That is all I can say.

Mr. Chairman: Section 14 carried. It being 6 o'clock, I do now leave the chair. We will resume at 8.

THE EXPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1968-1969 (concluded)

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 14 stand as part of the bill? Carried.

On section 15—the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, under this section, I think I can clear up the rest of my difficulties with the Act right on the spot. This is the so-called “home for a home” or “equivalent accommodation” section. This is the breakthrough in the law of Ontario which may give some leadership to other jurisdictions in the world under this head. Still, while we went over it to some extent, there are some doubts which remain in my mind and I would very shortly like to resolve them.

It seems to me that there are possibly three categories under this section. The first one would be, where an individual really has no equity, where, when he first bought a house, he might have put $500, $700 into it and then, due to market conditions and to the fact that he has a blown up mortgage with a big balloon at the end, he ends up without a dime on the expropriation.

Our legislation at this stage has saved him from coming out of that situation without any money in his pocket or a home. We have made a major move and this is where I give the Attorney General great credit in at least eliminating any further debt from his shoulders; he does not come out shackled.

But, nevertheless, under the circumstances here, he very easily could come out without any money, therefore, he is not in a position to buy another house and this legislation—these remarks are for the future, not so much for the present—the direction of this legislation as it comes into perfection, as it really becomes valuable legislation in the full possible sense, will be that provision will be made for such an individual.

I suggest that this section does nothing for him at all. Curiously enough this section would do something for somebody who came out with say $500, after all his creditors were paid off, he could then reinvest that $500 in something new. Quite where he is going to get the initial financing puzzled me somewhat, because no provision again is made under the legislation whereby pools of money are available for financing or certain kinds of short-term loans are available but I will come to that in a moment.

Margaret Campbell, the controller, has had something to say about that, so has the commission itself. Without delaying this debate unduly, I shall make brief references to some solutions to that particular problem.

The last situation, the third category, is where some one comes out of the expropriation with $2,500 to, say, $10,000, in their pocket after having paid off their mortgages, liens and executions. That individual then would invest his money, give back a mortgage probably, and if he fell a couple of thousand, three thousand dollars short of a house in roughly equivalent status, would appeal to this board, and probably or possibly get some portion of it, or all of it to put him in similar accommodation.

That is fine, that last category is the one that is going to be benefited by legislation. The first category is not going to be benefited at all. It is the second category that interests me as to where it all leads.

If this man has $500, $700 at the end of the day, he wants to buy another house. Suppose he has to give back a purchase money mortgage then again he is going to run into an inflated situation. Is it the intent of this legislation that to the extent of the inflation, for instance, if he is going to buy a $20,000 home and he has to pay $22,000 because he is only putting $700 or $800 into it.

Is it the intention, in terms of hard cash, to give him a couple of thousand bucks so that he can get a mortgage that is not inflated on the one side; or on the other, is it the intention to provide mortgage funds so that he will not have to have a blown up mortgage, or is there, thirdly, the possibility that you will in some way enter into the situation with respect to the mortgage itself, to take all the water out of the stock, so to speak. That is a curious situation.

All these things I do not think were particularly gone over in committee, possibly because of time. Our problems were largely technical. This, is a problem of straight policy and interpretation and I wonder if the Attorney General has any remarks?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not relate this section at all to a mortgage situation, whether there is a mortgage or whether there is not a mortgage, I relate it particularly and definitely and simply to market value. I think perhaps if I were to give an example as I understand it, the principle of equivalent reinstatement would cover situations of this kind, and I think you would leave mortgages out of account.

You talk about market value. Let us say that in an urban renewal project or perhaps in a farm property or a property which stands out by itself in a municipal expropriation, you find a home, a small home or something of that nature, perhaps a nice little brick home with three bedrooms, bath, kitchen and so on, which has been standing there for a good many years and a couple who are quite satisfied with it. It affords them a roof over their head and it is comfortable, snug, and the market value of that place in the location where it is, particularly in an urban renewal situation, may be, say, $8,000; that would be all you could get for it.

The expropriating authority comes along and the market value, the price which anyone would pay for that property offered in that situation is $8,000. That is the best that could be obtained; you give those people when you take their property away, that market value, with the additional items, the dislocation, the disturbance and so on, but they cannot go out and purchase a home, a brick home or a frame home, or whatever it may be, with that accommodation, anywhere for $8,000. Possibly they will have to pay $12,000 to get equivalent accommodation.

In that case—and you do not need to take a mortgage into account here at all, you take the market value, in that case the expropriating authority, and if it goes to the land compensation board on application, shall—the section reads, “shall”—make some compensation over and above market value to put those people in a position to enable them to get a home equivalent, reasonably equivalent, in the language of the section, to that out of which they are dispossessed.

That is my understanding of the section, call it home-for-a-home if you like, but you could never—if you wanted to be particular as to detail—you could never find a home that exactly matches. It is going to be different in some ways, a different number of doors or windows, it is certainly going to be in a different location, it is certainly going to vary in some respects.

But the principle laid down in this section 15 is that people who are dispossessed when there is a market value situation out of which they come and it is not going to be sufficient to give them equivalent accommodation, then the land board, particularly the board, “shall” provide additional compensation above market value to enable them to be placed in a home reasonably equivalent to that from which they are dispossessed. This only applies, of course, to the residence situation.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, just a word or two. This is really complicated, we could go on for a long time—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Yes, that is true.

Mr. Lawlor:—but I will not. I have just one point. What the Attorney General is talking about is a fourth category, it strikes me. This is where a person has no mortgage, liens or anything else. They pick up hard cash for the valuation, say $8,000, and pay out $12,000 for the other place which is fairly equivalent, and pick up $4,000 through the board.

I suggest that that is the ideal situation, that is very seldom the case, the situation that would be more analogous to what you are going to run into is where they pick up the $8,000 but owe $6,000 on a mortgage. And they have $2,000 left over, and they have to buy the $12,000 place; so they have to finance $10,000. If they go to the purchase money mortgage situation, they will not get a $10,000 mortgage from the purchase. He will set it up to $13,000 and take an $11,000 mortgage. Well that may be okay provided that the board is willing to countenance that sort of thing.

On the other hand if he is not willing to take back the purchase money mortgage and you have to go and arrange it on the market, then I think you may run into grotesque interest rates and I do not think that you are contemplating really picking up the difference in the interest rates for mortgagors, although you are very gratuitous with mortgagees.

In other words the ramifications of this is very great, and I am prepared to abide the event. Let us see what happens, but there is a good deal to this.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): This section deals with "a house for a house" or "a home for a home". What about "a farm for a farm"?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Same thing.

Mr. Evans: Does this really mean that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 15 form part of the bill?

Sections 15-17 agreed to.

On section 18, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, during the previous readings of this bill in the House I made mention of accommodation for accommodation. Now the bill as it is here, I do not think provides for this at all. It provides for financial remuneration within limits. The individual may have been living in a home that is going to be expropriated and had been paying, say, $85 a month and has lived there for a long period of time, say a year or two. Now where is he going to get accommodation at that $85 per month price in today's market?

He had been well housed where he was. Now you are dislocating him, and I do not think you are making compensation enough for him to provide accommodations. I think you should try to provide some type of accommodations. Could the Minister answer this?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Is the hon. member speaking to section 18?

Mr. B. Newman: 18 (2).

Hon. Mr. Wishart: 18 (2)?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: First of all I will read 18 (1) because it does speak, of course, of an owner other than a tenant, and brings into reckoning the allowance to compensate for inconvenience, the cost of finding another residence, and allowance for improvements, etc. Then you will note that (b) is cost of finding premises to replace those expropriated where it is not the residence, relocation costs, moving cost, legal and survey costs. Then when you come to (2), "shall pay to a tenant occupying expropriated land in respect of disturbance, so much of the cost referred to in subsection (1)," so you go back and relate first of all subsection (1) as is appropriate and then you bring these back into play about the length of the tenancy he has—and that applies to a written or oral or parol lease—the portion of the term remaining, and any rights to renew he may have.

At that point you would consider how long he had been in possession under the terms, how much longer he might stay, and whether he had a right to renew. In addition, as I stated, those factors are enumerated in subsection (1), if it is a type of business he has been carrying on, and whatever investment he himself had made in the land, which means land or buildings, of course. I think you have covered almost every item that one could think of when you displace a tenant.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the government is providing him with money only, but does not provide him with the means of accommodation, and where is he going to get accommodation? Once you take his accommodation away, where there is a shortage of accommodations in a given community—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: You have in section 1 (b) the cost of finding premises to replace those expropriated. The member cannot surely expect an expropriating authority to go out and find for a displaced tenant another place of residence.

Mr. B. Newman: No. But there could be a substantial financial difference between the rent here, and the rent in the new place.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: This may very well happen, I would be quick to admit. This may very well happen, but on the other hand, there are so many things that you might say would happen. Perhaps the business that he will find in the new place will be double or triple of what he is doing. Maybe it will be less, and this provision in this Act would make up his business loss, after a review of a three-year period of time. I think we have gone a long way to offer him very generous compensation.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): It goes too far now.

Mr. Bullbrook: Gone too far? Is that really your attitude?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Well, what is yours?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Cheer up, he was outvoted in the Cabinet.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The Minister of Energy and Resources Management has most advanced views on this sort of thing, like "Damn the people and let the government get ahead."

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I explain?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If I could finish, I think we have covered in this section almost every feature that could be taken into account. I do not think you can expect any expropriating authority to go out and actually find the premises and relocate the tenant. You offer him relocation expense, you offer him legal appraisal costs, the cost of finding new premises and then you take into account how long he has been there and how long he may stay, whether he can renew the lease. As I say, the business loss is provided for. What more you could do, what the hon. member might suggest, I really do not know.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I am not looking at it from the business point of view. I am looking at it from the tenant's point of view. He has lived in the area now for ten or 12 years and the property is being expropriated. All of a sudden he has to find new accommodations. He had been satisfied where he was. He had been paying $50 a month five years ago and now it is up to $85. He is content, but the going rate in the community might be $155 now. Will the expropriating authority pay $155 a month, his now rental, for just as long as he lives in the new accommodation, and maintain the new rentals as they increase—that is, payment of the new rentals?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I see what the hon. member is speaking of now. In other words, we have nothing for a tenant equivalent to the home-for-home—

Mr. B. Newman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, we have not, and I do not think you could ask that the Act should go that far. I would not want to appear unsympathetic for the tenant's plight or position; the tenant, after all, is subject to dispossession, if I may use that term, by notice that his lease is over, and if he has a long term then that factor is taken into account. But if he has a monthly lease he could be dispossessed anyhow by his landlord and he has got to find new—

Mr. B. Newman: Take a father to a son.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Father to a son?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think we are getting into perhaps a limited area, for one thing, and a rather specialized situation. I think the father is giving the son a low rent—

Mr. B. Newman: Let us say the going rent?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I could only say that the father would have to assist him in the new location, that is all. That is about all.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Section 18 agreed to.

On section 19:

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, on section 19 I move that subclause 2 of clause 19 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

2. Where business is located on the land expropriated and the owner of the business decides that it is not feasible to relocate the business, the compensation shall include an amount equal to the value of the goodwill of the business:

Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I propose arises out of the recommendation of the report of the law reform commission on page 38, which I gather the Attorney General and legal bills committee have decided not to follow as it is there set out.

I would just like to refer to the paragraph preceding the heading "Recommendation" at the foot of page 38 in which it discusses the likelihood that many of the expropriated owners carrying on small business may well be unable or unwilling, because of poor health or advancing years, to carry on in a new location. Yet, the present subsection 2 puts it in the opinion of the board as to whether or not it is feasible for the owner to relocate. I think that is a determination, Mr. Chairman, which should not be left in the hands of the board, but one which should be placed directly in the hands and thoughts of the expropriated owner as to whether he considers himself fit to carry on in another location.

I think this is particularly true of the kind of proprietor-owner that the law reform commission discussed. They said there will be occasions where the business has been carried on by persons who cannot obtain financing for the new business or who do not have the energy or desire to start up again in a new location.

The American experience has been that as a group, elderly businessmen have been hardest hit by expropriation. The problem is not great for the successful, well-established businesses involved, but the effects are quite serious where small businesses are concerned. These are usually retail stores run by the owner-proprietor.

While a programme of relocation assistance might go some way to ameliorating these situations, there will still be owners who are willing or unable to relocate because of age or health. These persons would in most cases have continued to operate the businesses they had if the lands had not been expropriated. They would receive some compensation in the form of a termination allowance.

The recommendation is that a termination allowance be paid. The allowance should consist of a portion of the value of the good will, and should be paid to owners of businesses who are unable or unwilling to relocate their businesses. These are the very persons, Mr. Chairman—the corner grocery store operators, the cigar store operators—who in a redevelopment project, for example, are expropriated out of a community where they have carried on business for some time and the good will on which their businesses rest is suddenly removed. As provided for in subsection 1, where he has the capacity to continue, some account is taken of the loss of that good will in the interval between the conclusion of the expropriation and his re-establishment in business elsewhere.

However, in subclause 2 it gives no regard to the person who is not willing, or not able, for certain reasons, to carry on. I think that subsection 2 would be much more equitable in its provision towards owner-proprietors, particularly of small retail establishments in communities undergoing redevelopment, or even rehabilitation, if it provided that they themselves should be entitled to declare to the board that their declaration, their feeling, is that they will not carry on, and therefore file their application for compensation on that basis.

A second point I would like to make about the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is that it goes somewhat further than the recommendation of the commission in regard to the termination allowance. That recommendation says that the allowance shall consist of a portion of the value of the good will. In my amendment it is proposed that the compensation shall include an amount equal to the value of the good will of the business. To a small proprietor, Mr. Chairman, the good will may well represent the sum of the person's savings. It could very well be a very substantial portion of the savings that are accrued to the proprietor in that business, and I think that with the other provisions in the bill on assessment of good will, there is no reason why the compensation payable on account of good will should not be equal to the total of the assessment of good will.

I hope the Attorney General will find it possible to accept this amendment. I do not believe it has been given consideration in the legal bills committee, but while there is still time this evening perhaps he can consent to its acceptance.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Halton West.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Halton is speaking, I wonder if I could see the amendment?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Halton West will proceed.

Mr. Peacock: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, I had thought I had sent copies across—

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman is sending a copy to the hon. Attorney General now.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure just what the amendment of the hon. member for Windsor West amounts to, but if I understand his remarks correctly, instead of the decision being left to the board as to whether or not it would be feasible for the owner to relocate, I believe the hon. member suggested that decision should be left to the owner or the proprietor of the business. I was wondering if this decision was left in the hands of the owner, how would you prevent, for example, that owner at some later time relocating his business and starting up again? Would you require him to sign an agreement not to go into business again? If he has collected under this section the benefit for the value of good will, does this mean he is precluded and excluded from carrying on business in another location in that community?

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, in answer to what I think is a question, I do not think any exclusion or prevention of the owner-proprietor who has cashed out his good will, claiming he will not recommence business, has anything to do with it. Once he has obtained the compensation under subclause 2 for the recognition of the good will of his business, he is entitled to do what he pleases. If he wishes, at some later date, to get into business again, what claims does he have on the land compensation board? And why should he have to make any commitment not to carry on? Should his health improve, and should his compensation still be intact, and should he decide that that provides him with the means of re-establishing himself, why not let him do so without restraint?

I am suggesting in the amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I think I set it out rather clearly, that the determination of whether or not it is feasible for the owner to relocate should not be under the discretion of the board, but that of the expropriated owner himself.

Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I am submitting that the owner's argument, regardless of who has the final decision, would be to the effect that he is not able to relocate and therefore he gains an added compensation because of that. In fact, he sells his business including the good will and then, 'if in a few months' time, because the decision was left with him, he is able to relocate and start the same business again, in my opinion that is an extra charge on the public purse which should not be allowed to him, and that is why I say that the decision should be left with the board.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, if I might reply to that; I do not see it as an extra charge. As I said in my first round of remarks, the Attorney General may wish to comment on this. I believe that in subclause 1, clause 19, it is provided that account will be taken of the losses of a businessman where he is willing to relocate. In some form or another, account is going to be taken of the loss of good will, where he is willing to relocate, because that loss of good will will be reflected perhaps in reduced earnings in his new establishment, or higher costs reducing the income that he would have normally derived in the former location, so I do not see it at all as an extra charge.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, at first blush, I must say that personally I felt that I was attracted to the argument made by the hon. member for Windsor West, but I sway towards the hon. member for Halton West for a moment. I am wondering if you would permit that I direct a question to the hon. member for Halton West, or rather for Windsor West. Perhaps I am missing a point.

Suppose the man's good will was assessed at $10,000—the good will of his business as a going concern—and he said of his own volition, as you visualized, "I am now going out of business". There is no partial dislocation here, so we have given him out of the public purse the maximum availability for his good will, saying in effect: "You are now going to terminate your business and all the good will that accrues to it, and we are going to compensate you for that."

Is it not open to him, as the hon. member for Halton West suggests, to recommence the business three months later? So he has been compensated for a complete cessation and deprivation of good will that really will reaccrete to him to a certain extent—perhaps not fully, but to a certain extent—three months hence.

Mr. Peacock: I have certain particular situations in mind and I know they have been discussed by the hon. member for Riverdale in connection with redevelopment in Trefann and Don Mount, where there simply does not arise the suggestion that a proprietor of a small business is going to re-establish himself with any ease at all; he is going to be in an extremely difficult position. Again, as the Attorney General suggested, this may take us rather a long way down the road, but most of the people affected by subclause 2, as it now stands or as it may be amended, are going to find themselves in the position of those owner-proprietors discussed on page 38 of the law reform commission, and who, the law reform commission said, should have the discretion to declare whether or not they wish to continue in business and should therefore receive in their compensation some recognition of the loss of good will.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would my hon. friend agree, Mr. Chairman, that his amendment is susceptible to the abuse contemplated by the hon. member for Halton West?

Mr. Peacock: Yes, Mr. Chairman, in the same degree that the Attorney General has admitted that some provisions are—

Mr. Bullbrook: I agree.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, subsection 2, which this amendment offered by the hon. member for Windsor West is designed to replace, is premised clearly on the foundation that this is going to be a termination allowance where there is not going to be relocation, where for one reason or another it is not feasible or practical for the owner who is dispossessed to relocate. That is right in the subsection that we have in the Act. It is in the subsection which the hon. member proposes in his amendment:

Where a business is located on the land expropriated and the owner of the business decides it is not feasible to relocate the business . . .

In that case, the compensation shall include an amount equal to the value of the good will of the business. Our subsection 2 uses the same language—"it is not feasible for the owner to relocate"—that is the premise it is based on, and it says the board "may", in determining compensation, include an amount, not including the value of the good will.

The hon. member says the compensation shall include an amount equal to the value of the good will; they are not really so very far apart. Our amendment says, "The board may include an amount not exceeding the value of the good will," and, as I say, the hon. member's amendment says, "Compensation shall include an amount equal to the value of the good will." But both his amendment and the present section contemplate no relocation. I think the hon. member for Halton made a very cogent argument, that you could be leading right into a situation where you would have double compensation, because you have no assurance as to the future. This is premised on the fact that there is going to be no relocation, and that fact we take as a base for compensation on the basis of good will. If you are going to say "put no safeguard around that," you could be paying twice. There certainly could be advantage taken of it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Everyone would take advantage of that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think so; I think I would have to reject the amendment.

An hon. member: What about the rights of the individual now?

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Peacock's motion will please say "aye". Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it. I declare the motion lost. Section 19 will form part of the bill.

Sections 20 to 24, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 25:

The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. Attorney General did expect me to rise in this connection, because we did not have a meeting of minds relative to this section at the last meeting of the committee. It is relative to subsection 2, sir, that I am bothered.

I would move that section 25 (2) be amended by adding after the word "report" in the second line, the words "or reports", and adding after the word "report" in the last line the words "or reports".

Mr. Chairman, I suggest this amendment because of what seems to be an obvious difficulty that could arise, and that is, that the expropriating authority could avail itself of more than one report at this particular time of the proceedings. And yet, in making their offer, they are only called to substantiate that with one report.

For the purposes of example, perhaps I exaggerate, but I put it to you that if there is an offer made to the expropriatee of $10,000, and this is supported by an appraisal report of $10,000, but also at the same time the expropriating authority has a second appraisal report that recommends the value at $18,000, in effect the situation would be that if the expropriatee does not want to continue on—albeit I agree that at this time he has had the opportunity of availing himself of his own expert opinions—but if in point of fact he does not want to continue on to the ultimate tribunal envisaged under this statute, then you have the possibility of a authority on the basis of one appraisal report as disclosed. They full well know that another qualified appraiser hired by them has appraised the subject property much in excess of the one report they released.

I feel here that there must be full disclosure called for by the expropriating authority to the expropriatee in substantiating the offer.

Now the Attorney General before the committee had said, and he will correct me if I misquote him, that the expropriating authority would be foolish not to make available the larger of the reports because, in point of fact, when they come before the tribunal at that time, they would be making this available and public knowledge.

The point that concerns me, as I mentioned before, Mr. Chairman, is the possibility it might never get to the ultimate tribunal. So I suggest here, in this connection, that we should assure the expropriatee that the offer made to him is a reasonable one. If, in point of fact, we have two appraisals, one of $10,000, one of $18,000 then the logical thing that we can assume is the expropriating authority will make an offer somewhere around $14,000 or something of that nature. They do not necessarily have to. They can make the offer of $10,000 but at least we made sure under this statute that the expropriatee knows that the expropriating authority has a further valuation much in excess of their offer.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I fully support the member for Sarnia. I did in committee. I think that the full disclosure principle should be operative here. It could avoid grave injustices and I would urge again upon the Attorney General to revamp that clause.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand why the Attorney General resisted this logical, reasonable change. Because in one aspect of his character he pretends to be the great liberal—small I liberal, and I would not put a capital on it. He is generous. He is kind; he is sympathetic.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): He has never said that in this House; never said it.

Mr. Singer: I could get along much better in this debate, Mr. Chairman, without the opinions of the House leader. The Attorney General and I can get along very well in this, and we can get on with this debate if the House leader will just leave us alone. We will get the Act through tonight.

But I am really surprised, Mr. Chairman, that the Attorney General would not accept as logical a thing as this. Because one of the principles, and it is a good one, that he has is that there shall be disclosure.

Why does he not go the whole hog? Why does he not really accept what he has almost said in another half dozen sections? Why does he not accept the reasonable amendment proffered by my colleague from Sarnia?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We did discuss this, Mr. Chairman, at very considerable length in committee and I thought we had almost reached a consensus. Apparently, we did not.

Mr. Singer: Not quite.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The offer of the expropriating authority has to be made within a prompt time and it has to be based upon a report which must be furnished. Now it is all together likely, I think, that other reports, other appraisals might be made and received by the expropriating authority. But my thinking is that you get the offer forward on the appraisal which you have received, and if you were to accept the amendment and put in "report" and add the words "on reports", it seems to me that later on, if you do get another appraisal and you have not used it as a basis of your offer, you are going to be charged with having got a low appraisal, perhaps, for the first round. Then you have got something else which you kept in your hip pocket—

Mr. Bullbrook: You are supporting my argument.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would support it up to this extent. I think that is what is going to happen when you put the expropriating authority in an invidious position, as if it were hiding something or was planning to get something later that may vary its first position.

Now if this is so, if other reports are obtained and I think very well they might be—properly, should be—they will have to be brought to light if the matter goes to arbitration or before the land compensation board. But this section is designed as a basis to get forward the offer on which the expropriating authority says, "this much we will pay."

We have an appraisal as to what we consider the market value. We add these other items called for by the legislation and then there is a right of refusal or negotiation or whatever.

I think that is enough. To say "more reports" I think could—I will not say it would in every case—but I think it could cause confusion and some doubt as to whether the expropriating authority—as it moves along, as it gets additional information of value—must submit every bit of it to the owner. I do not think that is the intention. The intention is to get the business underway with the offer based on an appraisal report I would not like to see those words go in. I see some merit in the amendment and I see some merit in the argument which supports it but I see, on the other side of the scale, consequences which I think outweigh those which favour it. I have to reject it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Might I say, most respectfully, I do not believe, frankly, that you have either your heart or your mind in your own position tonight. Really, I think you are more attracted to our position. However, I may well be wrong but might I say—I am just wondering if you would direct yourself to the question.

Here you have got an equation that is bothering you. You are saying, in effect, you are going to put an obligation on the authority here to disclose all the information they have in their hands at the time. Now the amendment that I suggest to you, Mr. Attorney General, in no way restricts the authority from going ahead and getting additional reports; we come to that in a further section. Right?

An hon. member: Right.

Mr. Bullbrook: So they are not restricted one tittle. All we are saying, in effect, is if they have got more than one report, the expropriatee is entitled to know both of them. But does not this invite the very—you talk about insidious or perhaps it was invidious?—but does it not invite the very insidious thing that we are trying to do away with? Disclosure must be made. It has to be made.

This is the entire backbone of this legislation. We are now saying in effect to the people of the province of Ontario "From now on, our fellow citizens, the expropriating authorities, must tell you and they must be fair to you." And yet, this is the only section that remains where we do not compel them to do that.

An hon. member: Not full disclosure.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I was content to let my colleagues carry the burden of debate on this bill but I am afraid that this little exchange has provoked me into it.

One of the exasperating features of our experience with expropriation has been the guessing game and the inevitable horse-trading kind of approach to expropriation or settlement of expropriation, and I think this is what has bedevilled the picture more than anything else. That is the reason why I reacted so favourably to the full disclosure aspect of this bill. And I, along with the hon. member for Sarnia, and others, am a little puzzled as to why the Attorney General, at this stage, is not willing to live up to the basic principle which I think has motivated the rest of this bill.

Let me try to illustrate it with an experience I happen to have had first-hand contact with recently, to indicate how you are going to defeat the objective that motivated your bill if you do not have full disclosure of all of the particular appraisals that may have been got. I have been rather intrigued, in talking to lawyers who are engaged in assisting people who have to cope with expropriation to discover the extent to which there are consistent variations among appraisers. I do not suggest that they are people without the full integrity of their professional responsibility, but some achieve a reputation of being a low appraiser or a high appraiser, or a middle bracket appraiser, lawyers have them categorized. Indeed, a lawyer will say, "Well, now, just a minute, I want to get an appraisal to counter the one that has been offered by the expropriating authority". And he will pick his appraiser, as some lawyers pick their judge, if they can, knowing that they might get a more favourable judgment because of his inclinations.

That being the case—and I do not think that can be disputed—what the Attorney General has done is leave the door open for an expropriating authority to play the same old game, in a somewhat different way. For example, when they are going to seek the price that they will offer, they make a point of having one appraiser, who has the reputation of coming in with the $10,000 appraisal—to follow the example that was cited by the hon. member for Sarnia—and they get another appraiser who will come in with a more generous figure at $18,000.

But your bill will permit the expropriating authority to engage in the same old horse trading, the same old refusal to disclose and put all information on top of the table and the net result will be that it will perpetuate the kind of attitude we have had in the province of Ontario with full justice up until now, of people saying, "Well, I cannot really have confidence in the offer that has been made to me because experience suggests that these people are going to operate in the old fashion and present me with a horse-trading low-offer to begin with and I would be a sucker if I were to accept it."

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): What does the member propose?

Mr. MacDonald: What I propose is this, that if the expropriating authority sees fit to get two reports rather than one or even to get three or four reports, let them put them all on the table—

Mr. Kerr: Even if they are ridiculous?

Mr. MacDonald: Even if they are ridiculous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If one appraisal is $10,000—they have gone to professionals in the field and they have a $10,000 appraisal. But they may have an $18,000 offer, they may have a $15,000 offer—so they have to choose, they have to make up their mind when they have this diversity, they have to choose what their offer will be. But if they make an offer, in face of a 10, 15 or an 18 thousand appraisal, if they make an offer of, say, 15,000, the person whose property is being expropriated is going to say, "Well, that looks rather fair, one man said 10, one man said 18, and you are offering me 15." I think he is likely to respond positively to that kind of offer.

But, if he learns over the years, as he has learned on the basis of past experience with expropriation, that the first offer is not one to be trusted—and this is what worried me about this section. This section makes it possible to perpetuate the old procedure, of starting with an offer that is lower than you think you really will ultimately have to pay. So, let it be all on top of the table with all the reports and appraisals available, and if the expropriating authority wants to be ornery from that point forward, ultimately it will go to the board and get a decision, then, fine, the expropriating authority will have to take the consequences.

On occasion it will find that the board will not agree with the $18,000 offer, it will stay with to the $14,000 offer. It may even be like that man down in Glengarry who, in a highway appropriation took it through to the final court and discovered that he got four or five thousand dollars less than he was originally offered by The Department of Highways.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: The member's proposal would not stop them from picking the lower figure.

Mr. MacDonald: This is true. Both the member for Sarnia and my colleague indicated that subsequent courts can deal with subsequent appraisals and what shall be done with them.

All we are talking about is that the initial offer—let them make available all of the appraisals available at that time. Now, if it goes on for a long time, other appraisals may come into the picture and we will have to deal with them in the subsequent sections of the bill.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I will not go very much longer on this part of the section but it is a very important section, this matter of disclosure, and I am sure the hon. Attorney General will find support from the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, who has been very strong on this matter of full disclosure. Disclosure, whether a seller or a buyer, whether it is annual reports or whether it is prospectuses, this is a very important thing, and when you have something that is so basic as appraisals, appraisals that have been done by those selected as competent by the expropriating authority, I feel those reports should definitely be included and made available at this early stage of the proceeding.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, the experience I have had in the matter of expropriation, it is not great, but I have had some, and it seems to me that one of the big problems with expropriating authorities is the fact that sometimes they can play one landowner against another landowner, and this works to the disadvantage of all concerned.

In the one case the expropriating body will go to the landowner and say, "Your neighbour down the road has agreed to take so much for his property, we think that your property is of comparable value so therefore we suggest that you take our offer." In actual fact, in many cases at least, the offer which has been given to the neighbour down the road is substantially higher than was indicated in the second instance.

I think this is a real problem and I think the Attorney General, being the fair-minded man that he is, will realize that if the expropriating body is fair and is being honest and open and frank about the whole matter, that they will welcome this type of disclosure. I suggest to the Attorney General that it is a very important amendment and one which I would hope he would accept.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The hon. members opposite are very persuasive but I must say that while I am almost persuaded, I am not persuaded. I must still reject the amendment.

As I pointed out, and it is interesting to note, that this subsection (2) was an amendment we arrived at in committee. This was after discussion in committee and this was an amendment I think put forward by hon. members opposite, some of them, in the committee, and we accepted it. We had discussion upon it.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, no, but I took this position in committee.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Perhaps the member did, but this is what the committee has reported back to this House in any event.

Mr. Singer: That is not conclusive.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): What is the use of having committees?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, I do not say it is conclusive, but I think it is persuasive that this committee, having considered this matter, came back with this amendment. This is a new section in this Act, a new subsection, the work of the legal bills committee. And I suggest you might have suggested it. But I repeat my argument, if I may briefly, that the purpose of this subsection, the purpose of this section really, up to this point at least, was to provide a basis upon which the expropriating authority might make an offer and we have legislated here; we have proposed in this legislation that it shall be based upon an appraisal report. I have said this; if you add the words which seem perhaps harmless and perhaps seem meritorious, better expressions or this, "or reports", I think you do things that you perhaps are not contemplating at this moment. You would say to the expropriating authority having got an appraisal, "if you get any more, or if you have any more"; it does not say, "those that you have in your hands at this time," it does not say that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No it does not. It does not say that. It just says "shall furnish an offer upon report or reports", now—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, on the line of this section, I am sure an owner might say, if he got one for a lesser amount or a greater amount later on, "You had that information, and you should have let me have it too." I think that the expropriating authority must have the right to go out and get additional information as it sees fit, or to have information at hand.

I would like to direct your attention, if I might for a moment, to section 29, and I make a point of this, that if this matter of compensation comes to a hearing before the board, then, and at that time under section 29, every report upon which the parties intend to rely, those upon which they intend to rely, must be before that board.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: All right, if he settles, that is fine. Do not forget also that in this Act we have provided that costs including legal and appraisal costs shall be paid to the owner if he reached within 85 per cent of what is offered. If the expropriating authority put forward an offer which is inadequate, and it must know these new provisions in this Act, then it is likely to be fixed with all the costs if it has not disclosed fair and reasonable information in making its offer. I think we have put extra safeguards in this Act, in the matter of payment of costs. You are not going to find expropriating authorities trying to make offers which fall short of what is reasonable and proper, because in such case they are going to be fixed with the costs of the owner in total.

I do not think I can add anything more about that matter; that is my feeling.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the merits of my amendment, but relative to what has been mentioned, that this is a new section recommended by the legal bills committee, may I suggest that this be recorded: We in the Opposition voted against it; and secondly, the legal bills committee, of course to a certain extent, can be an instrument of government intention, since the majority of members are members of the government side.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I must point out for the record, it was offered by the Opposition members.

An hon. member: Oh no.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think so.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, let me correct that. Let me read to the Attorney General the amendment that we did offer. It is amendment No. 19, which was presented, and it was to add to section 25 (2) at the end thereof the following:

Provided that if the authority intends to rely on more than one appraisal report, it shall serve copies of all such reports relied upon on the owner at such time.

With great respect, that is the amendment that we put forward. My colleague from Sarnia has perhaps improved upon the legal phraseology but certainly the intent is exactly the same. That is the amendment we put forward. It was rejected by the majority of the committee, and this came in a sort of a compromise. If the Attorney General suggests that we accepted this or that we put it forward, with great respect to the Attorney General, that is just not what happened last night.

Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come to say this. I have heard from the House leader, from the Minister of Correctional Institutions and earlier from the member for Kingston that there was no point in having a legal bills committee unless we accepted every decision that it made. Let me say, as was said earlier in this debate, that the legal bills committee functions, I think, very effectively. It winnowed down from the 30-odd amendments that we presented, and from the 20-odd amendments that our colleagues here presented, a minimum of amendments that are being presented here tonight. And I think it did a very useful and effective function. It was illustrative of the functioning of this Legislature at its best.

But, Mr. Chairman, if the attitude of certain members on the government side is going to be that all of the available opportunities for debate are going to be denied because there might have been an earlier one, then let me say, sir, that we could have, and perhaps we will on a subsequent occasion, fight every single one of these amendments over again on as many opportunities as we get, and force a division of the House on every opportunity that we get, in order that we would drive our points home.

We thought, in the official Opposition—and I am sure that I am not putting words in the mouths of my colleagues here on the left, they thought as well—that by working the concentrated period of time, I think it ran more than 14 hours, in our sorting these things out, and coming to a series of reasonable compromises, we were advancing a sense of achievement that could be gained by intelligent discussion of this bill. But, if certain members of the government are going to hurl back at us that we are repeating or delaying or lobbying or filibustering, then sir, we are going to do it, because there are certain points we want to achieve. The House leader is doing exactly the thing that I am complaining of, and I would not now be making these remarks if the House leader had not proved himself to be thoroughly obnoxious during this whole debate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: All right, I will take the advice of the member for York South.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: I suggest very simply, sir, that the amendment offered by my colleague for Sarnia makes abundant good sense. I urge its acceptance by the Attorney General.

Mr. Chairman: We are dealing with a motion proposed by the hon. member. The hon. Minister is replying to the—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, maybe an example will bring home my thinking more than I have been able to make it clear in my remarks. Supposing we would accept the amendment proposed, let us say the expropriating authority gets three appraisals, I would say one of $45,000, one of $50,000, and one of $60,000. It is, I am sure, in our experience, quite usual for appraisers to differ by at least that amount, maybe much more. The expropriating authority comes up with an offer, which it thinks is fair and reasonable and even generous, of $55,000. Do you think for one moment, with all those appraisals having been disclosed, that there is likelihood of settling for $55,000?

No. I think that that owner will hold out, and will hold out for $60,000, and carry it to the ultimate degree. He feels that there is an appraisal of that amount and he will try to prove it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Anyway I cannot see the amendment. I do not think it will serve the purpose for which it is intended. I appreciate that it is offered sincerely, and with belief that it has merit.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Bullbrook's motion, will please rise.

Those opposed to Mr. Bullbrook's motion, please rise.

The "ayes" are 31, the "nays" 46.

I declare the motion lost.

Section 25 agreed to.

Sections 26 to 29 agreed to.

On section 30, I believe there is an amendment.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, with respect to section 30, I move that section 30 of the bill be amended by adding the following subsection:

(4) The board may prepare and periodically publish a summary of such of its decisions and the reasons therefor as the board considers to be of general public significance.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Sections 30 to 32 agreed to.

On section 33:

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I move that section 33 be amended in subsection (1) by changing the figure "90" to "85", and in subsection (2) the figure "90" to "85".

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: May I ask whether what we had written down was agreed upon in committee and that it was a misprint in the printing that it was overlooked?

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amended section 33 form part of the bill?

Section 33 agreed to.

On section 34, the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I move that we amend section 34, subsection (1) number (4) in the sixth line thereof by deleting the words "a rate exceeding six per cent per year, but not exceeding 12 per cent per year", and inserting the words "average NHA rate of interest in force on the date of expropriation, to the date of payment".

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to see that the hon. Attorney General did put more flexibility than was originally in that clause. But I suggest that we should give some guidance to the board in this case, as to what rate of interest should apply. I did some investigation to try to work out or get a standard which would be fair under the circumstances. Although the other night we discussed possibly using the bank rate—the prime bank rate, or something of that sort—really the rate that applies in this instance is the mortgage interest rate because, probably, the funds are required for the purchase of real estate. The NHA rate in this case would, therefore, perhaps be the fairest and easiest criterion to use.

It would be quite simple because it is a standard rate recognized and published and available and can be calculated for so many days at one rate. As it is adjusted it can be changed and the amount of interest can be calculated quite readily when the board makes this award. After all, it is only going to be used where there has been evidence of undue delay on the part of the expropriating authority, but I do feel it will probably compensate the person whose property is being expropriated for cost that he would be incurring during this period.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the hon. member is that section 34, subsection 4, be amended in the sixth line thereof by deleting the words "a rate exceeding six per cent a year but not exceeding 12 per cent a year" and inserting the following words "the average NHA rate of interest in force from the date of expropriation to the date of payment".

Mr. Chairman: Order! Just a moment, Mr. Attorney General. May I point out that my copy of the bill includes those words at the fifth line.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The sixth line in the—

Mr. Chairman: Fifth line in the bill, sir.

Mr. Deacon: It is fifth and sixth.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mine just says sixth but I take it should include also the fifth.

The intent, anyway, is clear and I would note that the hon. member's amendment does not refer to the interest rate in subsection 1, which is six per cent—a fixed rate—but does refer to the subsection 4. My thinking here is that the amendment should not be accepted, because in the first place I suppose the board can determine a rate just as well whether it is a floating rate—the NHA rate—because that can be determined.

But the intent of subsection 4 is that this is in the nature of a penalty to be imposed against the expropriating authority where there has been delay on its part. Therefore there is room to move between six per cent up to 12 per cent, to make the expropriating authority aware that delay may cost money.

I think it is a good idea to have in this subsection something which could be used as a whip to encourage prompt action and as a penalty if there is delay, which I think is better than having a set rate which does not vary. This is a penalty and that is the thinking behind this subsection; I think it is a better and more logical approach than would be contemplated by this amendment. I would reject the amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, we are opposed to the change, I believe, over here. In committee it was discussed and at various interest rates. As the Attorney General says, six has stuck through subsections 1 and 2;

one half of one per cent above the current NHA rate was talked about as being fairly flexible formula. I think this amendment gets into undue complications and removes the element of doubt that may very well exist in the penalization aspect of the thing.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, unfortunately I did make an error in saying it was subsection 4. I had it originally as subsection 1, and why I changed it at the last minute was because I did intend this change to be made in subsection 1 because of the fact that the flexibility of the NHA rate would compensate for the difference in economic and cost-of-money conditions. I felt that the six per cent is too rigid and that we should try to make this legislation so that it will be more enduring.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye"; those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

I declare the motion lost and section 34 carried.

Sections 34 to 42 agreed to.

On section 43; the hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this was an objection that we put forward yesterday concerning the ability of the expropriating authority to dispose of excess land. It often happens whether by design or by accident—and let us hope most frequently it is by accident—that the expropriating authority takes more land than it actually needs. The purpose of this section is to direct the first opportunity to repurchase that land back to the person from whom the land was taken, and that is a good principle. However, the fault in principle is the saving and accepting clause that unless the expropriating authority deems otherwise it shall not be done.

So that where an expropriating authority, for reasons of its own, might decide that the person from whom the land was taken (if there is an excess of land taken) shall not have the opportunity of first refusal on a resale then the expropriating authority can say "we are going to use it for another purpose".

I do not know how many members of this House are familiar with the Critchel Down case, which was the classic case in England, where the government were almost defeated because they had acted just in this manner that we are discussing. The government, during the war, had taken a large piece of land for a certain purpose and found after the war was over they did not need all of the land. Instead of directing it back to the owner who still wanted it, they transferred it to another government department which was able to use it for different purposes and to substantially profit from the fact that excess land was kept by government and not returned to the owner.

Now that certainly resulted in the dismissal and defeat of a Cabinet minister, and almost resulted in the dismissal of the whole government. It would seem to me that this government should lean over backwards to avoid the possibility of such an eventuality. Therefore, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the discretion, and I recognize that there are difficulties in insisting that on every occasion an offer be made back, but that the discretion rather than being left with the approving authority be given to the Attorney General.

For these reasons I would move that section 43 be amended by deleting the words "without the approval of the approving authority" and substituting the words "without the approval of the Attorney General". I think this makes abundant good sense, that the Attorney General will have the discretion when this eventuality arises of waiving the necessity of offering it back to the person from whom the land was taken, but that it not be at the behest of the approving authority.

I think the Attorney General as the first law officer of the Crown must be trusted with this kind of responsibility. It should not rest on the shoulders of the approving authority. I think this makes good sense. It is a change to what we suggested last night, and I think it is a reasonable change, and I would hope the Attorney General will accept this new line of thought.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I am also bothered by the last line of that particular section which speaks of the "terms of the best offer received by the expropriating authority". We all hope that this Act is going to be properly exercised but as worded the situation could arise where an expropriating body can refuse to sell land which was taken in excess of the need of the expropriating body to the person to whom it was taken, and offer it to another person for a higher sum.

I suggest that if land was taken from the owner (a) and more land was taken than necessary, then the land—the surplus land at least—ought to be returned to the former owner (a) at the same price for which it was expropriated. I do not believe anyone else ought to have the right to offer the expropriating authority a larger sum for the land than that which was paid to the party from whom it was expropriated.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether I can move an additional amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Downsview, and I take my seat and ask for your guidance.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber was not speaking to the motion before us?

Mr. Ben: Yes, I was speaking to the proposed amendment to—

Mr. Chairman: You are speaking to section 43, but not the amendment.

Mr. Ben: I am on section 43. I am suggesting that the hon. member's amendment should have gone further than it did, and I am asking guidance of you, Mr. Chairman, whether or not I can move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Well I see no reason why the member cannot. If he will provide the chair with a new amendment including not only the original amendment, but his additional amendment.

Mr. Ben: Oh. All right. All I would add is that the section be further amended by deleting the words "terms of the best offer received by the expropriating authority" and substituting therefor the words "same terms as that on which the lands were obtained from the party expropriated".

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the votes would be taken in order—the amendments one by one, or whether they would be placed together.

Mr. Chairman: I think we will take the amendment to the amendment then we will place the amendment. We are just waiting for the written amendment to the amendment. Perhaps I should put the motions before the House so—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We want it explained what the whole deal is all about.

Mr. Chairman: I will just put the two motions. Mr. Singer has moved that section 43 be amended by deleting the words "without the approval of the approving authority" and substituting the words "without the approval of the Attorney General".

Mr. Ben has moved that section 43 be further amended by striking out the words following the word "the" in the second last line and substituting the following: "On the same terms as that on which the lands were obtained from the party expropriated".

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: That is not a further amendment, Mr. Chairman, it is another amendment. It is not further to the first amendment. It is a distinct amendment. There are two separate amendments here—not an amendment of an amendment. They are mutually exclusive.

Mr. Chairman: No, we are going to deal with the second amendment to the motion first.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, somebody from there echoed the question, what about the improvements to the land? This section speaks of surplus land, and it raises the presumption that being surplus it was not improved because it was not needed for the purposes of improvement or for the original purpose for which the land was expropriated. I said there is a presumption. I would suggest that the hon. member listen.

The fact remains that the situation could arise where more land is expropriated from an owner than is needed. There is another owner adjacent to the expropriated owner who would like to have a piece of that land, and it would be rather simple for a government to expropriate the first owner, take the land it did need for its purpose, and then offer it to the adjacent owner at a price which it knew the original owner could not meet. Now why should that happen?

If the government, as an expropriating body, takes more land than is needed for its purpose I say it is morally bound and should be legally bound to offer that land back to the original owner for the price for which it took it from him.

An hon. member: It will be.

Mr. Ben: It will be, because according to this it says that the original owner must match the best terms or best offer received by the expropriating authority. If, Mr. Chairman, you take your mind back to a Mrs. Burgess who owned some land which was desired by a company named Greenwin Construction, this one woman, with her husband, had actually put together the bricks and the mortar which erected that house.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: At least I am proving that on this side we can still stand on our own feet.

Anyway, this company tried to acquire this property from the woman and she refused to sell because she did not want to sell. She wanted to spend her remaining years in the house that she and her husband had, with their own sweat and muscle, put together. As it turned out she did own that house until the day she died. They proceeded to build around her.

But you can see what could happen with an unscrupulous government, when the government was fascist, for instance. They could expropriate more than was necessary to be in a position to sell the surplus to a friend of theirs who tried to buy the property from the original owner but the original owner was not willing to sell. He had to sell to the expropriating authority because the expropriating authority had the power to expropriate.

Mr. Kerr: What about the sections dealing with necessity?

Mr. Ben: I am proving that you have got to be careful about this government and make sure that they cannot pull anything sneaky, so you have got to look at every little dot and make sure that every "t" is crossed and every "i" is dotted.

An hon. member: Why not visit the committee?

Mr. Ben: Well, I am afraid I was not put on a committee this year with such a distinguished counsel like yourself to look after it, and it appears that you are up to it.

This is why I move this amendment. I say that government should be morally and legally bound to offer the land to the party from which it was expropriated at the same price at which it was expropriated. If you are talking about interest and improvement, the government expropriating authority ought to be shrewd enough to take only that which is needed.

Mr. Kerr: They cannot take any more.

Mr. Ben: Do you see the asinine remarks that come from over there, Mr. Chairman? If they cannot take any more, you could have this section in to cover the situation where you do take more.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: You are all in a fog.

Mr. Ben: Oh for goodness sake, you have been out there in the fog so long you cannot even find your way to the Chamber.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General has a comment on the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where did the hon. member have his dinner tonight?

Mr. Ben: What makes you think I had dinner?

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might be permitted to speak to both the amendments since they refer to the same section?

I would like to deal first with the amendment moved by the member for Downsview. The words which he asked to be deleted, "without the approval of the approving authority", are put in there for a safeguard. I know he substitutes "the Attorney General", which would have the same effect. We did discuss this also—as I am sure the hon. member will recall—in committee, at some length. The deletion of the words "requiring the approval of the approving authority"—

Mr. Singer: At that time without any—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Right. Not the expropriating authority, the approving authority, which may be the same but not necessarily the same.

Mr. Singer: It should not be that way.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Could we direct our minds to this situation, Mr. Chairman: If property is expropriated and it is found after a lapse of time—it may be months, it may be a year, it may be a number of years as is often the case in highway situations—that some of the land originally taken for a right-of-way—which may go half a mile this way or half a mile that way, so a large area is expropriated—is not required, in the meantime, the land will have changed in value. Original owners may have gone.

I think the policy which the hon. member for Downsview mentioned, which almost brought down the government in Britain, was a denial of the principle which we have included in this section. That is, if the land should not be required we have put in this Act that it shall be offered back to the owner.

Mr. Singer: Except that it can be waived by the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But with this safeguard. I say we come to this situation: Let us say for a moment that five, six, ten years have elapsed. This section calls for an offer to the owner, that is the owner from whom it was expropriated. That owner has gone, he has died, he has moved. The property may have been sold a number of times.

It may be impossible, or it may be unreasonable to expect—and I think in many cases it would be a very onerous task—to find the owner. Therefore the safeguard to remove that necessity, called for by this section, of offering it back to the owner from whom it was taken, is the approval of the approving authority. In the case of a university, it would be the Minister of University Affairs. He says, "Well, it is unreasonable to expect you to find those owners. I will approve the sale to anybody." And in the case of a highway, it would be the Minister of Highways. His people tell him, "There are 16 owners. Five of them have disappeared from the scene, we cannot find them." Probably the best offers they would get would be from the contiguous owners, or those persons owning that property then adjoining the highway, but not necessarily the original owners who may have gone from the scene. So the safeguard is the approval of the approving authority.

I would not particularly object to the amendment offered by the member for Downsview, except that I think it is onerous for whatever Minister does it. If it is the Attorney General he has then to be informed by the Minister of Highways or the Minister of Education or by the municipality. The municipality of Kenora, let us say, must get in touch with the Attorney General and recite to him all the story about some little expropriation and how there is a piece of land left over which it would like to offer to the owner if he can be found, but he cannot be found and the municipality wants to sell out at the best price for the public purse for the protection of the taxpayers. So they say, "May we sell it?" and they have to recite all the story to the Attorney General and sitting in Toronto he is expected to make that decision.

Now the approving authority there is the municipality and I think that again they are elected persons, they are responsible and responsive, I think, to their electors and they will do what is fair and right within the meaning of this section.

I do not like the thought of again asking one Minister when we think of the various expropriating agencies there are, having to exercise this; I think he would be spending a lot of his time—if he is to be fair and judicial about the matter—reviewing it and getting all the facts, and then making a decision far away from the scene, so I do not like it for that reason. As for the amendment offered by the hon. member for Humber, I cannot for a moment follow his reasoning that you should offer it back at the price at which it was expropriated.

Again let us say ten years have passed and in the natural course of events the property has increased in value, or perhaps it has decreased. This section provides for it to be offered to the public—a price obtained, a bona fide offer obtained, and then the proviso that it be offered to the owners unless the approval of the approving authority is obtained to permit it being sold to somebody else.

I think the public interest deserves that property in those circumstances be sold at the best price obtainable, whether it is to the owner, or whether it is to a member of the public. We have gone a long way here to look after the owner whose property is taken—and I think we have to bear in mind that on the other side of the coin is the public interest which we must also serve. I would reject both amendments, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: I think it goes without saying that we reject out of hand the sub-amendment, if you can call it such, from the hon. member for Humber. Enough said. As to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Downsview, I think we are in favour of it.

In England, this whole matter of approving authority is handled through the office of the Lord Chancellor. He has to censor plays—up until recently at least—and he has a lot of other jobs to do but he finds time to make these petty, numerous and onerous approvals. Now if the Lord Chancellor can do so, perhaps the Attorney General of Ontario might give some consideration to the task.

I suggest that it will not be—your argument may have some validity with respect to the numerousness, the quantity of work that may be involved in some of the earlier occasions touching municipalities—but I suggest it has very little relevance in this context; that the number that would come before you would be relatively small; that it is a case of how to dispose of surplus lands. There may be alternative public purposes for it. Surely you as the chief law officer of the Crown might sit on some disposition of what those alternative purposes might be. It might not be in the same area; it might be public works, it might be a diversity of other departments that could utilize those lands, and you should act, I suggest, as the arbiter over that destiny, and not some local authority.

Secondly, that this very thing points up the difficulty that we had at an earlier time of the authority being invested in the same individual, and that that particular level is not really beholding in the way that you would be beholding in the disposition you make of these lands.

I am wholly in favour of the fact that first opportunity to repurchase is given to the previous owner—if that is possible, and there are, as you pointed out, a number of difficulties in locating him perhaps and in disposing it to him even if he is easily locatable. In the situation that arose in committee last night where a highway was not widened and the 20 feet—the house had been sold off and what not—but the 20 feet in front was given to be re-vested in the previous owner, thereby effectively cutting the man with the house off from his access to the roadway.

We talk in terms of landlocking and what not, and I believe the common law would allow him egress on that in any event, but the fact is, should not you in your high office be the one to determine that, and not some local school board trustee?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I am very appreciative of the statement made by the hon. member for Lakeshore. I would like to be able to quote these words at some future date that express his concern for the common man.

Mr. Chairman, it is a recognized principle that land adjacent to improvements goes up in value by reason of the improvements being brought in. That is, land will go up in value because the government puts a road through a given area—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: (Leader of the Opposition): Or a hydro plant.

Mr. Ben: A hydro plant or a school, or such other improvement. Now if my land today is worth $500 an acre and the government comes in and expropriates all of my land to make an improvement on it, the land might double in value. And if my land happens to be just adjacent to this improvement and the government does not take it, I reap the benefit of that doubling or tripling in value. If the government expropriates the land at $500 per acre they forcibly take it from me and they set a value today of $500 per acre, even though I know that in five or ten years that land may be worth, by virtue of the improvement coming in there, $1,500 per acre, I will only get the $500 per acre. Five or ten years later, according to the people over there to the left, the government may decide they do not want the land—and I would throw out any doggone government that took five or ten years to make up its mind; but I guess they feel that some day they are going to get into power—with them it is going to be quick work, five, ten years.

An hon. member: How many in your party are supporting it.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't fall into slander, George!

Mr. Pilkey: Don't cry!

Mr. Ben: Five to ten years hence, the government says, "Well we made a mistake, we do not need this land," and then they say to me, who still has the adjacent land, "Look, we will give this land back to you for $1,500 per acre." And I say to them, "Well wait a minute fellows. You took this land when you should not have taken it from me; it was surplus to your needs, you took it from me for $500 per acre. If you had not taken this land I would have it today, and it would have been worth $1,500 an acre to me. Now why should I pay you $1,000 an acre more than for what you took it from me for." And they are going to quote the hon. member from Lakeshore, and say, because he said so. Now is this what you consider equitable? I know they do on the left, but is this what you consider equitable?

Now take the other situation with the hon. member from Halton West, and also the hon. Minister of Correctional Services; They echo the question, well what if the land drops in value? Fine, if the person from whom it was expropriated wants it back, let him pay for it what it was taken from him for. Because if he had held the land—if the land had not been taken from him and he had held on to it—on the day that the surplus was offered to him it would have been worth less than what the government paid for it.

Mr. Lawlor: Your own party disagrees with everything you are saying.

Mr. Ben: But for the members of this House to say that they could deliberately take more land than they need and after five or ten years—which is an asinine statement, only worthy of a defrocked Jesuit—to say that they have come to the conclusion that they do not need it—five or ten years later—what a government! And then say you must pay an increased value if you want back what we took forcibly from you. You call that justice? Nonsense!

Mr. Lawlor: You lack both support and conviction.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I do not care if anybody supports the motion or not. I will make my point.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! Order!

Before I place the amendments before the committee I want to make certain that I understand exactly what the intention of the hon. member for Humber was when he made the amendment to the amendment.

Do I understand correctly that the hon. member for Humber intends his amendment to include the amendment of the hon. member for Downsview as well? Because if the second amendment is defeated, the section will carry.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I ask your guidance. I do not recall an amendment of this nature having been offered during my short term in this House, and I ask your guidance.

Mr. Chairman: I believe that the amendment is in order. But I understand that you want the section altered, firstly as suggested by Mr. Singer, plus the additional words.

I am going to put the amendment to the amendment. Then I will put the amendment to both sections.

Mr. Singer: They are two separate amendments; they are not one amendment. They do not modify each other.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: With the concurrence of the House I will place Mr. Ben's motion, which is an amendment that section 43 be amended by striking out the words following the word "the" in the second last line and substituting the following, "on the same terms as that on which the lands were claimed from the party expropriated". That is Mr. Ben's motion.

Under normal circumstances, the position of the House has been that an amendment to the section would carry the section. With concurrence of the House, then, I will further put Mr. Singer's motion.

Those in favour of Mr. Ben's motion please say "aye"; those opposed please say "nay".

I declare Mr. Ben's motion lost.

Those in favour of Mr. Singer's motion please say "aye"; those opposed please say "nay".

I declare Mr. Singer's motion lost.

Sections 43 to 45, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 46:

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, just one question to the Attorney General under this heading. We revamped that at a late hour the other evening and as we run through the sections as to what they include and note what they exclude, a good deal of what they exclude is included in the present Act, The Expropriation Procedures Act and therefore, need not be included here and, therefore, is excluded here. Since that Act, although it is repealed, is kept in force for its procedures there are a lot of antinomies here you see. It is difficult, and I have one question.

Why have you not retained section 24 of the new bill within the confines of this section here? I suggest it would be a benefit. Section 24 has to do with the agreements that may be reached between statutory authorities and people, cutting off the need for all further procedures. They can come to terms.

Why could they not just as easily come to terms, whether they are within the terms of this particular Act or under The Expropriation Procedures Act? It comes to the same thing. The Expropriation Procedures Act does not contain such a provision.

Mr. Singer: Let us deal with that one first.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview wishes to speak to this?

Mr. Singer: Let the Attorney General speak to it.

Mr. Chairman: All right, the hon. the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: In The Expropriation Procedures Act, Mr. Chairman, I think there is a similar section in the Act to section 24. If there is not, I see no reason why section 24 might not be included.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, perhaps our language in the present section 24 is more clear and definite than anything we have in the present Expropriation Procedures Act. But I would have no objection to that being included in the sections that we have noted there.

I would say this that in drafting—redrafting—this section, as the hon. member knows, we have to do it rather hurriedly in the committee. It is an amended section as you will note from the reprint before us.

I would have no objection whatever to having 24 included, Mr. Chairman. I would move that section 24 be added in the last line of section 46; after the figure 23, the figure 24 be inserted.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, before we deal with that motion I am going to try to convince the Attorney General to further amend that amendment by including sections 25 and 29, after the figure 23.

Section 25, if the Attorney General will bear with me and look at that section, deals with an offer, with the furnishing of the appraisal report, the extensions of time and what happens if there is a failure to serve.

Section 29 deals with what happens before there is a hearing before the board. Now let us go over to section 46. If you look at section 46 you make this Act apply except in certain instances after a plan has been filed and before there has been any determination of value or before first steps have been taken.

You should cut it off at that stage. If there has been no agreement on value and there has been no reference of evidence heard before the board or the municipal board or whatever authority it is under The Expropriation Procedures Act, then you are in the position where all that has been done is that the act of expropriation has been completed. The plan has been filed but the parties have not agreed as to a value.

There is still a lack of consensus. If there is that lack of consensus why then should not the provisions in 25 begin to apply? You look at the first line of 25; the first line of 25 says "where there is no agreement as to compensation made between the owner and the authority" and then, certain things happen. The appraisal report should be given; there can be an extension of time, and what happens if there is a failure to serve and so on. Surely that is not in conflict at all with you have set out?

Then look at section 29. Section 29 contemplates how you are eventually going to determine it if the offer is rejected. Then you go before the board, and this is what happens before the board.

Those are procedures and those are important procedures that I think should be made available in those instances, Mr. Chairman, where the parties have not agreed as to compensation and when no hearings have taken place.

Mr. Lawlor: How about the time limit? It is hard to work it in.

Mr. Singer: It may be hard to work in, but I think we have to lean over backwards to try to adjust this thing, because you are trying to put the people who have not settled, or where a hearing has not started, or evidence has not been heard, in the same position as the people who are going to benefit from this Act.

Having come to that position, then surely the people who have not settled, and where there has been no hearing started or finalized or decision reserved, should be entitled to the same kind of benefits as all other people. They should have the privilege of getting offers, supported by evaluation reports, and if they cannot agree on that offer, they should be entitled to cost if they come within the 85 per cent figure or not, and if that fails and they go on to a hearing then they should be entitled to all the benefits of section 29. Surely that makes good sense.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Downsview was good enough some few minutes ago to send me a note—

Mr. Singer: About section 25; I have since added 29.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —to tell me that he was going to suggest that 25 be included. I sent him back a note to say that I thought to include section 25 and section 46 would greatly confuse the situation. Those are not the exact words I used.

Mr. Singer: No, I know, but I will not even quote the exact words.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think he got my meaning. And I still feel that to include section 25 would confuse the procedures which are under way and even on short consideration I can see where to do that would create a lot of difficulty and real practical difficulty, if we were to include 25.

Mr. Singer: Why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Well, because the proceedings in expropriation under the present Expropriation Procedures Act would have reached certain stages which you would either have to retract and start all over again or they would not jibe, if I may use that expression, with the ongoing procedures of this Act.

Mr. Singer: No, but will the Attorney General not agree with me that you have to start with the first line of 25? At that point have you not reached the point where no agreement as to compensation has been made?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: That is right, but a number of things have been done. Perhaps I could pacify the hon. member if I tell him that I am prepared to include 29 because this is the disclosure of reports—

Mr. Singer: All right, good enough.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will compromise with him. I will accept one, I will not accept the other—

Mr. Singer: Okay, we have made a deal.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —Mr. Chairman, and I move therefore, if I may, that the section 46 be further amended by including the figure 29 after 24.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. Attorney General has moved that section 46 be amended to include the figures 24 and 29 after the figure 23.

Motion agreed to.

Section 46, as amended, agreed to.

On section 47:

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Attorney General explain something to me? I discussed this with him privately and there is obviously an answer that has not come through to me. If we are going to continue with the procedures as set forth in The Expropriation Procedures Act where a plan has been filed under section 4, relative to section 46, and we are going to repeal the Act in section 47. This is the point I made to the Attorney General privately last night, and he felt there was an answer to it. Perhaps he could advise me of the answer. Am I making myself clear?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes. I am informed that where you preserve in the section 46, certain procedures under The Expropriation Procedures Act, that you preserve those and that the repeal of the—

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, I see. In other words, the effect of section 46 is to preserve the procedures notwithstanding the repeal of the Act itself?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I understand that to be correct.

Mr. MacDonald: I think I follow that.

Sections 47 to 49, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 5 reported.

Mr. Lawlor: That was not too bad, was it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A historic document.

Mr. Nixon: No, I will not go as far as that.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report one bill with certain amendments.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like to give third reading and Royal Assent to this bill. In view of the fact that with the time available tomorrow it would appear to be impossible to complete the Throne debate, I would suggest that we have a normal Friday sitting starting at 10.30 a.m. tomorrow morning and going until 1 o'clock, and then we will adjourn for the Christmas recess.

I had hoped to complete the Throne debate before the Christmas recess but with the number of members who wish to speak this is impossible, so we will complete it some time in February.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the motion of the hon. Prime Minister is accepted, we would have to have a motion to have the House sit at 10.30 tomorrow, because there is a motion on the books of the House that last Friday and this Friday this House would sit at 10.00 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Perhaps we will leave it as it is. We will sit at 10.00.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): I would ask, Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister mean when he says "the normal Friday" that we will have a private members' hour?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker. We had agreed to dispense with that and we will pick that hour up at some time later in the session.

So in moving the adjournment of the House, I move we adjourn until 10.00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.20 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1968

The House met at 10.00 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that when the House adjourns today it will stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 4, at 2.30 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the last day for presenting petitions for private bills be extended to Tuesday, February 18, 1969; and that the last day for introducing private bills be extended to Tuesday, February 25, 1969; and that the last day for receiving reports from committees and private bills be extended to March 18, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that the amendments would increase the junior judges in Carleton county from one to two, and in York from 10 to 14—the new judges in the county courts.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Attorney General thinks that the county court judges might be handling divorces pretty soon?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we discussed this, I recall, last year when the new divorce Act was about to be brought into effect. It was thought, on the advice of the judges, I believe, that we should have perhaps a year's experience in this new area, with this new Act in the courts that have been used to handling it, before we could ask the county judges to take it on. In the interim, we have had some experience of the new Act. The workload of the county judges has increased very considerably.

There was a recommendation in the report of the law reform commission with respect to mechanics' liens that all that jurisdiction be with the county court judges; and that would have made quite a change, particularly in York county, so there has been no decision yet that we should ask county judges to take on new work by taking on divorce. Perhaps when that time comes I can ask the Minister of Justice to take that into account and get some more judges.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides that the total disability allowance paid to a workman will not be reduced where disability becomes partial, until suitable employment is reasonably available.

THE CHILD WELFARE ACT, 1965

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Child Welfare Act, 1965.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prevent children leaving the province for adoption unless adoption opportunities have been exhausted in Ontario and the adopting home meets Ontario's standards.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the interim report on landlord and tenant law applicable to residential tenancies, submitted by the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

As I have indicated to this House on previous occasions, the Ontario Law Reform Commission had initiated a study concerning the law of property some time ago. While this study was underway it became apparent that it would be most desirable if we devoted a special task force to the study of the problems related to the law of landlord and tenant.

I, therefore, discussed the matter with the chairman of the Ontario Law Reform Commission. A special task force was directed towards this aspect of the law, and the report which I am now tabling represents the results of the study. The report, of course, contains the recommendations of the commission which I now commend to your attention.

I would ask the hon. members to bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that this report deals with the most urgent problems in this area of our law, but the study of the entire area of the law of landlord and tenant will continue and the results of that continuing study will be reflected in the ultimate report on the law of property.

There are 24 recommendations which will be of interest to us all but there are certain of these which are particularly important because of their significance to the tenants of this province, as well as to the landlords.

It is recommended that security deposits should be made unlawful in the future but that the landlord should be permitted to request payment of the last month's rent in advance, on the condition that any sum so paid will be treated as security for the payment of rent only.

Existing security deposits would have to be dealt with on a special basis. But recommendations are made setting forth the manner in which existing security deposits should be dealt with by the parties. These conditions would include such matters as interest being payable to the tenant on the deposit which would have to be returned to the tenant after the termination of the lease. If the landlord should seek to retain all or any part of the security deposit in satisfaction for alleged damage, the landlord would be compelled to commence an action against the tenant for the amount, which would be forfeited within ten days of the date of termination of the lease, unless the tenant consented in writing to forfeit that part of the security.

If the claim was not instituted within the courts within the period of time, then the claim would be deemed to be extinguished.

There are many recommendations which deal with various covenances ordinarily found in leases and I will leave these to be reviewed by you, at your convenience, as you peruse the report.

However, one other major recommendation, which I feel is worthy of special note, is that the commission recommends that municipalities should be authorized to establish, within their discretion, leasehold advisory bureaux. Landlords or tenants having problems arising out of a tenancy could then seek advice at these local offices, and the staff in the office would be authorized to attempt to negotiate the problems which might be thus referred. These offices would in fact be conciliation organizations attempting to negotiate the problems of the landlord and the tenants. It is contemplated that there would be an official in such an office who would deal with rents and who would attempt to negotiate fair and just settlements of disputes relating to rents.

If a rent review officer in such an office was not considered, by the municipal council, to be adequate to deal with the problems in this way, then the municipality should be authorized to establish rent review boards.

These boards would then act on the application of the rent review officer and would re-investigate the cases and make recommendations which would be forwarded to the parties involved. If the landlord did not act in accordance with the recommendations of the board, then the municipal council will be authorized to publish the report.

In the event that these measures do not prove sufficient to resolve the difficulties which are presently encountered in establishing reasonable rents, the commission recommends that consideration might then be given to some more stringent system of control.

The report enlarges upon all of these exceedingly important principles, Mr. Speaker, and while I hesitate to take the time of this House to go into this detail on the report, I did wish to ensure that all the members would have copies of the report, in order that they may consider the proposals during our recess.

I am sure that we will all benefit from a study of the report. Certainly it is the intention of the government to review the recommendations in the light of the existing problems in order that we may come to some conclusion as to what steps, if any, should be taken by this government in bringing recommendations before the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, I wonder if the Minister means, by the last paragraph of his statement, that there has been no decision made as yet as to whether any of the recommendations will be implemented by a statutory change?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that this report has just been received. We have not held this report up, and I think we have been fairly busy in this session of the Legislature. We need to study it, too. The last paragraph means exactly what it says.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I wonder, in clarification of this matter, whether, on the recommendations contained in the interim report—and in drawing the same—you were in consultation with your confrère in connection with housing, and particularly in connection with the Ontario Housing Corporation lease placed before us yesterday. I would trust that in case of repairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member is asking for clarification and he has done so. Now would he let the hon. Minister reply, if he wishes to.

Mr. Lawlor: With deference, Mr. Speaker, there are two points of clarification.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a speech, not asking a question.

Mr. Lawlor: If I may complete my question, Mr. Speaker: The two areas on which I wish the Minister to comment are connected with the repairs clause and with respect to subletting. Both of those cases, I would suggest, with the present leases are as iniquitous as the old—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Is the Minister going to answer?

Mr. Speaker, along the same line, I wonder if I might inquire—

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a question with respect to clarification of the Minister's statement?

Mr. Deans: Regarding the lease that was distributed in the House yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the hon. member is going to ask the hon. Minister a question with respect to clarification of the statement which he has made on tabling this report, he is entitled to do so; but he is not entitled to make a speech about another matter, which he is proposing to do. There are other opportunities for that.

Mr. Lawlor: Could he have sufficient quiet—

Mr. Shulman: Yesterday you allowed the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) to make certain comments about a statement. I do not see why there should be discrimination against other members.

Mr. Speaker: There is no discrimination.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member is not making a statement about the statement which the hon. Minister has tabled. He is making a statement about a certain other document. Now if the hon. member for Wentworth wishes to ask the Attorney General a question of clarification with respect to the statement which he has just made on tabling this report, he is entitled to do so. But if he is going to address questions or a speech to the House or to the hon. Minister with respect to a certain lease form, then he is completely out of order and should not have the floor.

The hon. member has the floor for a question.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will re-word it. Will the provision in this Act covering security deposits affect—

Mr. Singer: There is no Act.

Mr. Deans: Pardon me, pardon me. Will the provision in this statement the Attorney General has just made covering security deposits also take into consideration security deposits requested by the Ontario Housing Corporation in their new lease?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is, perhaps, somewhat confused. What we do here is to present the report of the law reform commission on the area of landlord and tenant law containing a number of recommendations for your study. Now what may come forth in the way of implementation of those recommendations and how it may touch the particular subject of which the hon. member enquired is something that cannot be answered at this moment.

Mr. Deans: On another point of clarification. Does the new—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister had the Speaker's eye first.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): When I distributed that lease last night it was because it was available. That lease is drawn up within the limits of the landlord and tenant—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Is the hon. Minister about to make a statement before the orders of the day? If he is, then the matter could be—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, sir, I was just—

Mr. Speaker: Well, then, the hon. Minister is out of order. The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, to the Attorney General, if I may. Does the new interim report take any cognizance—

Mr. Speaker: Order! This is not a matter of clarification. Clarification means will the hon. Minister explain something which is not clear in the statement, not whether there is something in it or whether there is not.

If the hon. member wishes to ask a question of clarification, he may do so. Otherwise, there is an appropriate place for debating what is, or is not, in the report.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): After he reads the report!

Mr. Lawlor: I will try it another way. Many of us are concerned with the legal status of—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: I wonder if any provision is made for the legal status of tenants groups in the course of this report?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. Minister was able to hear the member, because I did not hear what he said. If the hon. Minister did hear, and it was a proper question, perhaps he would comment. If not—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I did not really hear what he had to say, but I thought I might offer this in addition. Since the commission has been good enough to summarize its recommendations and deals with these points very carefully and succinctly, I would be glad to offer this to the hon. member and I think it might be helpful. I will send it over to him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader of the Opposition has a question from the other day of the Prime Minister?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question is as follows:

Has the Premier received representations from Englehart concerning the closing of the hospital there?

Shall I go ahead with it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Can the Premier explain why the 2,000 people of Englehart are required to raise $264,000 in order to keep their hospital, but the 12,000 people at Kirkland Lake are required to raise only $150,000 to keep their hospital as directed by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission?

Finally, is the Premier aware that the closing of the Englehart hospital would probably mean the closing of the Ontario Northland Railway terminal there?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have not received any such communication from Englehart, and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission informs that it has no recommendation to close the hospital in Englehart. In actual fact there are certain plans being considered to replace the hospital at Englehart, not to remove it.

Our method of financing the cost of hospitals has been that the community itself would be responsible for one third, and I am informed that the preliminary estimates for a new hospital at Englehart are about $1.25 million and the preliminary cost estimate for Kirkland Lake is $6.5 million. So that on this basis the people of Englehart would have to raise $416,666, while the people at Kirkland Lake would have to raise $2,166,666.

Where the $150,000 comes from I really do not know. It may be that it is the portion in Kirkland Lake which is going to be raised by voluntary subscription, other than by the municipality itself; but I really do not know. In light of these questions I think the last portion of the member's question has no significance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister received a night letter from Cesare Chavez, director of the United Farm Workers of America, requesting that grapes sold in Ontario retail outlets be marked as to their country of origin?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, the member's sources of information must be very good. I believe he asked this question yesterday when I was not here. I received the telegram this morning.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There may or may not be some significance in this, I do not know. But in any event the answer to the question is yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber now finds the hon. Minister of Highways in. When they are both in, perhaps he would place that long-awaited question.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Of the Minister of Highways, Mr. Speaker.

Is Lake Shore Road running through the city of Toronto part of Highway 2? If not, when was the designation removed and what is the number of the Order-in-Council?

As Lake Shore Road leads to the Gardiner Expressway, is it deemed an access road?

Hon. G. E. Gomme (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, the answer to (a) is no, and never has been. As a result (b) is answered in the above; and I cannot answer the (c) question until I know which section of Lake-Shore Boulevard he refers to.

Mr. Ben: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question?

Is the Minister aware that the typical green and white signs used by The Department of Highways of the province of Ontario are posted, marking that route as Highway 2?

Hon. Mr. Gomme: Mr. Speaker, in answer to this, I was very interested the other day, and I thought of that myself. I had it looked into and I am advised that there are no signs placed there by the department, saying it is Highway 2.

Mr. Ben: Would the Minister like to come with me and see one?

An hon. member: When did the hon. member put it up?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, the hon. member for Humber was in quick like a bunny. I have both a supplementary question and another question I would like to put to the Prime Minister.

With regard to the question on the receipt of the telegram from Cesare Chavez, I assume the "yes" from the Prime Minister was that he has received the telegram. My supplementary question is: Is the import of the telegram going to be followed through? In other words, are the regulations of The Department of Agriculture and Food, stressing that there should be an indication of origin, going to be implemented now rather than ignored?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) gave rather a full reply to a similar question and I think I would—as far as what the government proposes to do—refer the hon. member to the Minister of Agriculture and Food's statement in this regard. It is on page 691 of Hansard.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Agriculture and Food said that they applied the regulations only if they are in competition with domestic products when the regulation states specifically that the information should be indicated on any product?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I sat here and listened to the Minister of Agriculture and Food's reply and his final comment was, "All I can say is that we will look into the matter." That is what he is doing. That was his answer then and that is the answer this morning.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me. I have another question for the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree) and I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to send a copy of it to the Prime Minister since this is the last day of session. It is a question asking whether or not the Minister has turned anything up in the investigations which I asked for on Tuesday with regard to Phillip Wynn and his unwillingness to return security deposits, even after court judgments. I think, since this is very widespread, that in the next six weeks there should be some action.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has now made the House acquainted with his problem. If he would send a copy of the request to the Prime Minister I am sure it will be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Minister is writing a book.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope there is more in the next book than in the last one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has two questions of the Attorney General and Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Yes, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs:

Has the Minister received by now the report of the Eric Hardy consulting firm in which charges are made that the town of Trenton has used assessment advantages and other illegal methods of attracting industry? If so, what action has been taken?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we now have received the report of the Eric Hardy consulting firm. Perhaps I might review this situation very briefly, for the benefit of the other members of the House and for the record, because the hon. member and I have perhaps been engaged in a dialogue about this for the last several weeks.

In June, 1968, the town council commissioned a study by Mr. Hardy of the land use needs of the municipality in relation to a general consideration of the municipal economy. One of the related issues to the study which Mr. Hardy decided to examine was appraisal of the methods recently employed to obtain industry, including the suitability of their use in future.

The four methods used by Trenton, as reported by Mr. Hardy, are: 1. Town acquisition of land for industrial use re-sold to industry at a fraction of its purchase price; 2. Installation of urban services charged to the general rate rather than benefitting property holders; 3. Forfeiting a reducing proportion of normal taxation in each of the first four years commencing with 80 per cent in the first year and reducing to 20 per cent by the fourth year; 4. The rate of assessment of industrial properties is light by comparison with assessments placed upon residential properties.

The report then went on to point out that section 248(a) of The Municipal Act denies municipal council the right to grant bonuses in aid of industrial enterprise, and the Trenton practices constituted a breach of the law. It also stated that this had been officially drawn to council's attention by The Department of Municipal Affairs in response to an enquiry that the clerk comptroller directed to the Minister at the request of a member of the Trenton council. There was some correspondence in January, February and March, 1968, on this matter.

The report goes on to state that the tax reductions are illegal under section 248(a) of The Municipal Act and section 131 of The Assessment Act and that the auditors' report of March, 1968, drew this to the council's attention. The Hardy report goes on to state:

While bonusing of industry has been illegal, it has so far brought no penalty, despite the full knowledge of the provincial government, the town council and, we presume, a number of Trenton citizens.

I assume that these are the references to which the hon. member makes mention and with which he is concerned.

This report situation had been drawn to our attention. As I stated, we had drawn it to the attention of the municipal officials in the spring. The report itself has just been submitted to us. We were led to understand that the previous practices have stopped. Perhaps the report, which is dated October, indicates that they have not. I do not know that yet.

I have not had the opportunity to examine the contents in any detail. I intend to pursue this matter with the officials of the department studying the report and with my colleagues in government, and to consider any appropriate action which may require to be taken. I do not dismiss the idea of having an enquiry into these purported illegal actions.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you. I wonder if I could address a supplementary question to the Minister.

I wonder if he has questioned the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) as to whether, as well as the four forgivable loans involving many hundreds of thousands of dollars of the taxpayers of Ontario's money, these companies have also received these advantages from the town of Trenton?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am led to believe, and I do not know this, that the practices which Trenton carried on in the past have ceased and I would assume that they would not have been applicable to these four industries. I suppose it can be said that Trenton, now having received the assistance which it has through the EIO programme, perhaps decided what it was doing in the past was no longer necessary. But we would make it our business to look into this as well.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address a question to the Attorney General.

Has The Attorney General's Department launched an appeal on behalf of the Crown, as requested by The Department of Correctional Services, in the matter of the 30-day sentence imposed by Magistrate Baxter in Cobourg on November 20, on an inmate of Millbrook Reformatory as a result of an attack on a guard?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we obtained a transcript of this case and I have reviewed it with the officials of my department. In our opinion, there is no point of law which would permit leave to appeal and we so advised The Department of Correctional Services.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could remind the Attorney General of his statement on—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is entitled to ask a supplementary question but not to remind the Minister.

Mr. Pitman: The supplementary question is related to the statement which the Minister made on that day and perhaps, if I might, I would just read a word or two of it. I think it is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not entitled to read that. He is entitled to incorporate reference to it in a supplementary question if he wishes.

Mr. Pitman: In view of the comments of the Minister on November 20, I am wondering whether the Minister recognizes the degree to which this sentence might very well affect the morale of the staff at the Millbrook Reformatory, in view of the fact that this was a serious attack with a weapon—an unprovoked attack, so I understand—on a guard in that institution.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of all the facts, of the sentiments surrounding it and of possible consequences, and I am also aware there is considerable misunderstanding. I am also aware this incident has been blown up to a considerable degree, by uninformed persons. I might just mention very briefly that one fact is that while this was an unprovoked attack, and was with a weapon—a stick—the superintendent who was injured was back on the job the next day. He then did complain of some soreness and the reformatory's doctor suggested he take some days off. I think he had a week off. But having reviewed the matter, and I have reviewed it completely myself, I have to repeat the answer I gave the member, that there is no point of law which permits leave to appeal in this instance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has questions?

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): I have two questions for the Minister of Social and Family Services. I will ask them both at the same time.

Does the Minister require municipal welfare departments to inspect the passports of landed immigrants who apply for family welfare assistance in Ontario? Does the Minister allow municipal welfare departments, or their representatives, to process an application when such a request has been received?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that there are no regulations requiring the inspection of passports. As to the second, they are required to accept an application unless it is obvious from the persons' own statements that they are not eligible.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Attorney General. Since in a recent court case, Regina vs Gary Perly held in provincial courtroom 31 in Metropolitan Toronto, it was indicated that police constable Woodhead did not tell the complete truth while giving evidence in court under oath, what action will be taken against PC Woodhead by The Attorney General's Department or its agents?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the Crown attorney that a transcript of the evidence in this case has been ordered and the matter is being fully investigated at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a question to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Can the Minister advise the House when a pollution control office will be opened in the Sudbury area?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, it is the objective of the Ontario Water Resources Commission to provide an office in northern Ontario to serve the district of Algoma, Cochrane, Nipissing, Parry Sound, Sudbury and Timiskaming. The location and establishment of a regional office have not been finalized.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might draw to the attention of the member for Sudbury East question 471 submitted by him to the Minister of Mines. When it was presented this morning to the Ministry, we were advised that this did not fall under that department and there was no person of the name mentioned with any connection with the department. Perhaps the hon. member would do a little more research and redirect the question to the appropriate department.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, in answer to questions by the hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday, in two parts.

The first part of his question is: "What plan is Ontario Hydro implementing to reach a settlement with its employees to avert a possible strike in January?" The answer: The commission has conveyed to the union what it believes is a fair proposal. This proposal is to be placed before the union membership for their consideration.

The second part of his question: "Does Ontario Hydro believe that the system can continue to operate if a rotational strike is called by the employees? And the answer: It would depend upon the nature and extent of the revolving strike and the sensitivity of the areas affected. Certainly the commission must regard with great concern any strike that impairs its ability to meet the electric power needs of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask the Minister if the proposal that has been sent to the Hydro workers' union is different from the one that had been put before the most recent negotiations?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe East.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I have taken the liberty this morning of passing out some cigars to the hon. members of this House and to yourself. I realize that it is sometimes not a normal procedure to announce a pending birth, but on this occasion I thought that perhaps the cigars would be in order, inasmuch as the House will not be in session when the new one arrives in Simcoe East.

Of course, this morning I would like to draw to your attention, and to the attention of the members of this House, that on Jan. 1, 1969, the town of Orillia becomes Ontario's 34th city.

When there is change in municipal status, it is an historic moment in the lives of the community, particularly a community as well known and as well regarded as Orillia. It is a community that is well known to many from having visited there personally, and to many thousands who have known something about the background of the little town through reading "Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town" which was penned by the late Stephen Leacock, who made his home there.

Then, of course, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that my predecessor, the late Lloyd Letherby, when he extolled the many virtues of the purity of the air of Simcoe East, suggested that the government should consider moving the Legislature to the town of Orillia. I might say that we have even more to offer as of Jan. 1.

As a resident of the municipality for 25 years, I have watched Orillia grow from a town of less than 10,000 to a bustling city of 25,000. The city is recognized as an outstanding tourist centre, as well as an important industrial and business community.

This morning, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this House, to join with me in extending our sincere congratulations to mayor-elect Mr. Burton McIsaac and the new city council who will take office as of Jan. 1, as well as to the citizens of the new city of Orillia.

I would like to extend my sincere congratulations to them, and may I suggest that our wish should be—may Orillia's future be as richly rewarding as its past.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South has a question of the Minister of Health.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Health:

In light of the complaints by the Timmins and Cochrane labour council, concerning inadequate emergency medical care in Timmins, especially weekend hours, what action has the Minister taken or does he propose to take on the resolution submitted to him by this labour council demanding that the Timmins medical profession make arrangements to have a qualified medical practitioner available during all weekend hours?

Hon. M. B. Dymond: (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I did not get this question in time to see it. This is the first I have heard of it and, therefore, since this is the last day of the sitting, I will try to answer it from what knowledge I have.

I am sure the hon. member realizes, as we all do, that the government does not control the practice of medicine or the practice of any professions. This matter has been one that has given us a great deal of concern. We have tried to impress upon the professions concerned the need for organizing services so that at least emergency services will be provided for in every community. In most communities this has been undertaken by the professional people on their own initiative. In some instances we have asked the Ontario Medical Association to give encouragement to organizations of this kind, and I believe they are working on this at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has a statement.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I stated a little while ago that we envision more strict air pollution control measures on motor vehicles in the next model year. I would like to announce today, sir, that the province intends implementing those stricter controls on the 1970 model year vehicles. All motor vehicle manufacturers in Canada, as well as importers, were so advised.

The current 1969 model vehicles are required to control both crankcase and exhaust emissions. New requirements will effect an additional reduction of approximately 30 per cent in exhaust emissions.

The new requirements for passenger cars in the most popular size range limit the exhaust emissions to 23 grams of carbon monoxide and 2.2 grams of hydrocarbons per mile. Previous requirements were 34 grams and 3.3 grams of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons respectively.

If such vehicles were not controlled they would emit 73 grams of carbon monoxide and 11.2 grams of hydrocarbons per mile.

The present standard for crankcase emissions requiring 100 per cent control will remain in effect. Large trucks and buses will also be included for the first time. The new requirements will limit diesel smoke emissions to a faint flume and require slightly more than a one-third reduction in exhaust emissions of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons from gasoline-fueled heavy trucks and buses.

It is anticipated that control of evaporation losses from carburetors and gasoline tanks will be required on the 1971 models. Such systems are available but have not yet been proven.

The individual vehicle owner can materially assist in the control of air pollution by having his vehicle tuned up at regular intervals and having the air pollution control system serviced in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I want to make a statement regarding the Toronto International Airport.

As you are aware from discussion in this House and public debate, proposals have been put forward by the federal government related to the future of Toronto International Airport.

Toronto International Airport is Ontario's gateway to the world. As such, its economic and social importance to the people of Ontario must be given the fullest consideration. Because of its responsibility to the people of Ontario in this regard, this government has necessarily been directly involved in considerations affecting the airport and the surrounding communities.

It is apparent that the facilities at Toronto International Airport for handling both incoming and outgoing air traffic are now being used to the maximum. The difficulties which passengers now face will be greatly aggravated when the jumbo jets begin to operate in 1971. Both the terminal facilities and the runways must be enlarged to accommodate the requirements of the next decade.

The federal Department of Transport has had lengthy consultations with this government about the future of the airport. The government of Ontario has been analyzing the ramifications of the various proposals made by the federal government. Meetings have been held with ratepayers in the area surrounding the airport. We have watched and listened carefully to the various arguments in the current public controversy over the proposals for expansion.

There are a number of important considerations. I would like to place them before the hon. members so that they may have a full understanding of what is involved.

First of all, it must be recognized that transportation is the science of moving people and goods from one point to another. For instance, goods are moved from a factory by truck to an air terminal, flown from there to another air terminal, and then go by truck to their ultimate destination and this is also true of people. Time is the significant and costly factor. The variable in the costs involved is for truck transportation from the factory to the airport. This varies materially depending on the location.

If the airport was to be removed to a distance of, say, 50 miles from Toronto, this would materially increase the cost of transportation. This is why an industry which plans to ship by air tends to locate near an airport; to keep its transportation costs to a minimum.

The arguments about location also apply to passenger travel, but in this case time is usually of greater importance than cost and distance.

Should Toronto International Airport be moved, there could well be a serious economic impact on the industrial development of northwestern Toronto in areas such as Malton, Bramalea, Rexdale and adjacent areas. Counterbalancing this is the stimulus for an economic base for a new community which would result from relocating the airport.

It is estimated that if the ultimate proposed development of Toronto International Airport is reached, it will generate up to 144,000 jobs either directly or indirectly. If the expansion should take place elsewhere than at the present site, a significant number of these jobs—perhaps more than half of them—would move with the airport.

Thus, while it might appear desirable to move the airport to a more remote location, it must be remembered that thousands of jobs would go with it. In turn, a new community of some 300,000 people would be generated in the vicinity of the airport, wherever it might go. The social and economic problems of creating a new community of 300,000 would be great and must be considered when any decision is made regarding relocation.

Another consideration is the existing investment in ground access to the airport. Further developments will undoubtedly be required to accommodate the expansion envisaged at the airport wherever it is. This will not be limited to highways alone, but will require some form of rapid transit. The costs of these developments must be considered as a part of the overall cost of the future development of the airport.

In addition, the further the airport is located from the heart of the Metropolitan area, the longer these lines of communication must be and, therefore, the greater the cost in providing them. This is an important consideration for the government of Ontario because the province would be heavily involved in providing such services.

Of great importance in considering the future of Toronto International Airport is the possibility that all of the international air travel might be concentrated at the proposed new Montreal airport. This would mean the shifting of the potential jobs out of the province. Furthermore, Ontario would be left without direct international air service. This we cannot accept.

Ontario, and particularly the Metropolitan Toronto area, generates the largest volume of international travel in Canada. However, the existing policies of the federal government force this travel to be directed through other airports, such as Montreal and New York. Removing the airport to a more remote location would only aggravate the existing inconvenience, particularly if the international airport were to be removed from this province.

The implications which I have just mentioned are very important to the future growth and development of the province of Ontario. This government is giving them every consideration and is prepared to press its case with vigour.

At least six departments are directly involved in our considerations: The Departments of Municipal Affairs, Health, Highways, Transport, Energy and Resources Management and Trade and Development. However, the ultimate decision affecting the future of the Toronto International Airport lies with the federal government. The role of the government of Ontario is to protect the interests of the people of the nearby area within the limits of our jurisdiction and, in a broader context, the economic strength and future of the entire province.

The current public debate has been restricted by and large to other equally important aspects: The social implications of increased noise levels which would follow the enlargement of Toronto International Airport, the natural concern of nearby residents for public safety, and the appropriate and most judicious use of the land occupied by, and adjacent to, Toronto International Airport.

I should like to assure the hon. members once again that this government is concerned about the living conditions and safety of the people who reside in the area affected and the effect an expanded airport will have on land values.

Because it is true that noise problems and safety factors will exist, no matter where the airport is located, these problems will not be eliminated merely by moving the airport. Technical advances have made aircraft travel one of the safest of all means of transportation. There are also indications that significant improvements can be expected in the noise levels of large aircraft. Hopefully, we can look to the aircraft industry to do much to reduce the noise problem.

The debate surrounding the wise use of land will continue. It could be urged, however, that one of the prime reasons for the vigorous development in the northwest sector of Metropolitan Toronto and in Peel county is because of the location of Toronto International Airport.

Having taken these matters into consideration, and recognizing that much more detailed research is required before a final decision should be made on the future development of Toronto International Airport, the government of Ontario today has made two interim recommendations to the federal government:

1. Because of the critical situation which now exists at the Toronto International Airport with regard to facilities and runway accommodation, the government of Ontario urges that the federal government proceed immediately with the development of the first stages of its expansion programme. This would provide an additional passenger terminal and the lengthening of two existing runways.

2. While it is recognized that additional airport capacity will become necessary beyond that provided by the first stages, the government of Ontario urges the federal government to establish immediately a joint federal-provincial co-ordinating committee to assess the social, economic and operational characteristics, including complete cost estimates, cost sharing and supporting ground transit, and of future alternatives. In other words this would be an examination of whether this airport is to be expanded further or whether we should be looking at alternative sites and alternative facilities.

In this manner, we believe that Toronto International Airport will evolve to meet the requirements of a dynamic and growing province, the people who depend upon air transport for their livelihood and those who live in the vicinity of the airport.

Mr. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before we get to the orders of the day. In the course of last night's debate there was a statement made in this House which I think should have been challenged at the time, and the more I have thought of it since I have regarded my own neglect as one that I could not let go any further than this morning.

In the course of a heated exchange between the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben) and the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) in discussion on the expropriation bill just after 10 o'clock, the member for Humber referred in his objections to the comments from the hon. member for Lakeshore as being from a "defrocked Jesuit". I have checked Hansard. The description is somewhat garbled, but it is there, and I am certain in a checking of the tapes immediately after 10 o'clock you will have its confirmation, because we all heard it here.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that was a malicious statement that was not only highly personalized but was indicative of a religious prejudice which has no place in this House. I am not going to ask the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the statement because last year people from all sides of this House, including his own party, sought to have him withdraw what was generally regarded as a racially prejudiced statement. I would choose to have it stand on the record as a documentation as to how the hon. member's mind works, and I raise it as a point of order now so that you, the House and the public, will know that it is on the record.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, would the hon. member for Lakeshore rise and tell this House whether I have ever used that phrase to him before.

Mr. Lawlor: Well may I say, Mr. Speaker, so far as I was concerned I missed it—I would have been rather delighted than aggravated with it, I think. If he had called me a discolled Carmelite I might have been even more moved, and if he wants me to remove my collar, I will do so. I will leave it up to the other member. I did not hear him say this.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that if there is any doubt about it, it is on the tape and can be heard—

Mr. Ben: There is no doubt about it. I used the phrase, Mr. Speaker, and I have used it in endearing terms to the hon. member for Lakeshore on a number of occasions because when I was not here for a while earlier this year I had the occasion to read the member's Throne Speech and I was amazed by the phrases that he used there.

Mr. Lawlor: Why unfrocked though?

Mr. Ben: He was never a Jesuit and I have used it in jest with the hon. member as an accolade to his ability to use theological terms. Now if the hon. member for York South wants to be vicious and rise here, let him rise. I say I have always used it to the hon. members here, both inside and outside of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I invite you to listen to the—

Mr. Ben: It is on the tape, I do not deny it.

Mr. MacDonald: And in listening to the tape, Mr. Speaker, if you can construe the mood and the temper and the whole atmosphere of that as a comment of endearment—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

The hon. leader of the party has made a sufficient declamation with respect to this matter and I think all of us are well enough acquainted now with the hon. member for Humber to know that at times he does get carried away and at times he uses expressions of endearment, as he says, which do not appear to the rest of us to be so. I am quite content to take the averment of the hon. member for York South as to what was there and the acknowledgment by the hon. member for Humber that it was so said, and also to have it stand in the record as it is.

Today's discussion will explain to those who are avid readers of Hansard in what manner the hon. member for Humber meant it to be used, and the way in which the member for Lakeshore took it. And I think it was in very good part. I myself was listening to that debate, and I was not at all surprised—because in this House it has become customary to refer to other members in terms which really are not parliamentary and are not suitable, but it has become the custom and apparently we all have that failing.

I would hope that this matter could be closed on that note of friendly discussion—quite out of order indeed—between the hon. member for Humber and the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wonder if the Attorney General does have a reply to my question of two days ago relating to the legal aid plan.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I am sorry. In the pressure of the things we have been doing in the last day or so, I just have not got it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have the answers for some questions which were asked of me yesterday.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked how many of the 97 per cent of the population whom the government claims have medical insurance are covered for home and office calls of physicians.

Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize that the government does not claim this. We claim it on the basis of the latest survey of voluntary health insurance in Canada, prepared by the Canadian Conference on Health Care, which states that 97.3 of Ontario's population as at December 31, 1967, have medical services insurance coverage. Of that number, and from the same source, we estimate that 95.6 per cent of the population are covered for medical services insurance benefits for home and office calls.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—he is not in his seat so I will not answer this question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is a little late in rising, but perhaps he would care to direct his question to the Minister of Health. He was not in when questions were being asked.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Health: What steps are being taken to eliminate the air pollution condition frequently caused by the heating system of the Hamilton psychiatric hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the air pollution control officers are presently studying this source and seeking the cause with a view to correcting it. I cannot go into the technical details of what will be done. Whatever is necessary will be done.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READINGS

Clerk of the House: The first order; third reading of Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-69.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, in moving third reading of this bill, I should like to just take a moment to offer a word of recognition and commendation, if I may say so, to all those who worked so strenuously on this bill in order that we might complete it in this short session. And I am indebted—and I think the public is indebted—to the efforts of all who worked on this quite important piece of legislation in order that it might be completed so that the people of the province would have the benefit of it without delay.

In this respect, I should like to mention particularly the members of the committee on legal bills, who worked long hours and late hours and who gave their attention to the legislation, with full attendance and with many helpful and critical suggestions which we were able to consider and take advantage of in the preparation of the bill in committee.

I think generally in our debate here in committee of the whole House we had the same regard for the need to get the bill forward, but without the curtailing of discussion and criticism of its provisions. I think it is well to place on the record the fact that the House did treat this particular piece of business in this way.

And I should not like to forget, Mr. Speaker, that the foundation of this legislation was the Ontario Law Reform Commission. I am not sure that members of the House always appreciate the great work that that commission is doing in the revision of our laws. I consider it as a continuing research foundation or body to upgrade and modernize and bring our laws into line with our needs as we move forward in this society which is changing so rapidly.

I am glad to have an opportunity, particularly on this legislation, to pay tribute to that commission, which is doing many things which will be beneficial to our society in the area in which they are engaged.

But above all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that there are some unknown persons who worked very quietly—and who worked, I think, really beyond the requirements of their engagement—to assist in the preparation of this type of legislation. I speak of the legislative counsel, who worked long hours in very tedious work in the preparation of this legislation. Even though you have recommendations from the law reform commission—and in this case from the hon. Mr. McRuer—to translate those into legislation is long and tedious and requires careful work and consideration and you have to cast your mind forwards and backwards to know the consequences of those recommendations and to use the language which will carefully express what it is intended to say, always having regard to the consequences of how that legislation will work in practice.

Particularly I say, as we were dealing with this bill under pressure one might say, as to time—particularly in the legal bills committee—we were agreeing occasionally to an amendment, the legislative counsel were assisting in framing those amendments; and I would like to point out that when one changes one clause of a bill one has to look at every other clause which precedes it or follows it to make sure that that change does not affect the other provisions of the bill; or if it does so, then to change those. That is painstaking work and long after the committee had concluded its work—and we worked some late hours—I know that legislative counsel worked through the night to perfect the things which we had agreed should be inserted in that bill.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that my own staff, and particularly my Deputy Attorney General, gave a tremendous effort; not just in the hours of this session, but in the long hours that went into the preparation of this legislation before we came to this House, and of course since and through this session.

Without the invaluable assistance that I received from those I have mentioned it would not have been possible to have accomplished this piece of legislation in this time. I wanted, Mr. Speaker, to take the opportunity to say that in moving third reading of this bill, which I now do, Bill 5.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the presentation of this bill for third reading, let me say that I hasten to associate myself with the remarks just made by the Attorney General. I think the Legislature was functioning at its best in dealing in its various ways with this bill.

The debate on second reading, I thought, was one of the better debates—perhaps one of the best debates—I have ever heard in this House. The hard work done by the committee on legal bills, which was productive work and unselfish work by the members who were there, the work done yesterday in committee of the whole House; all of them put together were examples of the functioning of this Legislature at its very best.

I think all members who participated in it feel that it is their bill, it is not just a government bill. For myself it is the culmination of some 10 years of presentation of suggestions to this House that we have a better Expropriations Act in Ontario. I think we now have one.

There are some things in it that I would have done another way, and perhaps in time I should be proved right or I should be proved wrong. But I think we have made, collectively, a very substantial contribution to the betterment of our system of laws in the province of Ontario and I agree, with great pleasure, to support the motion the Attorney General has just put forth.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I hasten also to join herein. Very often we on this side of the House experience frustration in the case of perhaps certain types of legislation, and maybe questions of personality too. It makes our work seem very little worthwhile if we come up with what we consider reasonable, just, enlightened recommendations and they are cast aside as worthless. One may as well be somewhere else doing something else.

But in this case I was much taken, and I said this yesterday, with the openness and with the intelligence exercised by the Attorney General; and I do wish personally to extend my congratulations to Mr. Dick in this regard too. He was excellent throughout, coming incisively with the main points of law when they were needed, having the cases at his fingertips. Nothing could be more valuable insofar as people in the Opposition who may feel a little ennui now and then, than to have one's recommendations and thoughts, particularly as far as I was concerned with section 17 and the relations between mortgagors and mortgagees, accepted beyond what I had believed was possible at this time in our evolution. It was a most gratifying experience and it heartens me to plunge into The Mechanics' Lien Act now to see what we can do about that one.

May I also say, Mr. Speaker, in this regard, that the House leader yesterday was not quite as gracious as he might have been. We spent, as I estimated it, a little over 11 hours in slugging work in committee. Now, of course I would like this House to know that that was child's play as to what we did with the Smith committee all summer. We used to spend 14 hours a day doing the stuff, and I would suggest somewhat more difficult and entangled stuff than this concentrated portion of the law which opens itself up rather easily.

So some of us have become habituated to the way this organization is run and for any who felt a slackening of pace or something, well then I would suggest that they get on a committee on taxation; anything else after that will be rather, you know, child's play to deal with. We spent 11 hours on it, Mr. Speaker, in committee and thereby the value of committees for the purpose of this House, I think, were proven conclusively.

We came back here and spent a little over four; and we need not really to have spent that time, give a little take a little, we could have cut it back another three-quarters of an hour and got it through in a little over three hours. Had that been discussed in this House, it would not have been four hours and it would not have been the 11 hours we spent in committee, it would have been 17 hours. Because we would have wrangled in the House, and the give and take and people speaking twice and four times on an issue would have occurred.

Whereas that was all obviated, all the underbrush cleaned away, certain salient points which we felt rather strongly about were left over, but we resolved them, such as we did yesterday. And I again, in winding up what I have to say, say that it has proven the value of these committees and I would make a very strong point on that with the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). The work—hard work—done by a number of people on the committee does deserve commendation.

It is a tangled portion of the law—the complexities of injurious affection would bedazzle you—and therefore we get very little public accolade, nothing mentioned in the press—not that I think it is very important that it should be so. But the fact of the matter is that when you come to the really hard work of this Legislature that is all iceberg stuff and nobody really gets to know about it, except in its superficialities.

Bill 16, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I will ask His Honour if he will come into the Chamber and give Royal Assent to these two bills.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. Minister has some distinguished guests he would wish to introduce while the Prime Minister is here; would he wait?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Social and Family Services): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, with the kind indulgence of the members of the House I should like to direct the members' attention to a very distinguished delegation sitting in Mr. Speaker's gallery.

Mr. Speaker, this weekend in Toronto there is meeting the secretariat of the World Congress of Free Ukrainians, an organization which unites Ukrainian organizations around the world. The secretariat is headed by a number of very distinguished Canadians, known to many in the House. They are the most Reverend Maxim Germaniuk of Canada, Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and Monsignor Doctor Basil Kushnir of Canada. They are joined with representatives from Argentina, England, the United States and I think will be met by other representatives from Belgium and Brazil and other parts of the world.

I know their deliberations will inure to the benefit not only of those who come of the stock of Ukrainians but all men and women who desire to live in peace and freedom throughout the whole world.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario entered the Chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed bills to which, in the name and on behalf of said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 5, The Expropriations Act, 1968-1969.

Bill 16, An Act to amend The Ontario Hurricane Relief Fund Act, 1955.

To these Acts the Royal Assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

Clerk of the House: The third order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, if you can recall, in my opening remarks I made certain suggestions regarding the physical conditions which the members must work under—the clerical staff available—and I suggested that on Fridays the government should consider not sitting. I think today has probably given us ample proof as to why the Friday sitting is rather a waste of time. Outside of the third reading for the expropriation bill we got very little done except the question period, and I think it would be much more beneficial if the members could be back in their ridings on this day, doing constituency work for the people who send them here. Of course, this would involve, as I attempted to outline earlier, the necessity for this government to look into the travelling situation, which is more than deplorable in this Legislature.

We have members who travel 700, 800 and 900 miles. Firstly, they are allowed 15 trips home; and in this modern day and age I think it is about time this government considered air flight not just for the Opposition but for its own members—one of whom happens to be the farthest from this House, at 1,250 miles. Certainly I think he, like the Toronto members, should be able to see his constituents at least once a week and have some time with his family. The same goes for my colleague, the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes), or the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight). I think it is time that this government started to give this matter some consideration.

There are other factors which, as I said the other day, we could go on at great lengths discussing among the problems confronting the members in this Legislature. A few of these are things like OMSIP and Ontario hospitalization. We passed legislation here last year, Mr. Speaker, to cover the teachers. The civil service, I understand, is covered, and the union people are covered; but the members of this Legislature do not receive any coverage. They pay the full shot, holus bolus out of their pockets. But this is just the typical treatment of this government to the people that are in it.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of Revenue): We are trying to keep taxes down!

Mr. Martel: Oh if I ever heard a red herring, Mr. Speaker, that is one. "Trying to keep taxes down," he says. Maybe we should not have given E. P. Taylor the $1.8 million for the racehorses.

Hon. Mr. White: Those socialists try to treat themselves very well; we have the people in mind.

Mr. Martel: Yes, Mr. Taylor and company with the horse rebate!

But I would ask this government, Mr. Speaker, to consider whether the members are investments too, and to consider improving the lot of MPPs around this Legislature.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to get into my main remarks in a field that I am intimately involved with—education.

Two landmarks in education were reached in 1968. These were, firstly, the establishment of larger units of administration for the two publicly supported school systems in Ontario, and the completion and tabling of the Hall-Dennis report "Living and Learning." Both were hailed as moves to provide equal educational opportunities for all—and in my speech I have underlined the word "all"—for the students of all the parents in Ontario. Unfortunately, pious platitudes and reality differ greatly.

During the estimates of The Department of Education in the last session I criticized the system of training teachers for the elementary system, and the Minister chose not to reply. I, as a teacher, felt it was constructive criticism of a profession with which I have been involved for so many years.

Obviously the Minister and I were not on the same wavelength. I will attempt to get on the same wavelength as the Minister on this occasion. The primary ingredients to supply equal educational opportunity are money and all its ramifications, and qualified personnel in every area. I want to deal with this last point first.

The Minister advised me, through a series of questions in the last session, that the number of unqualified high school teachers for the province was 13 per cent, and that the number of high school teachers who are unqualified in northern Ontario was 18 per cent. I have it from a headmaster who teaches in northern Ontario that the figure is closer to 28 per cent.

If we consider the provincial average of 13 per cent, and the northern Ontario average —and I will use the Minister of Education's (Mr. Davis') average of 18 per cent—I do not think we have equal educational opportunity in northern Ontario with southern Ontario. Education, consequently, is treated no differently than other fields in regard to Tory policy toward northern Ontario. The government is now in the process of building another Ontario College of Education and, of course, it is being built in southern Ontario. Then they have plans for even another one, to be built in Ottawa, with nothing for northern Ontario. I guess we do not count for much up there, and our students can be taught by unqualified personnel.

A third college of education could be, should be, and must be, located in northern Ontario immediately. This Ontario College of Education could in fact be opened to students in the fall of 1969. I will outline how in a few moments.

It must be started in the fall of 1969 for very valid reasons. One, which has been outlined already, is the 18 per cent rate of unqualified teachers. The number of unqualified personnel will increase, because the emergency summer courses, for all practical purposes, ended in 1968. This means that complete reliance will have to be placed on the existing college of education for the majority of teachers to supply the secondary level. This source is inadequate at the present time.

Coupled with this is the fact that the secondary schools will receive their greatest influx of students in the next seven years. One can readily see that we are in for tough times, not just in the north, although primarily in the north, but in southern Ontario as well. As if this were not bad enough, Mr. Speaker, we in the north cannot get graduates from the Ontario College of Education in the south. They just do not go north. I believe in our area in the year 1967-1968 we were successful in getting 14 graduates, and in the north as a whole we were successful in getting 65 graduates out of 1,000 graduate students from the Ontario College of Education.

Even those university graduates from the north do not return in great numbers on graduation from the Ontario College of Education. To substantiate this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a study recently done in England on regional colleges of education. It has revealed that students travelling long distances to colleges of education do not tend to return to their place of origin in significantly large percentages but tend to stay and accept positions in the immediate proximity of the college of education.

A paper in the magazine Education for Teaching in the autumn of 1967, called "Regional Origins of Students in Colleges of Education", by William Taylor, refers to a study made of a college of education in the Bristol area in southwestern England. The study was made over a period of years and it was noted that approximately 80 per cent of the students attending it came from within approximately 50 miles radius. Of this 80 per cent, two thirds accepted positions in local schools within that area after graduation. The other 20 per cent came mostly from Wales, approximately 100 miles away. Of this 20 per cent it is significant, Mr. Speaker, that only three per cent returned to Wales to teach upon graduation.

The author of the report argues that the low rate of mobility for the 80 per cent of the students was a direct result of the regional nature of the college. Had the college been farther away from the area the local schools would have been much less well served. For the purpose of this report we could call this a factor of loss by osmosis. This osmosis might be the result of a practice teaching experience in local schools, the pressure exerted by salesmanship of local school boards, and by principals during the period of training and a natural tendency by students to locate for their early years of teaching in a known educational environment.

Hon. Mr. White: The hon. member must have been on the wrong side of the leadership race—

Mr. Martel: Well I think I can manage the situation quite nicely. I do not need any support.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, when we take all of these matters into consideration, that unless a college of education be opened up in northern Ontario we are in for very grave problems, even graver than we have at the present time. It follows then, Mr. Speaker, if an Ontario college of education is to be located in the north, one must assess the situation to determine where it should be located and how it must be financed.

I want first to consider the location for an Ontario college of education for northern Ontario. In doing so I want to turn to what has become almost overnight the Bible of education to support the site I want to advance. On page 129 of "Living and Learning" the point is made as to where future institutes of learning should be located, and I quote:

In 1966 the Minister's committee of training of elementary school teachers, under the chairmanship of C. R. McLeod, Director of Education for the city of Windsor, presented its report to the Minister of Education.

The McLeod committee submitted 47 recommendations concerning major changes in teaching education and proposals for means by which they should be implemented. The most fundamental of the proposed changes had to do with the location and duration of teacher education. The committee recommended that:

(a) The programme for teacher education be provided by the universities.

(b) The programme be of four-year duration, leading to a baccalaureate degree and professional certification.

(c) Elementary and secondary school teacher education be offered within the same university.

Well Mr. Speaker, at "the same university" and by a university! The McLeod committee and the Hall-Dennis committee have agreed and recommended that complete teacher training should be offered at "the same university." If we are to offer this type of training then we should be prepared to establish it, in the north, in an area where such a complete complex can be developed.

By this I mean the training should be for elementary and secondary teachers, and whether it is to be divided or not I suggest this to mind: That it be offered both in French and in English—starting probably with the academic training in the fall of 1969. And if time and funds allow, it should be expanded to commercial and then science and technological courses. The location must be one where honours degrees are offered at the university.

There are those who will say I am being parochial when I suggest that the Laurentian University should be the site of the French-English complex I have outlined. This is not the case, and I will note briefly why I recommend Laurentian.

Sudbury is most centrally located for the three major areas of North Bay, Timmins and the Sault. I realize I have left out Fort William and Port Arthur, but this was not an oversight. To locate there would mean it would be closer for students in northeastern Ontario to come to Toronto or to Kingston, and this would defeat the purpose of having this type of complex developed in the north.

Second, Laurentian offers honours courses and a variety of subjects in the arts; and we are hopeful that in the future the sciences—engineering in particular—will be included. This would satisfy the need for the variety of teachers required in the high schools system. The third point—very fundamental, Mr. Speaker—at present a new $5-million “école normale” is being constructed on the campus of Laurentian University, in Sudbury. This college will have a number of seminar rooms, a closed-circuit TV room, cafeteria, auditorium, gym, library and offices. If the type of complex I have outlined is to become a reality, it should be constructed around the structures that are now being erected at Laurentian. Furthermore, until such time as classrooms for the remaining portion could be speeded up the existing facilities, such as the gym, TV room, cafeteria, could be shared by all. We should develop a complex of this type around what has already been started for the benefit of the north.

Finally, a point of economics, to minimize the cost and to allow at least the academic aspect of a college of education to start in the fall of '69: I have talked to the officials at Laurentian and the “école normale” and all facilities in existence at Laurentian would be made available to an OCE for the fall term of 1969. These include gym, cafeteria, library, etc.

The only thing an OCE needs to open up in the fall in Sudbury is classroom space and staff. The university itself has been using portables for quite some time and an OCE, I am sure, could make use of portables for a few years until the necessary capital was obtained.

Those of use who attended Laurentian in its early years had the unique pleasure of taking lectures in such places as the local funeral home, over a theatre, over a pool-room. I can not see why a college of education, using portable classrooms could not get along, situated on the campus site and using the facilities offered by Laurentian University at the present time.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, we can allow money or other such considerations to deter the development of such a project. It is in keeping with the Hall-Dennis report, in keeping with McLeod committee report and it is in keeping with the French college of education project which is being established at Laurentian now. I think we should go the rest of the way and develop the whole type of complex which would be in keeping with these various reports.

Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that portables and the teaching administrative staff would cost approximately $750,000 for the year 1969. If $750,000 could give us 100 to 150 graduates in the north by the spring of 1970, this would be the best $750,000 this government has spent in northern Ontario in a long, long time. I ask the government to move on this immediately.

I would like now to turn to another aspect in the field of education which I have raised in this Legislature on two previous occasions. It too involves Laurentian University.

On March 11, 1968, I asked the Minister of Education the following question:

What has caused the delay in Laurentian University being granted a department of engineering? Secondly, can the Minister advise the House when Laurentian University will be granted an engineering department?

The Minister indicated at that time that Laurentian indicated they wished to extend their engineering programme. Later, the Minister stated that a formal submission to the committee on university affairs was still forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker, although no formal submission was made in writing with respect to cost, number of students, and so on, on Monday, Oct. 16, 1967, a very strong verbal request was made to the committee on university affairs which was visiting in the city of Sudbury. Those in the Sudbury area who attended the meeting made it abundantly clear that they were, in fact, making this a formal request for the assistance needed to implement such an undertaking.

As I understand it, the Deputy Minister of University Affairs was in attendance. One would expect that something more positive than “Submit a submission which will be considered,” when such a request was being made. One would have expected a spirit of excitement from the committee on university affairs when the request for assistance to establish such a course was made.

What other university offering engineering degrees sits right in the very heartland of the greatest mineral bearing rock in the world? Where else in Ontario could the engineering students find summer employment so accessible? Where else could they find first hand practical experience while studying? Where else could they visit mines, smelters and refineries at the very doorstep of the university? Where else could they find such ready employment on graduating?

I am advised International Nickel alone could take 50 graduates per year. The variety of courses that could be offered to meet the demands of industry in the north is unbelievable. There could be mining engineering, chemical engineering, metallurgy, and so on.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): The hon. member was knocking the north 10 minutes ago, and now it is a good place. Which side is he on?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He is talking about the potential in the north.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I am saying what the potential is if the government will move; to the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker.

But, as usual, a request from the north is met with indifference, such as "submit a brief and we will consider it", rather than encouragement and assistance that the matter be moved ahead immediately.

What is even worse than the indifference, Mr. Speaker, was the opposition to the plan. I reiterate, the opposition to the request. One thing that seems to be part of our way of life is that once something is established in an area it becomes the sacred cow of that area and no one should seek to infringe on the divine right of the area in question, or to even suggest that someone else would have the same rights.

Putting it more bluntly, Mr. Speaker, one member of the committee on university affairs which visited Sudbury, one Dr. Wright, was opposed to an extension of the two-year engineering course now offered at Laurentian to the third and fourth years. Dr. Wright, I am told, was responsible for the establishment of these courses at Waterloo and it appears as though his main interest is in retaining these courses for Waterloo.

As I am told, he gave a variety of reasons as to why third and fourth year courses should not be taught at Laurentian. I cannot buy any of them, Mr. Speaker. The university of Laurentian will present its submission shortly and I do hope it is studied with enthusiasm and given favourable consideration.

Just as a side line to this, Mr. Speaker, the university of Sudbury, in its original charter had, and still has, the ability to move ahead with this type of facility without permission. But in the type of spirit that comes from northerners, we want to do things in the proper way. We are hopeful that our submission will be given a good deal more consideration than other problems dealing with the north have been given to this date.

Because turning to the third point of education that I wish to discuss, I want to remind the House that Bills 44 and 168 were passed in Ontario to provide equal educational opportunities for all the students in Ontario. This has not been done to date in Ontario and it will not be achieved with the implementations of Bills 44 and 168, nor the Hall-Dennis report. Certain groups will not derive the benefits from these bills for a very simple reason—lack of funds.

I might state here, Mr. Speaker, that I am not talking at this time of an extension of provincial help to Grades 11, 12 and 13, to public, separate high schools. And I want it made abundantly clear that I am referring to these as public, separate high schools and not private schools as people like to categorize them, erroneously. There will be other occasions to debate extension of provincial assistance to Grades 11, 12 and 13. For now, however, I want to deal with Grades 9 and 10 in the public, separate schools.

There has been a great deal of talk about equal opportunity. I would like to know, of the Minister of Education, how this situation can exist at the Grades 9 and 10 level for all students in Ontario when the students in Grades 9 and 10 at public high schools get higher school grants than those in Grades 9 and 10 in the public, separate high schools of Ontario.

Of course, the difference is very slight, Mr. Speaker—about one-half. When the Minister goes around the countryside talking about equal education opportunity up to the level of education that existed at the time of Confederation—which was Grade 10—I find it rather strange, Mr. Speaker, that he cuts off the high school grant, or he does not give the high school grant as it is given to the public high schools, to the public, separate, high schools of Ontario.

I think it is high time this government found out what Article 93 of The BNA Act implies. The government should set up a committee to find out what system existed at the time of Confederation; what levels of education were attainable in these systems; and, finally, who authorized, in 1915, one member of The Department of Education to issue a regulation stating that all separate schools were to be cut from 12 to 10 grades.

If we hope to resolve the problem once and for all, and if this government hopes to eliminate the bitterness which evolves around public, separate schools, and if we are going to talk about human rights and so on, it is time all the facts, Mr. Speaker, were put on the table to clear the air in Ontario and eliminate the prejudices which have arisen over the years.

Mr. L. Bernier (Kenora): Prejudice has disappeared!

Mr. Martel: When you are on the side that gets double the grants, it is easy to say that prejudice has disappeared; but when you are on the side that gets one-half the school grant, then it is another story. It depends what side you are sitting on, Mr. Speaker, as to whether prejudice has disappeared or not.

What I am looking forward for, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking for an extension of grants—let me make that clear—I am asking that a committee be set up to study this whole situation and present the facts to the citizens of Ontario as they are, if we ever hope to get rid of the prejudices which have existed around separate schools in Ontario.

I do not think it is asking too much of this government to have the facts presented as they really are.

I now want to turn to a favourite subject of mine, Mr. Speaker, one on which I believe I am as well equipped to talk about as anyone in here. Having worked for the International Nickel Co. for approximately a year I know first hand, the conditions that the men are subjected to daily. The plant is the dirtiest place I have ever been in my life, Mr. Speaker. One can live with the dirt; however, life is unbearable because of the gas.

In fact, when I worked at Inco, Mr. Speaker, we used to make bets at the lunch hour as to who would be the first one to throw up his lunch. My lunches frequently consisted of a thermos of milk and nothing more.

If one can envisage for a moment an aisle, approximately the length of the hall from the east door to the west door, down on the main floor. When one stands at one end, he cannot see the other because of the gas; then one realizes how much gas is present.

Another example might be put forth: From the overhead cranes, which operate from near the tops of the buildings, on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to see the floor.

What might one expect from such a high concentration of gas? Vomiting, nausea, bleeding noses and spitting are just a few of the very obvious effects. The number of chest ailments in the Sudbury area is evidence there is something wrong. The statistics quoted by my colleague from High Park (Mr. Shulman) indicate that the mortality rate among males over 55 in this area is greater than anywhere else in the province.

One has only to look at the countryside to see what it does to vegetation, and I do not imagine man is any more immune to the gas than is the vegetation. I have been told by doctors in the Sudbury area that the lungs of the people in the area are black.

What has the government done to alleviate the problem during 25 years of Tory government? Virtually nothing.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), just prior to the last election, came to town and he described the area as one having a rugged beauty of its own. The Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), just prior to the 1967 election, in great sweeping headlines in the local press announced that Inco and Falconbridge had six months to submit plans to him outlining what they intended to do regarding the problem. Fourteen months later—and 25 years besides that—the Minister, when questioned about the matter, advised that the company hired by Inco could not bring in the plans before the end of December.

And of course, Mr. Speaker, the health study going on at the present time is being done from facts and figures here in Toronto. No one has been examined yet or questioned in the immediate vicinity where the problem prevails. There is a possibility, however, that Inco personnel from the office in Toronto might be examined, if we are lucky.

Mr. Speaker, the next Cabinet Minister who came to town was none other than the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence). I must admit that the Minister is making an effort to learn the mining industry, and for this I compliment him. I might state that some of my remarks are not going to be of quite that nature though.

When confronted by the questions and remarks I have been making regarding safety and health, the Minister announced that the union was trying to put itself in a better position for the next contract negotiation, that its concern for safety and health was really immaterial. Mr. Speaker, that such a statement could come from the Minister of Health or the Minister of Mines after having been in that area and after having seen those conditions, was in my opinion completely unforgivable. It is indicative, I really believe, of where the Ministers' interests lie; and I believe that has to be with the company. It makes one wonder who is running this province, Mr. Speaker.

It is interesting, as an aside, that the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) sides with the Minister occasionally when it comes to safety records. Mr. Speaker, I just want to outline some of the injuries and the length of time these men were off before they went back to work. It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker.

We have Jerome Lemieux: Date of accident March 6, 1968; injuries to head, left shoulder and face; admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital, March 9, and back on light duty on March 9.

And we have Omer Pinet: Date of accident May 28, 1968; injury broken left foot; light duty May 30, 1968.

Hnat Kohut: Date of accident November 9; injury, right arm broken below the elbow; light duty November 10—the next day.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Miracle cures!

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): In Hernando's hideaway!

Mr. Martel: Kerry Size: Date of accident April 6, 1968; injury broken left ankle; light duty, April 9.

I have many of these, Mr. Speaker. This is just indicative of the type of treatment the men receive from that company. They are injured and back to work. But that is not the worst part of their treatment of people, nor is it the worst part of the Minister's actions.

In a recent visit to the Sudbury area—when after all the statistics and information had been presented to this government on the fact of the concentration of gas, which should be maybe four to five parts per million and they range as high as 250 and 300 parts per million—a union member, on Mr. Ken Valentine, said to the Minister: "What has to be done, just what has to be done to prove to this government the seriousness of the gas situation?" And, lo' and behold, we get this reply: "Well, you have not proved it yet."

We have not proved it yet; that the gas is detrimental to the people, nor the area? Talk about moon shots—they could film a whole series of the moon right around Coniston. And the Minister has the audacity to say that it has not been proven yet—with the vegetation the way it is, with the statistics which have been presented showing the concentrations of gas, much, much in excess of what is safe.

But we have not proved it yet!

Well, what must we do to force this government to move against Inco? I am just wondering, Mr. Speaker, if an American firm, International Nickel, is bigger than this government. I am beginning to believe that it is.

One final point, Mr. Speaker, on the Minister's action in his last visit to the nickel basin. At a meeting with the union the Minister told the union they were playing politics by submitting materials to me which I would use in the form of questions and as such they could expect to be treated politically. Well if that was not a fine statement by the Minister, Mr. Speaker! The companies have been doling out great piles of money to the two old line political parties and I am wondering what their motivation has been in doing so.

What has been their motivation in doing so? Is it because the tills of money are overflowing and they have nothing else to do with it that they pass it on the parties? I do not think so. I think it is because they like to have policy brought in to their liking; or in the case of Sudbury, with Inco, to have the status quo retained so they can go on polluting the area year after year after year. And this government has allowed them to do it for 25 consecutive years. It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that something must be done to curb the gas and to protect the people of the area from its effects.

I would like to show you what can happen, Mr. Speaker, as a result of excess gas from just a couple of compensation files.

There is one which involves Mr. Natale Domenico and he says:

I was working on the flue at the second opening from the furnace. The furnace was in operation, I was suddenly hit with a wave of air that contained a heavy concentration of some foreign gas or substances that caused the injury and symptoms related in question 4. I also had a strong taste of sulphur in my mouth, especially when I threw up.

And what were the symptoms? Burning sensation in the eyes, very heavy watering of the eyes, dizzy, feeling of extreme fatigue, heavy coughing and sneezing spasms, accompanied by drooling, choking, sensation or paralysis of the breathing system. Strong burning feeling in the respiratory system, followed immediately by nausea, vomiting and massive bleeding through the nose, then severe headache and giddiness.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Domenico was sent to a doctor and he received considerable treatment. In a letter directed to the workmen's compensation board it says, Enclosed is some additional information in connection with the question of Form 6D, Question No. 6.

As indicated in my answer to this question, I had a similar disability before. The details are as follows:

In 1960 I was doing some drilling in hot mass and was again exposed to heat, dust and sulphur dioxides.

These conditions brought on a fairly heavy nosebleed and I reported to first aid where the bleeding was stopped after about an hour and a quarter. On many other occasions I have had evidence of bleeding of the nose because of blood showing on my handkerchief. Initially I reported my injuries to the first aid attendant at about 3 p.m. at which time I was given a couple of aspirins.

This is in relation to the second injury.

I insisted that I wanted the incident formally reported and recorded by first aid, and I was then referred to my supervisor. I then went to see my supervisor in his office and reported the incident and it was at that time and place that the labour boss, Mr. Bertoli, heard me make my report. My supervisor asked me if I had an accident such as bumping my nose and my reply to that was no, I didn't have an accident such as bumping my nose.

At that time I stressed that I was exposed to a heavy concentration of gas from the flue of No. 4 furnace. At that time my supervisor made out a very brief report which I was asked to sign and he then referred me back to the first air room.

At the time that I signed this report I was suffering nearly intolerable headache and extreme light-headedness with giddiness. I returned with this report to the first aid and at this time the first aid attendants were changing shifts and the name of the attendant who was succeeding the day attendant was Mr. Gautier.

Mr. Gautier suggested that I could go home and if the pain necessitated a visit to a doctor, I was to contact him and he would forward the necessary papers to a doctor. I insisted that the pain was so severe that I wanted to see a doctor immediately. He then filled out some forms and gave them to me to take to the doctor. After leaving the first aid room, I then went into the dry to shower and change clothes and I saw Mr. Bertoli, the labour boss, and he made some remarks about how bad my colour looked and suggested I had better go and see a doctor. I replied telling him that I was on my way.

In addition to the above I wish to make a few statements. There was an interval, Mr. Speaker, of some time between this and the date of injury, this being June 11. From the time this incident occurred to June 11th, Natale Domenico lost 15 pounds. One of the doctors involved wrote a rather interesting little note on July 5 as Mr. Domenico was getting ready to go back to work.

I had seen the above mentioned patient at my office recently and suggested that he resume his regular duties providing he be allowed to work in an environment free from excessive gases. I trust you will cooperate in placing this patient in such an environment.

Well that is one example.

Now this other man, Mr. Vic Akkenan, was not quite as fortunate, Mr. Speaker. He too suffered greatly. He is a fitter's helper and on the date of his injury he ate lunch at about 6 p.m. and he had the job of changing, starting about 8.30 p.m., from No. 2 scrubber line to No. 1, and both scrubber fans were in operation so there would be pressure on both lines. The temperature of the gas was 120 degrees and Mr. Akkanen, after 15 or 20 minutes exposure to the gas, began to get sick. And Mr. Akkenan was rather unfortunate, as I say, in that I believe after he got poisoned by this gas he needed blood transfusions for something like 11 days.

But the Minister of Health and the Minister of Mines say gas conditions are not bad enough yet.

Then there is the question I raised with the Minister just the day before yesterday regarding Gary Slessor.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, may I ask that you have the hon. member correct that statement. The Minister of Health has never made any such statement that the gas conditions are not bad enough.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, be that as it may, if they are not bad—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, this is on my point of order. I am not saying anything about them, I am simply stating that the hon. member has put in the public record that the Minister of Health and the Minister of Mines have said the gas conditions are not that bad. I have never made such a statement.

Mr. Speaker: I think the record will probably stand corrected in view of the Minister's statement, and the hon. member will not continue such remarks in connection with allegations made by the hon. Minister.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, if there is such vital concern on the terminology of the word I will withdraw it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, if the gas is bad then I suggest that this Minister years ago should have ordered something done to rectify the situation. Now he gets up and he tries to justify a little wording when the conditions which have existed for years have been ignored. He gets very touchy on wording.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, once again on a point of order; I think the hon. member has heard many times from my own voice, as well as from that of my colleague the Minister of Mines, that The Department of Health is not responsible for the health of miners, that this is a direct responsibility of The Department of Mines. We are the medical consultants to The Department of Mines.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, we can pass the buck, we can do anything we want; the point is the situation has not been rectified under 25 years of Tory government.
